[that] grows out of the barrel of a gun'",[2859] without the nourishment from which WE THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty will soon waste away. (In point of fact, all of the Justices concurred on this point—the five in the majority, because they jury rigged the specious "individual right"; the four in the minority, because they denied that any true "right * * * to keep and bear Arms", exempt from extensive "regulation" by public officials, exists at all.)

Yet, notwithstanding that the primary purpose of "the right of the people to * * * bear Arms" is to secure their right to serve in "well regulated Militia", the Second Amendment also protects the "bear[ing of] Arms" even when an individual eligible for the Militia is not fulfilling some Militia duty in the field. Obviously, "bear[ing] Arms" from a place of purchase to an individual's home must be deemed to be part and parcel of his Militia duty to "keep * * * Arms". Otherwise, how could anyone eligible for the Militia ever assume possession of a firearm he is to "keep" in the location where he is to "keep" it? But that firearm need not thereafter always be "ke[pt]" sequestered at home until its owner is called forth for actual Militia duty. No pre-constitutional Militia statute ever required everyone to lock their "Arms" away unless on active duty, or ever penalized anyone for "bear[ing]" his "Arms" outside of his home for lawful purposes other than Militia service. This, because essentially all imaginable lawful purposes for which firearms may be carried abroad—such as repair and improvement, target-practice, and hunting and other "shooting sports"—are related to each individual's responsibility to be prepared to serve effectively in "[a] well regulated Militia". A firearm which is mechanically unsound, and an individual who is personally unskilled in its use, after all, are equally unserviceable for the Militia.

Because of the misplaced emphasis put upon it in Heller, personal self-defense needs to be treated as a special case. If one has a right to possess some object that can be used for self-defense in a particular place and at a particular time, he has a right to use it for that purpose then and there, because the right of self-defense is absolute.[2860] Certainly no pre-constitutional Militia statute ever denied any individual the right to employ in defense of himself (or anyone else) "Arms" that he possessed for Militia purposes. Now, an act of self-defense never amounts simply "to keep[ing] * * * Arms". Rather, even within one's own home, it is always a form of "bear[ing] Arms" for the fundamental Militia purpose of enforcement of the law against an aggressor. So, too, for an act of self-defense outside of the home. For example, when an individual is transporting a firearm for some legitimate reason (such as those suggested above), and therefore has a right to possess that firearm under those circumstances, he can use it for personal self-defense with perfect propriety. Certainly no pre-constitutional Militia statute ever denied that, either. So why may an individual not "bear Arms" outside of his home for the very purpose of personal self-defense? Certainly no pre-constitutional Militia statute ever prohibited such conduct. To be sure, under pre-constitutional English law "[T]HE offence of * * * going armed, with dangerous or unusual weapons, [wa]s a crime against the public peace, by terrifying the good people of the land".[2861] But, in a society in which everyone has a constitutional duty to be armed, an individual who merely "bear[s]" a firearm outside of his home for purposes of self-defense—especially if he carries it concealed from common observation—should not "terrify" anyone not already needful of psychiatric care.[2862]

---

[2859] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[2860] See W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 3, at 4.

Finally, one restriction on "the right of the people to * * * bear Arms" inheres within that "right": namely, the duty to "bear Arms [sufficient for Militia service]". If essentially any firearm can in principle, and especially during revitalization of the Militia should in practice, suffice for Militia service even though it may not be the best firearm among all types, or even if better firearms in its particular class are known to exist, it nevertheless must be a firearm that actually works and is actually usable for the particular Militia duty to which its possessor is assigned. So firearms Militiamen themselves supply when called forth for service will need to be approved by their officers in that context. Because their ultimate duty will be to ensure that the Militiamen in their Companies are armed with something in proper working order, though, during revitalization Militia Captains will be neither arbitrary nor punctilious in grading their men's firearms for fitness, but will likely approve whatever is available, if it is mechanically capable of functioning, because the wholly unacceptable alternative may be that some of their men will field no firearms at all.

h. "[S]hall not be infringed". The ultimate goal of the Second Amendment—indeed, of the whole Constitution and especially the Declaration of Independence—is "a free State" at every political level throughout America. To provide "security" for such a "State", "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary". For "[a] well regulated Militia" to exist, "the people" themselves must exercise "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms". And in order for "the people" themselves to exercise that "right" freely and fully, the parties who might "infringe[ ]" it must be effectively prohibited by law from doing so. The Amendment does not define what constitutes an "infringe[ment]" of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", and does not identify by whom that "right * * * shall not be infringed". Those matters are easily specified, however.

(1) A "right" is generally defined as "[a] legal relation between two persons" that entails "[a]n enforceable claim [by one] to performance (action or forbearance) by another".[2863] Thus, to "infringe" a right means to deny, to some injurious degree, such "[a]n enforceable claim". That denial may arise directly through the infringer's refusal to perform some "action or forbearance", which prevents the holder of the right from exercising it. Such behavior in effect denies the existence of the right itself. Or the infringement may arise indirectly through a third party's disallowance of a legal remedy for the infringer's wrongful conduct. For "'every right, when withheld, must have a remedy'"[2864] —because "[a] right without a remedy is as if it were not. For every beneficial purpose it may be said not to exist."[2865] Such behavior in effect denies the efficacy of the right by preventing its enforcement.

[2861] Id., Volume 4, at 148.

[2862] See ante, at 1093-1103.

Infringements of constitutional rights usually are effected by rogue public officials acting under color of law, through their promulgation of abusive "regulations". Any purported "regulation" of a right that is not inherent in that right (by way of its definition) or necessary and proper for its exercise (by way of material or legal assistance) infringes it. The definition of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" (delineated above) sets the limits to allowable regulation. First, any reasonable regulation that requires "the people to keep and bear Arms" suitable for Militia service—including all regulations specifically with respect to "Arms" that are necessary and proper for organizing, arming, disciplining, training, and governing "[a] well regulated Militia"—is permissible, because that "right" is also a duty which must be performed if "the Militia of the several States" are to be "well regulated" through WE THE PEOPLE'S participation in them. Second, any regulation, even though not necessarily connected in a direct manner to "[a] well regulated Militia", that actually assists or encourages "the people to keep and bear Arms" is permissible.

(2) "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed" imposes a duty not to interfere, and establishes a disability (or absence of power) to interfere, on all others with respect to exercise of that "right" by each and every individual among "the people". Others may, however, employ whatever rights, powers, and privileges they have in order to assist "the people" in that exercise. So, using the taxonomy of the Tenth Amendment (which focuses on powers)—

(a) The original Constitution delegated no power to the United States to "infringe[ ]" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—and if it had purported to delegate any such power, the Second Amendment subsequently nullified that delegation. So the sole power (and duty) of the General Government in the premises is to ensure that "the Militia of the several States" be "well

---

[2863] A. Corbin, "Legal Analysis and Terminology", ante note 23, at 167.

[2864] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 163 (1803), quoting W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 3, at 109.

[2865] United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 535, 554 (1867). Accord, Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 303 (1885).

regulated" with respect to "Arms", by "provid[ing] for * * * arming" them,[2866] according to the Amendment's principle that "the people" themselves must always "keep and bear Arms" for that purpose.

(b) The original Constitution implicitly prohibited the States as well from exercising any power to "infringe[ ]" "the right of the[ir] people to keep and bear Arms". During the pre-constitutional era, the Colonies and then the independent States never exercised any such abusive power. Even "the exception that proved the rule", Colonial Pennsylvania—which refused over many years to enact proper legislation to settle "[a] well regulated Militia"—never claimed an affirmative power to "infringe[ ]" "the right of [her] people to keep and bear Arms" by prohibiting them from doing so on their own as private parties. And, of course, as an independent State, Pennsylvania finally did establish her own Militia, "well regulated" according to the principles long adopted elsewhere throughout America.[2867] By statute, "the people" in the other Colonies and then the independent States were always organized in Militia and thoroughly armed, usually with firearms they obtained for themselves in the free market. And the Articles of Confederation required the States to "always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred".[2868] The complete absence of any evidence that the Colonies and then the independent States ever even attempted to exercise a contrary power to "infringe[ ]" "the right of the[ir] people to keep and bear Arms" provides strong evidence that no one ever imagined such a power to exist.[2869] That being so, the original Constitution could not have implicitly reserved such a nonexistent power to the States. Moreover, even if the Colonies and the independent States had always enjoyed a power to disarm "the people", but simply had never found any occasion to employ it during the pre-constitutional period, they always did exercise the contrary power in order to settle and regulate their Militia, according to the principle of near-universal armament of "the people". So, when the original Constitution incorporated "the Militia of the several States" as permanent components of its federal system—according to the legal principles of their regulation consistently applied throughout the pre-constitutional era—it necessarily precluded the States from employing a supposed power to disarm "the people" which would alter the federal system. That is, by incorporating "the Militia of the several States" into the federal system, the original Constitution turned the power which the Colonies and independent States had always exercised to arm "the people" into a duty (as well as a power), and

---

[2866] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[2867] See ante, at 87-88 and 845-848.

[2868] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[2869] See, e.g., Federal Power Commission v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, 337 U.S. 498, 513 & note 20 (1949); Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 905, 907-910 (1997).

transformed the power which the Colonies and independent States arguably might have exercised (but never did) to disarm "the people" into a disability (or confirmed it as such). The Second Amendment then amplified the States' duty and disability with its special emphasis on the necessity "to the security of a free State" of "well regulated Militia" founded and operated on "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

(c) Thus, where "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" begins, any and all powers of the General Government and of the States, not exercised in perfect conformity with that "right", either have no beginning or abruptly end. Putting this into the fashionable mumbo jumbo of contemporary "judicial review" that rationalizes the exercise of the General Government's powers—

> First, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is not subject to mere "reasonable regulation". Under what the courts denote as their "rational-basis test", "the existence of facts supporting the legislative judgment is to be presumed, for regulatory legislation affecting ordinary commercial transactions is not to be pronounced unconstitutional unless in light of the facts made known or generally assumed it is of such a character as to preclude the assumption that it rests upon some rational basis within the knowledge and experience of the legislators"; "inquiries, where the legislative judgment is drawn in question, must be restricted to the issue whether any state of facts known or which could reasonably be assumed affords support for it"; and if "the question is at least debatable * * * th[e] decision [i]s for [the legislature]".[2870] Now, most modern "gun-control" legislation has been (and hereafter doubtlessly will be) enacted under color of Congress's power "[t]o regulate Commerce" (or the cognate powers of the States).[2871] As the old saying goes, although this is true it is not right. For the average American's acquisition, possession, and use of firearms, ammunition, and related accoutrements are not just "ordinary commercial transactions". Rather, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" connects that equipment inextricably with their participation in "well regulated Militia" that are "necessary to the security of a free State", upon which depends the continuance of an economy characterized by "ordinary commercial transactions". Therefore, the only constitutionally reasonable "regulat[ions of] Commerce" with respect to firearms are those which promote, produce, protect, and preserve "well regulated Militia" within each State and throughout America. "[T]he facts" as to what this entails can be "made known or generally assumed" from studying the pre-constitutional Militia Acts. The preëminent of these facts is that "well regulated Militia" > are always based upon "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". Being ascertainable to the highest degree of historical certainty, these "facts" are not "debatable". So, by these standards, modern "gun control" lacks any "rational basis within the knowledge and experience of * * * legislators".

[2870] United States v. Carolene Products Company, 304 U.S. 144, 152-154 (1938) (footnote omitted).

[2871] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

>
> Second, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is not subject to limitation in purported aid of so-called "compelling governmental interests", even by the means arguably "least restrictive" of that "right". For "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State", which is the most "compelling governmental interest" possible. And any "restricti[on]" on "a free State" is too much, because it renders the State to that degree "[un]free".

In sum, the injunction "shall not be infringed" means, at the minimum, that no individual who may be eligible for the Militia—which includes almost all adult Americans, both men and women—may lawfully be denied, deprived, or delayed in the exercise of "the right" to acquire and possess any firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements that could conceivably be employed in some profitable manner in some form of Militia service, somewhere, at some time. Or, no conditions could possibly exist under which any significant segment of "the people", not enlisted within the regular Armed Forces, must not take up "Arms" in the first instance, or must lay down such "Arms" as they already possess, simply because some public official commands them to do so. No public official can claim any such power. And no one among "the people" labors under a duty to obey any such unconstitutional command.[2872]

To be sure, contemporary legislators may provide narrow exemptions from some individuals' constitutional duty "to keep * * * Arms", if those exemptions provably enhance the efficiency and good order of the Militia and otherwise promote "the common defence" and "the general Welfare".[2873] Such exemptions are not inconsistent with the constitutional duty to possess "Arms", because they derive from the very pre-constitutional principles which originally defined that duty. Moreover, they have no effect whatsoever on the constitutional "right * * * to keep and bear Arms". For exemptions from a duty are not exclusions from, let alone prohibitions of, the enjoyment of a right. Except in the case of some mentally disabled individuals, it is impossible to imagine an exemption from Militia duty which if waived would detract from "the common defence" or "the general Welfare", and therefore which should not be allowed to be waived by a beneficiary who voluntarily chooses to bear the extra burden as his special personal contribution to "the security of a free State". After all, at the most, a waiver would simply provide the community with another fully armed member of the Militia. Moreover, an individual exempted from the constitutional duty "to keep * * * Arms" for purposes of immediate Militia service can always invoke the constitutional right to acquire and possess "Arms" simply for possible service. The mere status of that individual as exempted from the Militia can never be a basis for his disarmament, because an exemption does not extinguish his legal obligation to serve if called—and therefore he always remains a potentially active member of the Militia: If his exemption arose from some severe personal disability, he could possibly be cured. If his exemption were founded upon his superannuation, if still healthy he could volunteer for further service in the Militia. And if his exemption rested on some other ground, it could be disallowed by legislative action, because no exemption from Militia service is of constitutional stature other than the physical impossibility of a Militiaman's performance of any duty whatsoever.

---

[2872] See, e.g., Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886); Huntington v. Worthen, 120 U.S. 97, 101-102 (1887); Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 376-377 (1880).

[2873] See U.S. Const. preamble.

In addition, nothing in the Second Amendment precludes public officials from affirmatively assisting individuals to acquire and maintain possession of "Arms" for the purposes of their Militia service. That should be obvious enough from just the inclusion in the original Constitution of the power and duty of Congress "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia",[2874] coupled with the implicit constitutional definition of "the Militia of the several States". As a "further declaratory and restrictive clause[ ]" appended to the original Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers",[2875] the Second Amendment emphasizes that exercise of the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" must always result in protection and furtherance of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", and therefore must secure permanent personal possession of those "Arms" by "the people" themselves. So, to the extent that Congress (or, for that matter, any State) "provide[s] for * * * arming * * * the Militia" by causing public "Arms" to be distributed to Militiamen, it must allow—indeed, require—the recipients to maintain personal possession of those "Arms" for as long as they remain eligible for Militia service.

On the other hand, the Second Amendment cannot possibly prohibit Militia officers from conducting inspections along the lines of those performed in pre-constitutional times, in order to determine whether or not individuals enrolled in revitalized "well regulated Militia" actually possess the firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements their enlistments require. For in "[a] well regulated Militia" compliance with the requirement that everyone other than individuals excused on the basis of conscientious objection or perhaps some other exemption must maintain personal possession of suitable arms in his own home at all times must always be subject to verification at any time.[2876] Thus, because in "[a] well regulated Militia" each member has a constitutional duty to be properly armed and accoutred; and because in "[a] well regulated Militia" each member has a further constitutional duty to prove the state of his preparedness, such as by submitting to inspections at his home for that purpose; therefore no member of "[a] well regulated Militia" can assert a constitutional right under the Second Amendment to object to such inspections. To be sure, the Fourth Amendment now prohibits "searches" not justified by "Warrants * * * issue[d] * * * upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation". But regular, and even unannounced "spot", inspections at private homes conducted today exclusively for the purposes served by the inspections carried out during the pre-constitutional era would not run afoul of that stricture. After all, because the Fourth Amendment was ratified along with the Second Amendment as two parts of the very same Bill of Rights, each must be construed consistently with the other.[2877] Inspections at private homes to determine if individuals possessed the requisite firearms and ammunition in proper working order were part of what being "well regulated" meant with respect to the Militia in those days—and what that term continues to mean in the Second Amendment today, there having been no change in the Constitution on that score in the interim. So, "[a] well regulated Militia" being one the members of which are subject to inspections of their firearms and ammunition, the Fourth Amendment can impose no obstacle to continuation of that practice. Besides, inasmuch as the particular purpose of the Fourth Amendment is to guarantee "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects", it could hardly operate to impede a process that ensures the effectiveness of the Militia, which the Second Amendment declares are "necessary to the security of a free State" in all particulars. And of course, the concern of the Fourth Amendment is with searches for the purpose of discovering "persons or things to be seized". Whereas, an inspection conducted with the approbation of the Second Amendment would be for the purpose of assuring that the individuals to be inspected always maintained personal possession of firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements suitable for their Militia service—that they were, in fact, "keep[ing] * * * Arms" so that they could "bear Arms" immediately when called upon to do so—not for depriving them of such possession or preventing them from performing that duty.[2878] This conclusion, however, is apt only insofar as rogue public officials possess no power to disarm WE THE PEOPLE by inventing purported "crimes" for the prevention, investigation, or punishment of which they would claim a further power to search for and seize [2876] See ante, Chapter 8 (Rhode Island); and at 472-480, 648-649, and 652-657 (Virginia).

---

[2874] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied).

[2875] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

---

[2877] E.g., Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corporation, 377 U.S. 324, 332 (1964).

[2878] Emphases supplied in quotations of the Amendments.

firearms and ammunition as the supposed instrumentalities, fruits, or other evidence of such "crimes".

Finally, the Second Amendment does permit public officials to deny certain individuals in certain situations a right to possess firearms. For example, stolen firearms may be taken from persons not lawfully in possession of them, notwithstanding the possessors' ignorance of their provenance and no matter to what arguably legitimate purposes in the Militia they are being put. Individuals under arrest on suspicion or incarcerated as the result of conviction of a crime may be prohibited from possessing firearms while in custody. Perpetrators convicted of true "[F]ELON[IES]" in the constitutional sense may forfeit any firearms (together with all other personal property) they owned at the time of their convictions for those crimes—although upon their reincorporations into society they should not be prohibited from acquiring possession of new firearms. "[P]art[ies]" sentenced to "slavery * * * as a punishment for crime whereof the[y] * * * shall have been duly convicted" may be prohibited from possessing firearms at all times during which that sentence is in effect.[2879] And individuals who visit inmates or patients, or meet with officials, in a prison, mental institution, or like facility may be required to "check" their firearms with the establishment's security personnel during the time they are within a secured area, so as to minimize the possibility that any of those firearms, by any twist of Fate, could come into any inmate's or patient's possession.

(d) So much for an "infringe[ment]" of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" by dint of ordinary legislation. What about extraordinary legislation? An Amendment of the Constitution is an extraordinary legislative act of the individual States, through "Legislatures" or "Conventions", perforce of which the States constituting a super-majority bind the rest.[2880] Could not an Amendment of the Constitution simply repeal the Second Amendment (and perhaps, to be fully effective, the three Militia Clauses in the original Constitution, as well)? In a word—No.

If repeal of the Second Amendment were taken to negate "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" entirely, then the very possibility of "well regulated Militia" would cease to exist. What is "necessary to the security of a free State" would no longer be available. With her security hopelessly compromised, each and every erstwhile "free State" in the Union would soon fall into the clutches of a tyranny centrally administered in her own capital, or more likely from the District of Columbia. Common sense counsels, then, that, under a Constitution explicitly dedicated to "secur[ing] the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity",[2881] even a super-majority of the States could not have such a power to destroy "a free State" in the dissenting States.

[2879] See U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1. See ante, at 748-749, 993-998, and 1011-1013.

[2880] U.S. Const. art. V.

[2881] U.S. Const. preamble.

True enough, in the original Constitution the only explicit limitation on Amendments is that "no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate".[2882] The original Constitution, however, is not America's foundational law. The Declaration of Independence is. The Declaration attests that the political independence—the sovereignty—of the American people arises out of "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". Under those "Laws", no "free State" can claim a power to commit political suicide, or to agree with other States to acquiesce in assisted political suicide by majority vote. A power to destroy itself and its citizens, or to allow others to do so, cannot be found among the "just powers" that any government could "deriv[e] * * * from the consent of the governed", because "Governments are instituted among Men" to "secure [unalienable Rights]", not to allow them to be violated, let alone affirmatively to participate in their violation. If such a "Government" purported to exercise such an "*un*just power[ ]", it would be the people's duty, as well as their right, under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", immediately "to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security". So, inasmuch as ratification of such an Amendment, by purporting to eliminate all "free States" within America, would constitute the capstone of "a design to reduce the[People of every dissenting State] under absolute Despotism", which would justify their "abolishing" the entire present constitutional "Form of Government" by whatever means were available, no authority even to propose such an Amendment can lurk within the Constitution.

Presumably, the proponents of such an hypothetical Amendment would contend in its defense that "[a] well regulated Militia" is no longer "necessary to the security of a free State" anywhere within America, and that therefore the elimination of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" would pose no threat to "the Blessings of Liberty". But is America's actual historical experience consistent with such a claim? For how many decades upon decades have the several States deployed not a single "well regulated Militia" according to pre-constitutional principles? And, during that time, have they not steadily deteriorated as "free States" to the point at which they are now on the verge of being submerged within a National para-military police state? Perhaps if the presence of "well regulated Militia" within the several States had not prevented this outcome, their utility would be doubtful. But surely their absence supports the contrary conclusion.

(e) But if both the General Government and the States lack any semblance of original, delegated, or reserved power to "infringe[ ]" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", might such a power somehow be "reserved to the people" as a whole?[2883] Certainly it is not reserved within the interstices of the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights, because the Tenth Amendment cannot be construed to contradict the Second.[2884] Perhaps, though, it is reserved extra-constitutionally within WE THE PEOPLE'S ultimate sovereign power, perforce of which they might establish an entirely new constitution in which they disarmed themselves or empowered their government to disarm them.

---

[2882] U.S. Const. art. V.

Even THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty, though, is constrained by "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". If, after THE PEOPLE have suffered from "a long train of abuses and usurpations", "it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off [a bad] Government", it cannot be "their right" let alone "their duty" to establish a new government that is both equally bad if not worse and beyond their power "to alter or to abolish" thereafter. Obedient to "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", they must always retain the capability to exercise "their right" and fulfill "their duty" "to throw off [any] Government" that becomes despotic. So, whatever "Form of Government" they set up, it must provide that "the Sword and Soveraignty always march hand in hand"[2885]—in their own hands. Therefore, THE PEOPLE must always reserve to themselves "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms".

It matters not that some temporary majority among THE PEOPLE might, for whatever reason, be willing to surrender the right and to traduce the duty "to throw off [a despotic] Government". That right and especially that duty are the most important incidents of THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty. And if THE PEOPLE might waive their right, surely they cannot evade their duty. So no part of THE PEOPLE can appoint others in the guise of "government" to absolve THE PEOPLE as a whole of, or to prevent them from performing, that duty. Particularly when, as a consequence, most of THE PEOPLE will then find themselves slaves, bound by chains of tyranny they cannot break. Any part of THE PEOPLE that attempted, by disarming THE PEOPLE as a whole, to render them incapable of performing their sovereign duty "to alter or to abolish" an abusive "Form of Government" would constitute a faction—that is, "a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community". No mere faction can establish or administer a legitimate government. For factionalism is a "dangerous vice"—and the purpose of every true government is "to break and control the violence of faction".[2886] So, [2883] Involving "the people" as a whole, this case differs from the one just discussed, in which a super-majority of the States purports to ratify a new constitutional Amendment that repeals the Second Amendment, in the face of opposition from a minority of the States.

---

[2884] See, e.g., Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[2885] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7.

[2886] The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison).

confronted by a part of THE PEOPLE composed of individuals "united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community", the remainder of THE PEOPLE may, and should, take the exercise of sovereignty upon themselves, in the name and interest of the entire community. At that point, the loyal remainder of THE PEOPLE must speak and act for THE PEOPLE as a whole.

(3) Because "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is part of a supra-constitutional complex of legal relations that forms the foundation for all of WE THE PEOPLE'S, the States', and the Union's rights, powers, privileges, immunities, duties, and disabilities, the Second Amendment's command that "the right * * * shall not be infringed" allows for no exceptions whatsoever. Logically, the duty not to "infringe[ ]" upon the "the security of a free State"—for "the right of the people" ultimately guarantees no less than that—should extend as broadly and comprehensively as possible. And, linguistically, the Amendment wisely sets no limits to it: Anyone and everyone who might interfere with the exercise of "the right of the people" is covered.

(a) Rogue public officials—whether in legislative, executive, judicial, or administrative positions—are the most obvious, and deserving, targets. The Second Amendment guarantees the near-universal possession by common Americans of firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements useful for possible service in "well regulated Militia". So any scheme through which any officials purport to deny Americans the liberty to acquire and possess that equipment "infringe[s]" "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms". The actual enactment, promulgation, and enforcement of an abusive statute, regulation, executive order, judicial decision, or other edict is not required, however. A threat of enforcement, or a claim of authority to impose such a restriction, is enough. For such threats and claims will deter—or "chill", in the contemporary judicial argot—far more individuals than will ever have some supposed law actually enforced against them. Even mere judicial dicta, such as that "weapons that are most useful in military service—M-16 rifles and the like—may be banned",[2887] amount to unconstitutional "infringe[ments]", because they discourage "the people", confuse honest officials, and embolden rogues.

Of course, various degrees of "infringe[ment]" are possible. For example, if Congress failed, neglected, or refused "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia",[2888] nevertheless the States might interpose to "arm[ ]" "the people", and "the people" might be able to "arm[ ]" themselves. This would constitute the lowest level of "infringe[ment]"—and might actually amount to an arguably constitutional policy, if Congress honestly determined that it ought to leave the matter to the [2887] District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 627 (2008) (Scalia, J., for the Court).

---

[2888] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

States and "the people", because that promised to be the most efficient way to "arm[ ] * * * the Militia". If rogue Members of Congress attempted to impose National "gun control" on individuals, "the people" who chose to acquiesce in the purported "law" could not "arm[ ]" themselves; but the States might still be able to "arm[ ]" them. This would constitute a serious "infringe[ment]", because it directly attacked "the right of the people". And it might ignite a crisis in which the States challenged the General Government. As James Madison predicted, > ambitious encroachments of the [General G]overnment on the authority of the State governments would not excite the opposition of a single State, or of a few States only. They would be signals of general alarm. Every government would espouse the common cause. A correspondence would be opened. Plans of resistance would be concerted. One spirit would animate and conduct the whole. * * * [A]nd unless the projected innovations should be voluntarily renounced, * * * a trial of force would be made * * * .[2889]

If rogue Members of Congress and State legislators together imposed comprehensive "gun control" on their constituents, "the people" who chose to acquiesce would be utterly disarmed, and those who resisted would doubtlessly be detracted and physically attacked as "lawbreakers". This state of affairs could constitute a veritably fatal "infringe[ment]", because it probably would qualify as the culmination of "a long train of abuses and usurpations" that would justify "the people" in "throw[ing] off such Government" entirely.

Public officials may not "infringe[ ]" "the right of the people" indirectly, either. For example, if Members of Congress simply shirk their responsibilities by failing, neglecting, or refusing to enact legislation that is "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" their power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia",[2890] under circumstances in which neither the States nor "the people" can provide enough "Arms" to equip "well regulated Militia", they violate the Second Amendment (as well as the Militia Clauses of the original Constitution). For legislators who knowingly evade their duties are as culpable as those who intentionally exceed their powers.[2891]

(b) Inasmuch as the Constitution guarantees that "the right of the people * * * shall not be infringed" by public officials in aid of some supposed public interest, it certainly secures that "right" from being "infringed" by officials in the interest of private parties, even when the latter may have an arguably legitimate

---

[2889] The Federalist No. 46.

[2890] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 18 and 16.

[2891] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

claim. For example, seizure and sale of individuals' "Arms" in order to satisfy judgments for monetary damages entered against them in civil cases should not be allowable today, any more than they were during the *pre-*constitutional period.[2892] Even where commonplace consumer goods are concerned, as a matter of "due process of law" an individual may not be dispossessed of "property" until a rival claimant's superior entitlement to possession of that "property" has been judicially established.[2893] So, except when a plaintiff proves his prior right to the very firearm, ammunition, and accoutrements in a defendant's possession, no judicial remedy in civil cases should ever strip an individual of the equipment he holds for the purpose of possibly performing Militia duties.

(c) Finally, contemporary America is plagued with private factions and subversive special-interest groups plumping for "gun control". Whatever possibly benign if benighted motives lie behind these efforts, their inevitable effect must be to leave common Americans disarmed and helpless in the face of a National *para-*miliary police state the elaboration of which many of these very same groups are even now promoting. As a matter of fact, though, most of these "gun controllers" consciously aim at nothing less than "infring[ing]", to extinction if possible, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". Their activities are intended to constitute "infringe[ment]" of that "right" as a matter of politics and morals. So do they not constitute "infringe[ment]" as a matter of law, as well?

The answer must be "Yes". For the Second Amendment premonishes this country that loss of the "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" will lead to the demise of "a free State"—which will fasten on every American outside of a narrow ruling clique a form of bondage far more onerous than even chattel slaves endured in antebellum times. One need be no apologist for the Peculiar Institution in America to observe that its rigors paled in comparison to the horrors perpetrated in the concentration camps, labor camps, and death camps set up by the Twentieth Century's psychopathic dictators—none of whose victims enjoyed a right to possess "Arms" for their own defense. Aspirant tyrants in the Twenty-first Century pose dangers no less severe. Nothing that could pave their way to power, let alone entrench them in it so that they can drench the land with innocent blood, should be tolerated. So attempts by private parties to subvert "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" ought to be suppressed in every way consistent with the Constitution, to the same degree that attempts by rogue public officials are.

i. "[P]eople" and "Arms" unrelated to actual Militia service. Proponents of "the individual right" "to keep and bear Arms" often express the concerns that, if "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" primarily relates to "well regulated Militia", then "th[os]e people" not actually enrolled in the Militia (or even those not on active duty) will be unable to claim "the right" at all, and no one will be able to assert "the right" with respect to "Arms" that are unsuitable for Militia service. Such anxiety is baseless, however.

---

[2892] See ante, at 295-296 (Rhode Island); 460-463 and 715-717 (Virginia).

[2893] E.g., Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67 (1972).

(1) An extraordinarily inventive imagination would be requisite to envision any "Arms" or uses of "Arms" that are wholly unrelated to Militia service. If any such could be posited, they would be so few and insignificant that no "gun controller" would ever bother to attempt to prohibit them—so that, as a practical political matter, they would be irrelevant to "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms".

(2) The possession and use of "Arms" by vanishingly few individuals would be unrelated to some possible Militia service on their part. As Thomas M. Cooley pointed out,

> [t]he meaning of the [Second Amendment] undoubtedly is, that the people, from whom the militia must be taken, shall have the right to keep and bear arms; and they need no permission or regulation of law for the purpose. But this enables government to have a well-regulated militia; for to bear arms implies something more than the mere keeping; it implies the learning to handle and use them in a way that makes those who keep them ready for their efficient use; in other words, it implies the right to meet for voluntary discipline in arms, observing in doing so the laws of public order.[2894]

"[T]he people, from whom the militia must be taken" are not those individuals actually enrolled, let alone on active duty, in the Militia. Rather, they are "the people" possibly eligible for service in the Militia. That is, everyone within the statutory limits of age (such as from sixteen to sixty years old), as well as everyone outside of the upper limit who might volunteer or be called forth in an "alarm"—which amounts to every able-bodied free adult in the community. All of these people "have the right to keep and bear arms" and "need no permission or regulation of law for the purpose".

So, who else is left who might be denied "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms"? Children ineligible for the Militia because of their tender years would typically be under the control of their parents or guardians, so that their own rights "to keep and bear Arms" would be a moot point. Of course, even children could be trained to arms by their parents or guardians—but, in that case, the rights at issue would be the adults' not the children's. Individuals of any age who suffered from utterly incapacitating physical handicaps could not "bear Arms" in any event, so a right in that particular would be a moot point, too. Some of these individuals could "keep * * * Arms" in the capacities of collectors, dealers, and speculators who might acquire and deal in "Arms" as a special form of personal or commercial property. Most of the "Arms" they "ke[pt]" in the course of those pursuits, though, would be protected by the Second Amendment because other individuals might find them usable for Militia purposes. Finally, individuals suffering from seriously debilitating mental diseases or defects, who would pose dangers to themselves as well as to others, would not be allowed "to keep and bear Arms" of any kind for any purpose. Such individuals would not be considered "free men", because they would be simply incapable of living as such, and therefore would usually be put under the care and control of others. Even the most radical proponent of "the individual right" "to keep and bear Arms" would not contend that any such right extends to them.

---

[2894] The General Principles of Constitutional Law, ante note 1410, at 271 (emphasis supplied).

History should assuage any lingering fears on this point: Throughout the *pre-*constitutional era, when common Americans' liability for service in the Militia began at (say) sixteen years of age and ended at (say) sixty, every able-bodied free man who lived past his sixtieth birthday had at one time been fifty, forty, thirty, and less years of age. During all of those years after his sixteenth birthday, unless he claimed the status of a conscientious objector or received some other exemption, he was required by statute personally to possess in his own home at least one firearm suitable for Militia use. Similarly, every able-bodied free man who at some time during the course of his life after his sixteenth year became so disabled that he was exempted from Militia service on that account had theretofore in the absence of some other exemption always been required to possess a firearm in compliance with the law. So when the average man reached his sixtieth birthday, or became physically disabled, he was still likely as a matter of fact, and was supposed as a matter of law, to possess one or more firearms. The author of this study has been unable to discover a single Militia statute (or any other statute, for that matter) in any Colony or independent State that disarmed any individual when he attained the age of sixty, or became so physically disabled at any age that he could at that point no longer perform any Militia function. (Perhaps even more revealingly, no such statute was cited by any party or amicus curiae in the Heller case, although hordes of lawyers friendly to "gun control" descended on the Court.) Neither was personal disarmament of the old or the disabled a social custom anywhere within *pre-*constitutional America. Instead, superannuated and physically infirm individuals retained their firearms, and when necessary brought them into the field (as many old men did at Lexington and Concord)[2895]—or at least they enjoyed the liberty to do so, which no one ever questioned, let alone attempted to deny under color of law. Similarly, no statute of that era prohibited free adult women from possessing firearms. The only classes of individuals who were generally disbarred from the possession of firearms, except under strict supervision, were: (i) slaves always, and Indians, free Negroes, and people of mixed race sometimes; and (ii) disloyal individuals.[2896] The unique route by which any loyal free adult White male could be dispossessed of a firearm in those days was "impressment", whereby his firearm would be taken for, and only for, the public use for which it was competent—namely, Militia or other military service—and even then only with just compensation to the expropriated party.[2897]

[2895] See ante, at 248.

3. An "absolute" right. The most extraordinary and important attribute of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is its absolute nature—that it is "[u]nconditional" and "complete and perfect in itself", an "absolute law" because it arises out of "[t]he true and proper law of nature, immutable * * * in principle".[2898] It is a right without exceptions and the exercise of which can be subject to no restraint.

a. The sources of WE THE PEOPLE'S authority are the permanent and unchangeable "Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" that the Declaration of Independence invokes, not the transient and mutable positive laws of any mere government or other political body. "[T]he Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" are absolute by definition. A "free State" is one in which, perforce of "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", the "Government[ ] * * * deriv[es its] * * * just powers from the consent of the governed"—that is, one in which "the governed" themselves determine in the first instance and thereafter enforce the form, the powers, and especially the disabilities of their government—because, in the final analysis, they are self-governors. The Declaration affirms that this authority and responsibility of "the People" allow for no exceptions: "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of [their unalienable Rights], it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government".[2899] To be sure, this ultimate "Right of the People" is conditional, in the sense that a certain set of circumstances should exist before "the People", under the counsel of "Prudence", exercise it—namely, "when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government". But once those circumstances do obtain, within the bounds of "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" vox populi suprema lex.[2900] "[T]he security of a free State" demands that "abuses and usurpations" by rogue public officials be suppressed before they can ripen into "absolute Despotism". "A well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the [2898] Black's Law Dictionary, ante note 368, at 23, 22.

---

[2896] See ante, at 300-302 (Rhode Island); 363-369, 468, and 733-742 (Virginia).

[2897] See ante, at 187-192 (Rhode Island) and 437-439 (Virginia).

[2899] Emphasis supplied.

[2900] "The voice of the people is the supreme law."

security of a free State". "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is the fundamental operative principle of any "well regulated Militia". Therefore, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" must be absolute.

b. Being absolute, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is "[c]omplete in itself", "[l]oosed from any limitation or condition; uncontrolled; unrestricted", free from "a dependence on any other" authority, and "[u]nlimited by extraneous power or control".[2901]

(1) "[T]he right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is "[c]omplete in itself" because it is of supra-constitutional provenance and legitimacy. For through its exercise "the people" themselves set up or pull down all constitutions and all governments. Thus, in principle "th[at] right" represents WE THE PEOPLE'S supreme power, and in practice effectuates it: "[T]he Sword and Soveraignty always march hand in hand".[2902]

(2) "[T]he right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is free from "a dependence on any other" authority and "[u]nlimited by extraneous power or control", because: inasmuch as "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'";[2903] and inasmuch as "well regulated Militia" throughout the several States can field overwhelming might against any combination of rogue public officials and private factions; and inasmuch as "the people" need look to or depend upon no one else in order to exercise "the[ir] right"—therefore "the people" always wield in their own hands a plenitude of force coupled with authority sufficient for the enforcement of all of their rights.

(3) Because "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is "[l]oosed from any limitation or condition; uncontrolled; unrestricted", the Second Amendment's command that "the right * * * shall not be infringed" plainly requires that "the right" "[i]s to be protected in whatsoever form it might be assailed"—for no one "can be justified in restricting such comprehensive words to a particular mischief, to which no allusion is made".[2904] "[W]here no exception is made in terms, none will be made by mere implication or construction".[2905] Thus, "the right * * * to keep and bear "Arms" is subject to no limitation not implicit in the concept of "[a] well regulated Militia". The prohibition against its "infringe[ment]" reaches anyone and everyone, both public and private actors, who might interfere with its

---

[2901] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 7, definitions 2 and 4; and N. Webster, An American Dictionary, ante note 15, definition 5.

[2902] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7 (emphasis supplied).

[2903] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[2904] See Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 122, 200, 205 (1819).

[2905] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U.S. (12 Peters) 657, 722 (1838). Accord, Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. (1 Wheaton) 304, 338-339 (1816).

exercise. And that prohibition encompasses and eviscerates every conceivable rationale that ignorant, incompetent, or rogue public officials might put forward in order to justify their attempts to "violate", "destroy", or "hinder" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".[2906] Indeed, none of the various extra-constitutional "tests" that judges have contrived in order to whitewash rogue officials' dilutions, adulterations, circumventions, and subversions of the Constitution—from the mere "rational-basis test" at the nadir of judicial laxity,[2907] to the "compelling-governmental-interest test" at the zenith of what contemporary lawyers stupidly praise as "strict scrutiny"[2908]—can even be applied to such attempts. And not just because these "tests" are patently invalid and bereft of intellectual merit by any scientific standard,[2909] are capable of rationalizing just about every conceivable form of anti-constitutional oppression,[2910] and have served over the years to drive this country farther and farther away from the principles that informed its founding.[2911] Rather, the Second Amendment instructs every American—public officials as well as private citizens—that such "tests" are simply out of place as a matter of law: No limitation of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" can rationally serve the public interest, because the most "rational" and "compelling" of all "governmental interests" is the maintenance of "a free State", which depends upon the enforcement of that "right" to the fullest possible degree.

(4) Most importantly, being coupled with a duty, "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" must not be "infringed" even by "the people" themselves, by acts of commission or omission. Rather, "the people" must exercise "the[ir] right * * * to keep and bear Arms" to the fullest extent possible at all times. And because that duty attaches directly to "the people", both it and its corresponding right ultimately depend for their fulfillment and enforcement upon neither any specific act of government nor even the existence of any particular "Form of Government".

(a) The Constitution—which can never contradict, but must always confirm and conform to the Declaration of Independence—explicitly recognizes that powers of sovereignty are reserved to "the people". The Tenth Amendment provides that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor [2906] See S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definitions 1 and 2 of the verb "infringe" in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

---

[2907] See, e.g., Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 729-732 (1963); Railway Employes' Department v. Hanson, 351 U.S. 225, 233-235 (1956); Williamson v. Lee Optical Company, 348 U.S. 483, 487-488 (1955).

[2908] See, e.g., United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376-377 (1968); United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 264-268 (1967); Aptheker v. Secretary of State, 378 U.S. 500, 512-514 (1964); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438-444 (1963).

[2909] See, e.g., E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 32-38; idem, Imperial Judiciary, ante note 188, at 308-314.

[2910] See, e.g., Scales v. United States, 367 U.S. 203, 262 (1961) (Black, J., dissenting).

[2911] See generally Edwin Vieira, Jr., "Rights and the United States Constitution: The Declension From Natural Law to Legal Positivism", 13 Georgia Law Review 1447 (1979).

prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people".[2912] Self-evidently, the "powers not delegated to the United States" and the powers "no[t] prohibited * * * to the States" or "reserved to the States" are sovereign powers, and can be nothing else. Therefore, the "powers * * * reserved * * * to the people" must be sovereign powers, too. For, as lawyers say, noscitur a sociis.[2913] These powers must include the greatest power of sovereignty, the power "to alter or to abolish" the very "Form of Government" then extant. The Declaration locates this power within "the Right of the People" alone. The Preamble to the Constitution attests that WE THE PEOPLE (and no one else) actually exercised this power to "ordain and establish th[e] Constitution". And the Constitution nowhere suggests that this power was then surrendered by THE PEOPLE and "delegated to the United States" or "reserved to the States". So, because "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is explicitly reserved to "the people" and "shall not be infringed" (perforce of the Second Amendment); and because, through their exercise of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" "the People" can render effective their sovereign power "to alter or to abolish" any and all "Form[s] of Government" (under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence); therefore that exercise must always be within their competence prior to any formal statutory settling or regulation of the Militia. Indeed, WE THE PEOPLE'S ability to put "the[ir] right * * * to keep and bear Arms" successfully into practice is the political precondition for any such statute—because, without the physical power to control their "Form of Government" already resting firmly in THE PEOPLE'S own hands, no guarantee can exist that a proper statute will ever be forthcoming.

(b) Similarly, what may befall a particular "Form of Government" is absolutely inconsequential to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". That "Form" may prove fallible, it may falter or fail—it may even descend into such corruption and criminality that it deserves to be destroyed—nonetheless, "the people" will always retain "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", because they labor under the permanent duty to do so, a duty assigned to them, not by any "Form of Government", not even by the Declaration of Independence, but by the very "Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" that recognize "[s]elf-defence * * * as the primary law of nature" which cannot be "taken away by the law of society".[2914] As moral and political actors, WE THE PEOPLE are responsible not to any evanescent "Form of Government", but instead to one another for "the security of a free State" in which all of them can enjoy the "unalienable Rights" with which "they are [equally] endowed by their Creator". WE THE PEOPLE constitute the substance of [2913] "It is known from [its] associates." Specifically, in the construction of a law the meaning or character of one word may be deduced from the meaning or character of words associated with it.

---

[2912] Emphasis supplied.

[2914] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 3, at 4.

society, any "Form of Government" merely the shadow which only imperfectly "represents", and often mistakes, their interests and will. Indeed, sometimes THE PEOPLE must preserve "the security of [their] free State" through their own efforts against homicidal opposition from a degenerate "Form of Government". Thus ridiculous is the notion that, if rogue Members of Congress and the States' legislators should utterly fail, neglect, or refuse "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia"[2915]—or should turn deaf ears to THE PEOPLE'S repeated "petition[s] * * * for a redress of grievances" on that score[2916]—or even should enact comprehensive "gun controls" that purported to disarm "the people" entirely and thereby render "well regulated Militia" impossible under color of that "Form of Government", then no effective "right of the people to keep and bear Arms" would any longer exist. If Congress and the States' legislatures took such aberrant steps, it would signal, not the end of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", but instead the occasion for "the people" to stand upon that "right" to the bitter end. After all, History confirms that the final and most effective remedy for rogue public officials' attempts to eliminate "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is always WE THE PEOPLE'S unstinting application of precisely "th[at] right" against those officials. That "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" provides its own remedy is the ultimate proof of its absolute nature.

c. Although "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" has always been absolute for "the people", the composition of "the people" has not always been so fixed and inclusive that it could fairly be deemed "absolute". During *pre-*constitutional times and until 1865 (with ratification of the Thirteenth Amendment), 1868 (with ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment), and 1870 (with ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment), slaves almost always and even free persons of color all too frequently were denied a "right * * * to keep and bear Arms". This was considered no "infringe[ment]" upon any "right of the people", however, because of the perverse theory that "neither the class of persons who had been imported as slaves, nor their descendants, whether they had become free or not, were * * * acknowledged as a part of the people"; and even free Negroes and other people of color were "considered as a subordinate and inferior class of beings, who had been subjugated by the dominant race, and, whether emancipated or not, yet remained subject to their authority, and had no rights or privileges but such as those who held the power and the Government might choose to grant them".[2917] When the first section of the Thirteenth Amendment declared that "[n]either slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any

---

[2915] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[2916] U.S. Const. amend. I.

[2917] Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393, 407, 404-405 (1857) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

place subject to their jurisdiction", and the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment declared that "[a]ll persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside", and the first section of the Fifteenth Amendment declared that "[t]he right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"—then people of color not "duly convicted" of "crime[s]" for which "slavery" was a just punishment became undeniably part of "the people", and in every sense fully entitled to all of the privileges and immunities of citizens, which included not only "the full liberty of speech" and the right "to hold public meetings upon political affairs" (guaranteed by the First Amendment), but also the right "to keep and carry arms wherever they went" (secured by the Second).[2918]

As the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment also makes clear, because "[n]o State shall make * * * any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States", no rogue legislators in any State may jury rig a purported "exception" from the "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" based upon race. And because (perforce of that same section) "[n]o State shall * * * enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States", if rogue Members of Congress were to enact a supposed "law" to that effect, no State could constitutionally impose it on individuals within her territory by any act of commission or omission on the part of her own officials, or suffer any rogue agents of the General Government to attempt to impose it there, either. But, of course, because presumably "our elected representatives * * * know the law",[2919] may be expected to discharge their duties "faithfully",[2920] and therefore will perform the functions of their offices with their constitutional powers and disabilities in mind,[2921] no Members of Congress true to their "Oath[s] or Affirmation[s], to support th[e] Constitution"[2922] would ever vote for such a specious "law". For Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment delegates to Congress the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, [the Amendment's] provisions", not to enact phony "laws" that contravene those "provisions" or attempt to compel public officials in the States to do so. Therefore, any such "law" would obviously not "be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" and could not possibly be any part of "the supreme Law of the Land".[2923]

[2918] Compare id. (19 Howard) at 416-417 (opinion of Taney, C.J.) with U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1.

[2919] Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 696-697 (1979).

[2920] Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 183 (1926) (McReynolds, J., dissenting).

[2921] See Albernaz v. United States, 450 U.S. 333, 341-342 (1981).

[2922] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

[2923] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

Inasmuch as no exception from "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" on the basis of race is constitutionally permissible today, that right and its correlative duty have constitutionally expanded in comparison to their statutory scope during the pre-constitutional era and even their constitutional scope during the immediately post-constitutional period. Thus today it would be impossible for Congress to enact a statute, such as it did in 1792, which provided "[t]hat each and every free able-bodied white male citizen of the respective states * * * shall * * * be enrolled in the militia".[2924] Of course, notwithstanding these constitutional imperatives, for decade upon decade after ratification of the Civil War Amendments rogue public officials in the States systematically and shamelessly denied people of color "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", with next to no interference from officials in the General Government—proving that, when "th[is] right of the people" is involved, "the people" of all races and socio-economic classes must depend upon themselves, not upon faithless "public servants".[2925]

d. Self-evidently, within an absolute right no room can exist for interpolated "exceptions". Unfortunately, contemporary "gun controllers" have sold all too many credulous Americans a laundry-list of supposed "exceptions" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". None of the most common of these stands up to analysis, though.

(1) "Public safety". In "a free State", "public safety" means the safety of the public from foreign and domestic enemies, including rogue public officials. Today, however, where firearms in private hands are concerned, "public safety" has been perverted into effectively meaning the safety of rogue public officials and their clients from the public. Outspoken "gun controllers" contend that complete disarmament of all individuals other than those in the regular Armed Forces, police departments, and sundry governmental "law-enforcement agencies" is necessary for "public safety"—the underlying presumption being, of course, that a thoroughly armed public itself threatens "public safety". The Second Amendment, conversely, declares that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State", and that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is the critical precondition for such a Militia—which means that every able-boded adult (other than conscientious objectors) must be suitably armed if America is to experience lasting "public safety". Obviously, these two positions are diametrically opposed, mutually antagonistic, and irreconcilable: Under the Second Amendment, "public safety" demands pervasive armament of, by, and for the public, as was the norm throughout pre-constitutional times. Under "gun control", "public safety" equates with pervasive *dis*armament of the public, without precedent in America's pre-constitutional history. Therefore, to invoke "public safety" as an "exception" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" requires that one first rejects "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" as being the true (or even any) source of "public safety". "Public safety" becomes an "exception" to the Second Amendment by eradicating it!

---

[2924] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271 (emphasis supplied).

[2925] See, e.g., Robert J. Cottrol and Raymond T. Diamond, "The Second Amendment: Toward An Afro-American Reconsideration", in Safeguarding Liberty, ante note 1225, at 135.

(a) The now-defunct National ban on so-called "semiautomatic assault weapons" illustrates with respect to firearms what, in the mouths of most public officials today, "public safety" really means. Of all of the private crimes of violence perpetrated annually within the United States, only a small fraction has ever involved the type of firearms subject to that ban: namely, semiautomatic rifles that have "an ability to accept a detachable magazine" and at least two other attributes from among "a folding or telescoping stock", "a pistol grip that protrudes conspicuously beneath the action", "a bayonet mount", "a flash suppressor or threaded barrel designed to accommodate a flash suppressor", and "a grenade launcher".[2926] But public crimes of violence in huge numbers, many of truly genocidal magnitude and sadistic cruelty, have been and are being perpetrated throughout the world by armed forces and professional police agencies to which rogue governments have issued firearms with exactly such characteristics—as well as the capability of fully automatic fire—for the very purpose of committing such atrocities efficiently.[2927] "[T]he Militia of the several States" might not need firearms of that type "to execute the Laws of the Union" against a relatively few domestic private criminals so armed;[2928] but they certainly would need such armament to deter—and where deterrence fails, to resist—domestic public criminals who had subverted and enlisted rogue elements in the Armed Forces or State and Local police departments and other "law-enforcement agencies" as co-conspirators in complots to oppress common Americans. So the purpose of "gun control" in this instance is transparent: namely, to minimize if not eventually eliminate the possession of such firearms in civilians' hands, so that common Americans can neither resist, nor even deter, aspiring usurpers and tyrants—the most effective of which, one can be sure, will turn out to be psychopaths.

(b) With respect to ammunition, the point is perhaps best illustrated by emerging legislative proposals for so-called "microstamping" of bullets in all newly

---

[2926] An Act To control and prevent crime ("Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994"), Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, TITLE XI—FIREARMS, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons ("Public Safety and Recreational Firearms Use Protection Act"), § 110102(b) [§ 921(a)(30)(B)(i) through (v)], 108 Stat. 1796, 1998. This Subtitle expired of its own force in 2004. See § 110105(2), 108 Stat. at 2000. "Gun controllers" continue to call for its reënactment in one form or another, though.

[2927] See, e.g., on the global stage, Rudolph J. Rummel, Death by Government: Genocide and Mass Murder in the Twentieth Century (New Brunswick, New Jersey: Transaction Publishers, 1994); and specifically within the United States, Radley Balko, Overkill: The Rise of Paramilitary Police Raids in America (Washington, D.C.: Cato Institute, 2006).

[2928] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

manufactured ammunition, coupled with registration of purchasers of such ammunition and mandatory disposal of all the old unstamped ammunition in private citizens' possession, so as eventually to enable investigators (in theory) to trace every bullet from the scene of some crime to the original registrant. As is usual in this area, the push for microstamped ammunition is a combined effort by "gun-control" propagandists and businessmen eager to make a profit even at the expense of Americans' security from usurpation and tyranny—another glaring example of the sorry truth that all too often businessmen have no country.[2929] Such schemes are open to numerous criticisms on account of their impracticality. But whether such legislation could actually assist investigators in tracking down real criminals in significant numbers is irrelevant in the last analysis to its ulterior purpose, which is nothing less than to eliminate the huge stocks of old, but still effective, ammunition that otherwise would remain in private hands for many years; to limit the supply and control the distribution of new, microstamped ammunition that enters the market; and to conduct surveillance and assemble complete intelligence on everyone who purchases such ammunition. The requirement of microstamping will exclude from the free market all new ammunition not so marked. And if, thereafter, only limited amounts of permissible ammunition are produced for civilians to buy, doubtlessly at exorbitant prices—or only a few selected calibers are made available for private purchases at any prices—or all microstamped ammunition is required to be secured in governmental magazines, to be doled out only to licensed shooters in carefully controlled amounts for specific permissible uses as to which the recipients must account with scrupulous accuracy—then most (if not all) firearms in the possession of common Americans will effectively be rendered useless except as clubs. Thus, "gun control" can be accomplished without the necessity for politically destabilizing attempts by public officials to seize the firearms in private citizens' hands.

Moreover, when seizure becomes the preferred policy after all, with microstamped ammunition being the only form available to private citizens, "gun controllers" will need no spies, only computers, to know whose residences to search for arms. In the absence of organized Militia, they likely will meet only sporadic, and certainly no significant, resistance. Even the few self-organized patriots who dare to muster will soon find themselves impotent, because they will lack sufficient (or perhaps any) ammunition for many (if not all) of their firearms—so that a modern-day Major Pitcairn will not bother to demand, "Lay down your arms, damn you, why don't you lay down your arms?!", because those arms will be useless in their owners' hands. What better evidence of how America has degenerated, primarily because of the decay of "the Militia of the several States", than that the very policy which precipitated "the shot heard 'round the world" has reappeared in an even more insidious and dangerous form, but with little or no alarm amongst the great majority of Americans?

[2929] See <www.ammunitionaccountability.org> and <www.ammocoding.com> as examples of how business interests collude with anti-constitutional political activism.

(2) Conviction for a "felony" or some other infraction of law. One means to achieve "public safety" as "gun controllers" misunderstand it is to reduce private citizens' ability to possess arms by jury rigging as many supposed legal disqualifications for as many people as possible. In the burgeoning police state now taking form throughout the United States, in which so many laws and so-called "regulations with the force of law" exist that next to no one can avoid violating some of them in the course of his life, the route to that end with the greatest potential is to deny "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" to every individual convicted of some infraction of the law. Such a conviction enables public officials to claim an "exception" to "the right" as to that individual in a most ironic, as well as illogical, manner: namely, the very operation of the police state becomes the means for creating endless "exceptions" to, and thereby eventually overthrowing, the very constitutional guarantee set up to prevent the imposition of a police state! Obviously, then, such an "exception" is unjustifiable.[2930]

(3) Prevention of crime. Even more effective for the purposes of "gun control" than disarming those individuals who have committed some "infraction of the law" in the past is to disarm individuals so that they cannot commit "crimes" in the future. That is, a broad "exception" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is deemed necessary, not just to punish "crime" after the fact, but to prevent it in the first place.[2931] Under this preëmptive approach to "public safety", the "exception" eliminates "the right" entirely—because, if any individual could commit a "crime", and if no (or very few) crimes with firearms would ever occur if no "unauthorized" individuals could possess firearms, then every "unauthorized" individual must be disarmed. At that point, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" devolves into "the right of [public officials and their minions] to keep and bear Arms". Not surprisingly, this rationale for gutting the Second Amendment suffers from two fundamental problems: its own non-rationality, and the unconstitutionality of the means it employs to sever the connection between firearms and crime at both the individual and the community levels.

(a) The mere availability of firearms in private hands cannot cause a single crime. By definition, "criminal action" is human action. Intelligible purpose is the defining characteristic of human behavior.[2932] And all truly criminal action involves purposeful behavior of a special sort: namely, knowing, intentional, and willful

---

[2930] See ante, at 981-1014.

[2931] See, e.g., McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___, ___ (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 11-14.

[2932] See L. von Mises, Human Action, ante note 1950, at 11.

misconduct, as contrasted with misbehavior that proceeds from accident or an individual's inability to distinguish right from wrong. Inanimate objects do not engage in behavior of any kind, let alone purposeful misconduct. They do not act knowingly, intentionally, or willfully. They cannot distinguish right from wrong. Neither can they control the minds or overbear the wills of human beings. An inanimate object is capable of being put to a malign purpose only if some human actor personally entertains such a purpose in employing that object. If a criminal action involves some inanimate object as its instrument, the object is not the cause of the action, but its subject. Thus, no firearm causes—or could ever cause—criminal misconduct by any human being; rather, the human actor causes criminal misuse of the firearm. Firearms no more cause crimes than money (or any other valuable property) causes theft. Similarly, firearms can facilitate crimes only in the hands of the criminally minded. First, there must be the cause—some human being's criminal appetite; then, that individual's selection of the end—the particular crime itself; then, his application of the means—the firearm or other implement to be misused in committing the crime.

Moreover, were "gun controllers" correct in their contention that the mere possession of firearms can and will somehow "cause" the possessors to commit crimes, they could not eliminate the danger to true "public safety" by prohibiting only private citizens, but not public officials, from possessing firearms (as does every proposal for "gun control" not advancing a program of pure philosophical pacifism). Rather, the danger would be concentrated and exacerbated. For (according to the logic of "gun control"), if the only firearms in existence were in the hands of the regular Armed Forces, para-military police departments, and other governmental "law-enforcement agencies", many if not all of the members of those very entities—being no less subject to the supposed "cause and effect" that "gun controllers" contend derive from the mere possession of firearms—would likely become criminals themselves, if not in the service of usurpers and tyrants, then on their own accounts as mere gangsters operating under color of the law to break the law in the name of the law. As the Founding Fathers well knew, "they who are in Power (by the pretence they have to Authority, the temptation of force they have in their hands, and the Flattery of those about them)" are the likeliest to "set up force * * * in opposition to the Laws".[2933] So, if carried to its limits, "gun control" would change only the identities and political status of the criminals plaguing society, by substituting rogue public officials and their myrmidons for private gangsters. And the extent, severity, and heinousness of crime would increase by orders of magnitude.[2934]

[2933] J. Locke, Two Treatises of Government, ante note 53, Book II, Chapter XIX, § 226. See The Federalist No. 51.

[2934] See, e.g., Rudolph J. Rummel, Death by Government: Genocide and Mass Murder in the Twentieth Century (New Brunswick, New Jersey: Transaction Publishers, 1994).

(b) Whether "public safety" involves purported protection of society against criminal behavior—or, for that matter, negligence, clinically diagnosable mental illness, or the aberrant self-destructive impulses that lead to suicides—it can never override the rights of those individuals whose behavior is neither criminal, nor negligent, nor psychologically unbalanced.[2935] That one person's constitutional rights cannot be held hostage to another person's wrongs must be doubly true for constitutional duties. As the Second Amendment declares, the highest form of "public safety" is "the security of a free State"—for "the security of a free State" "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary"—and to provide for "[a] well regulate Militia" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed". Thus, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is actually a consequence of the duty of every eligible individual to possess in his home at all times at least one firearm, ammunition, and appropriate accoutrements suitable for Militia service. That being so, does not the existence of crimes committed with firearms require, not the cancellation of every innocent Americans' constitutional duty to possess, train with, and employ firearms for such service, but instead the fulfillment of that very duty to whatever degree is necessary in order to suppress those crimes? After all, the Constitution assigns to "the Militia of the several States" the explicit authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union" when "call[ed] forth" for that purpose,[2936] and the implicit authority and responsibility to execute the laws of their own States at all other times.[2937] Perforce of the Constitution, then, the Militia are the ultimate "police force" at every level of the federal system. Self-evidently, it is constitutionally self-contradictory to the point of absurdity to disable America's ultimate police force by depriving its members of the tools they need to perform their function, on the grounds that doing so will supposedly eliminate the problem for which the Militia supply the corrective mechanism. (On that reasoning, the Militia, not criminals, constitute the problem!) The best method for promoting law and order is "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" as quickly and thoroughly as possible,[2938] so that tens of millions of Militiamen can be "call[ed] forth to execute the Laws of the Union" and of their States as the Constitution intends.

(4) "Mental illness". This supposed "exception" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" offers truly unlimited possibilities for "gun controllers", because it does not necessarily depend upon an individual's actually doing something demonstrably anti-social. It is enough that some "authority figure" or "expert" perceives him as exhibiting that potential. What passes for evidence may be no more

---

[2935] See Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 16 (1958), quoted ante, at 1358.

[2936] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[2937] See U.S. Const. amends. II and X.

[2938] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

than the strident expression of a "politically incorrect" opinion or other "thought crime" which suggests to some paranoiac public official that the individual might become "dangerous" in the future.

Whether such statutory disabilities relating to "mental illness" as exist today are constitutional depends in the first instance upon the objectivity and reliability of the relevant medical sciences that supposedly validate them.[2939] Individuals with well-defined psychiatric conditions that so impair their moral, mental, emotional, or mechanical abilities to handle firearms responsibly that they are demonstrably incapable of engaging in the behavior to which "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is addressed, and therefore can never rationally claim that right, might justifiably be restricted in their possession and use of firearms, or in extreme situations even disarmed. To reach that result demands circumspection and prudence, however. Disarmament of such persons almost always must follow, not precede, notice, hearing, and a right of appeal consistent with due process.

The problem with applying this "exception" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is that judicial hearings are likely to turn out to be little more than empty formalities, when the underlying "science" has been corrupted for political purposes, but ignorant and insouciant judges nonetheless mechanically defer to "expert opinion". Certain factions within the contemporary medical profession itself are aggressively pushing an agenda of medically mediated "gun control" thinly disguised in the garb of "science", and in aid of that agenda are conveniently discovering new psychological problems which they claim justify disarmament of the individuals supposedly suffering from them (such as the highly elastic "post-traumatic stress disorder" being diagnosed to an ever-increasing degree in veterans of the Armed Forces returning from a combat zone). Even worse, judicial hearings may amount only to kangaroo courts that camouflage with pseudo-scientific mumbo jumbo the disarmament of people whose real problem is that their political beliefs offend the authorities. Especially in a burgeoning police state, only a short sequence of goose-steps separates describing individuals as "extremists" from denouncing them as "terrorists"[2940]—and then defining them as "psychiatric cases"

[2939] See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 922(d)(4) ("[i]t shall be unlawful for any person to sell or otherwise dispose of any firearm or ammunition to any person knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that such person * * * has been adjudicated as a mental defective or has been committed to any mental institution") and 922(g)(4) ("[i]t shall be unlawful for any person * * * who has been adjudicated as a mental defective or who has been committed to a mental institution * * * to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce").

[2940] See, e.g., Extremism and Radicalization Branch, Homeland Environment Threat Analysis Division, Office of Intelligence and Analysis, United States Department of Homeland Security, Rightwing Extremism: Current Economic and Political Climate Fueling Resurgence in Radicalization and Recruitment (7 April 2009); Commonwealth of Virginia, Department of State Police, Virginia Fusion Center, 2009 Virginia Terrorism Threat Assessment (March, 2009); Missouri Information Analysis Center, MIAC Strategic Report: The Modern Militia Movement (20 February 2009).

in need of incarceration in governmental asylums.[2941] Perhaps the most serious deficiency of this "exception", though, is that the particular variety of apparent mental aberration or personality disorder most dangerous to society—and to defend against which "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" is most necessary—is never discussed.

Next to no one ever suggests that scientific and particularly criminal investigators should focus primarily on individuals in public office and allied political activities whose behavior exhibits psychopathic symptoms. This lacuna is disconcerting, because:

- Throughout not just modern Western civilization but the entire world, "the political class" has proven to be heavily larded with personalities steeped in psychopathic tendencies.

- In every country, "the political class" is tightly knit and highly organized to the point of being institutionally incestuous; has access to the major social instruments of force; claims to exercise that force with "legal authority" of a monopolistic character; and therefore in principle poses several orders of magnitude more danger to society than the sum of all of the lone psychopaths in existence, not just today, but perhaps from the very dawn of recorded history.

- In practice during just the last century, undoubted psychopaths within "the political class" have brought about death and destruction the extent of which is still being assessed, and have thrown up barriers to social progress and human happiness which will require generations upon generations of effort to overcome.[2942]

- Against this background, it becomes obvious that the suspiciously low standards for judging the trustworthiness and competence of members of "the political class" are likely being set by and in the perverse self-interests of individuals with psychopathic personalities, rendering those standards useless for the proper ordering of political life, and making their rectification as difficult as it is necessary.

So, rather than casting around for ways to disarm average citizens on the grounds of "mental illness", Americans should demand instead that revitalized Militia institute and oversee a process whereby, to qualify for public office in the first instance, an individual should have to establish that his record is devoid of instances of psychopathological behavior, and should then be reëxamined on a regular basis to insure that no such instances have occurred during his term in office.[2943] This procedure would offend no one's rights; for no one can claim any "right" to public office at all, let alone a "right" to pervert public office into an anti-social instrument of his psychopathological proclivities—whereas WE THE PEOPLE have an undoubted right and duty to protect themselves from every individual of aberrant personality whose occupancy of public office poses even the least threat to "the security of a free State". And the surest sign that such a threat exists is a public official's or politician's tolerance for, advocacy of, let alone actual efforts to carve out, specious "exceptions" from "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

---

[2941] This technique for suppressing dissent became highly developed in the Soviet Union. See, e.g., Theresa Smith and Thomas Oleszczuk, No Asylum: State Psychiatric Repression in the Former USSR (New York, New York: New York University Press, 1996).

[2942] See Rudolph J. Rummel, Death by Government: Genocide and Mass Murder in the Twentieth Century (New Brunswick, New Jersey: Transaction Publishers, 1994). As to communist "governments" in particular, see Stéphane Courtois, Nicholas Werth, Jean-Louis Panné, Andrzej Paczkowski, Karel Bartošek, and Jean-Louis Margolin, The Black Book of Communism: Crimes, Terror, Repression, Jonathan Murphy and Mark Kramer, Translators (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1999).

(5) "Gun-free zones". Where "gun controllers" cannot disarm large numbers of individuals directly, they try to disarm them indirectly, by designating as "gun-free zones" expansive geographical areas the general public frequents. That "gun-free zones" do not make practical, let alone constitutional, sense is beside the point.[2944] For the purpose of the exercise is, not to make sense, but to shift the locus of political power away from common Americans to rogue public officials by means of a semantic trick. The idea is to dupe a critical mass of uncritical citizens into imagining that this "exception" to "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is innocuous, because it attaches, not to all people in general, but only to certain places in particular. Presumably, legally myopic Americans will not notice that, because "gun-free zones" operate to disarm people in those places, the "exception" attaches to people after all—and that, there being no theoretical limit to the places in which the "exception" can be made to operate, there is no practical limit to the number of people who can be disarmed, either. If enough "gun-free zones" are established, everyone other than the regular Armed Forces and civilian "law-enforcement agencies" will be disarmed, except (under the perhaps only temporary protection of Heller) within the confines of his own home.[2945]

With respect to protecting the public, the concept of "gun-free zones" is patently non-rational. They are designed supposedly to prevent the misuse of firearms by criminals, crackpots, and reckless individuals, on the theory that if no

---

[2943] See generally, e.g., Andrew M. Łobaczewski, Political Ponerology: A Science on the Nature of Evil Adjusted for Political Purposes (Grande Prairie, Alberta, Canada: Red Pill Press, Second Edition, 2008). The latter study presumes that psychopathological political behavior is fundamentally involuntary, and therefore constitutes a form of "mental illness" which requires psychiatric intervention rather than criminal punishment. The distinct possibility exists, however, that in a very large number of cases such patterns of behavior only mimic true mental illness, and are actually voluntarily adopted by their practitioners as a strategy for advancing their careers—in which event severe punishment, not therapy, is indicated.

[2944] See ante, at 1001-1007.

[2945] See ante, at 1359-1370.

firearm is allowed to be present in some place, no firearm can be misused there. But, of course, criminals, crackpots, and reckless individuals will not heed any such restriction.

With respect to their proponents' real goal of subverting "the right of the people to keep" and especially to "bear Arms", however, the strategy of establishing "gun-free zones" is eminently rational. The concept of a "gun-free zone" rests on the premiss that the conjunction of certain places and firearms is bad. The implicit message is, not that the places (such as schools) are bad, but that firearms are bad in and of themselves. And, by logical extension, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—which its proponents insist allows for their possession of firearms in such places—must be bad, too. Indeed, it must be worse than the firearms themselves, because the exercise of that right is how firearms in the hands of average law-abiding Americans come to be found in those places. So, if firearms—and "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—are bad, and therefore some places should be "gun free", why should not all places the public owns (such as schools) or all privately owned places of so-called "public accommodation" (such as shopping malls, hotels, theater complexes, and so on) be "gun free"?

In those locales that are placed off-limits to the private possession of firearms under the "gun-free" rubric, WE THE PEOPLE are precluded, not simply from defending themselves with firearms as individuals, but also from performing through such individual self-defense the basic collective Militia function of executing the law against aggressors. So, "gun-free zones" turn out to be places in which, not just firearms, but the one establishment "necessary to the security of a free State" and therefore "the security of a free State" are excluded, too. Of course, public officials must and do provide some kind of "security" in those places. In the absence of the Militia, however, that "security" can be only "the security of a[n un]free State". Typically today, the "security" of a para-military police state, with beetle-browed thugs in black ninja outfits—festooned with body armor, helmets, and an assortment of rifles, pistols, stun guns, chemical sprays, batons, and handcuffs—patrolling with studied menace the halls of public schools, airports, railway stations, and an ever-increasing number of other public venues. Rogue public officials consider this consequence of establishing "gun-free zones" neither accidental nor undesirable. To the contrary: It advances their ultimate agenda, by acclimatizing Americans to the dark realities of life within "a[n un]free State".

An additional reason exists for the profusion of "gun-free zones" and "security check-points" springing up specifically around and within buildings that house public offices. These edifices are coming more and more to resemble, and to operate in the manner of, miniature fortresses of feudal lords. No one can pass through the barbicans without being searched by the lords' armed retainers, not just for firearms, but for anything that might function as a "weapon". The implicit presumption of these arrangements is that any individual drawn at random from the general public might be so disgusted, disgruntled, and distraught as to intend physically to attack some officeholder. The important question, though, is why officeholders imagine that common Americans so distrust and despise them as to compass disposing of them by violent means. All rogue public officials may be knaves; but most of them are neither paranoids nor fools. They have excellent reasons to believe that they have real enemies, whose ranks they themselves are enlarging every day. Rogue officials recognize the cost to society of the tens of thousands of counterproductive, if not patently ridiculous, laws and regulations they themselves have enacted solely to fatten the wallets of the greedy special-interest groups that maintain them in office. They realize that nameless, faceless citizens in huge numbers groan under the weight of this oppression, ready to embrace almost any means to lift it from their shoulders. They understand that common Americans increasingly attribute their plight to politicians' and officials' ignorance, incompetence, dishonesty, and insufferable insolence. So they presume that just about anyone and everyone could be, and probably is, their enemy. More than that, they suspect that the citizenry not only has found them out, but also has come to the conclusion that normal political procedures—the phony dichotomy between the "two" major parties, the rigged elections, the absence of any effective means to petition the government for a redress of grievances—cannot rout them out. So they expect that, sooner rather than later, some victims of their depredations—coming to the end of their tethers with frustration, loathing, and even desperation because of the absence of any other means for relief—will determine to take them out.

Were rogue officials foresighted, their fear of vengeance from particular individuals whom they have wronged would pale in comparison to the fear of mass retaliation that should grip their hearts. Each individual tends to envision himself as an unique victim of some specific act of official oppression. The very last thing on his mind is how he might ally with other victims in a concerted, coherent, organized fashion in order to bring their common oppression to an end and their oppressors to justice. But when (say) the Federal Reserve System's Ponzi pyramid finally explodes, and common Americans as a whole find themselves treading water in the same septic tank of economic distress, social chaos, and civil unrest—and then start searching en masse for culprits—the public officials who refused to adopt an alternative currency to mitigate the effects of a collapse of the monetary and banking systems, or who refused to revitalize the Militia in preparation for such a catastrophe, or who refused to do both will have the Devil to pay. Then their public offices will become just the opposite of "gun-free zones"—and perhaps of "rope-free zones" as well.

The proper corrective measure for this situation is not promiscuously to disarm WE THE PEOPLE in "gun-free zones" so that rogue public officials can oppress them even more thoroughly and viciously, and push them beyond their breaking-points even sooner, but instead to eliminate all "gun-free zones" by revitalizing the Militia so that THE PEOPLE can expose the perpetrators of official wrongdoing and subject them to condign punishment by other than vigilante methods.[2946] At which point good public officials can live in "the security of a free State", with all the benefits of Franklin D. Roosevelt's vaunted "freedom from fear".[2947]

(6) "Limited" infringements, "reasonable regulation", "necessity", and "emergency". Other putative "exceptions" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" are rather general in nature (as befits legalistic double-talk), but are nevertheless subject to specific refutations.

(a) No one can give credence to the argument of today's "gun controllers" that rogue Members of Congress or State legislatures have not exceeded their powers, and that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" has not been "infringed", when such officials prohibit the sale or even the mere possession of certain types of firearms or ammunition that they deem especially obnoxious—such as so-called "semiautomatic assault weapons"[2948]—on the duplicitous plea that other types of firearms or ammunition that those officials are temporarily willing to tolerate remain generally available to the public.[2949] "[T]he people" are not secure in their "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" simply because rogue public officials have not yet "infringed" it to extinction. The issue of "infringe[ment]" is concerned, not with what remains of that "right" (and therefore by definition has not been "infringed"), but what has been excised from it, and on what legal authority. That what survives of "the right" exceeds what has been sliced away does not validate the exercise of the purported power under color of which the butchery was accomplished. "The question of power is not to be determined by the amount of the burden attempted to be cast."[2950] "[T]he constitutional question cannot * * * be settled by the simple process of ascertaining that the infraction * * * is unimportant when compared with similar but more serious infractions which might be conceived."[2951] WE THE PEOPLE are entitled to—and should vociferously—complain of usurpation whenever rogue officials overstep their constitutional bounds by even a single Ångstom Unit in some particular, notwithstanding that in all other

---

[2946] See ante, at 956-968, 1138, and 1197-1206.

[2947] Annual Message to Congress, 6 January 1941, in Records of the United States Senate, SEN 77A-H1, Record Group 46, National Archives, at 21.

[2948] See, e.g., An Act To control and prevent crime ("Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994"), Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, TITLE XI—FIREARMS, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons ("Public Safety and Recreational Firearms Use Protection Act"), § 110102(b), 108 Stat. 1796, 1996. This Subtitle expired of its own force in 2004. See § 110105(2), 108 Stat. at 2000.

[2949] See, e.g., McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___, ___ (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 30.

[2950] Fairbank v. United States, 181 U.S. 283, 291 (1901). Accord, e.g., Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 225 (1963); Looney Company v. Crane, 245 U.S. 178, 189-190 (1917).

[2951] Patton v. United States, 281 U.S. 276, 292 (1930).

particulars they remain strictly within those limits. So, for example, where taxes are levied on firearms, "[t]he matter of amount does not determine the question of right, and the party who has a legal right may insist upon it, if only a shilling be involved".[2952]

(b) That a purported "regulation" of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" appears "reasonable" according to some practical legislative or judicial calculus cannot excuse it.[2953] With respect to firearms, the Second Amendment defines the only "reasonable regulation" for "[a] well regulated Militia" as being "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". The parameters of that "right" can be derived objectively from the pre-constitutional Colonial and State Militia Acts. No matter how "reasonable" some new and different "regulation" of firearms seems to be in other ways as a supposition of fact, if it limits "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" as so defined it is "*un*reasonable" as a matter of constitutional law.

(c) "Necessity" as the rationale for exceeding constitutional limitations is the ever-ready excuse of all usurpers and tyrants. Its usefulness for their purposes lies largely in its illogicality. For if some measure that violates the Constitution succeeds, its success will be taken to prove its "necessity", according to the fallacy post hoc ergo propter hoc, even if some untried constitutional measure could have done just as well and thus have made the violation *un*necessary. Whereas, if the unconstitutional measure fails, its defenders will claim that it was not carried forward to a sufficient degree, according to the fallacy petitio principii, which conclusively presumes that the unconstitutional measure could somehow have succeeded, rather than being open to the possibility that it was destined to fail under any and all circumstances.

As an "exception" to "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", "necessity" is particularly vicious, because it strikes from WE THE PEOPLE'S hands the very tools they need to oppose usurpation and tyranny. Such an "exception" is also particularly vacuous, because both the original Constitution and the Second Amendment exclude it:

First, the one power of Congress that relates to "necessity" is the power "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers [of Congress]".[2954] This is not, however, a power of Congress separate from and independent of all others which performs its own peculiar function; rather, its sole purpose is to serve "the foregoing Powers" found elsewhere in the Constitution. "[T]he foregoing Power[ ]" relevant here is the power "[t]o

---

[2952] Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fé Railway Company v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150, 153-154 (1897).

[2953] Pace, e.g., McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___, ___ (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 29.

[2954] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18, referring to art. I, § 8, cls. 1 through 17.

provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia".[2955] What is "necessary and proper for carrying [this Power] into Execution" is to ensure that each of "the Militia of the several States" is properly "arm[ed]". And because each Militia consists of "the body of the people" in that State,[2956] to see that "the people" are "arm[ed]". And because "the people" cannot be "arm[ed]" unless individuals are "arm[ed]", it is "necessary and proper" to "provide for * * * arming" individuals, not for disarming them. That being so, constitutional logic denies that any "necessity" for "[dis]arming" individuals can ever arise. And the impossibility of any "necessity" for "[dis]arming" individuals entails recognition that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is absolute.

Second, leaving nothing to implication, the Second Amendment explicitly identifies what is "necessary and proper" with respect to WE THE PEOPLE'S relationship with firearms: "A well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State".[2957] "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed", so that "the people" will always be prepared to participate in "well regulated Militia". Therefore, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is "necessary to the security of a free State"—indeed, even more "necessary" than "[a] well regulated Militia", because the very existence of "[a] well regulated Militia" depends upon the untrammeled exercise of that "right". That being so, no "necessity"can ever arise for limiting that "right". Or, "necessity" can never provide an "exception" to the necessity of that "right".

(d) "Necessity" as the rationale for exceeding constitutional limitations often appears garbed in the cloak of "emergency powers". Thus, rogue public officials might claim that the existence of some "emergency" creates an "exception" to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", which can be enforced through the exercise of "emergency powers"—with both the ostensible "emergency" and the "powers" that supposedly flow from it unilaterally defined by those officials with reference to nothing particular in the Constitution. Both in general and specifically with respect to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", however, this contention amounts to undiluted hogwash.

First, the doctrine—or, more accurately put, the dodge—of "emergency powers" affronts the common sense of constitutional law, because it negates constitutionalism in general. By definition, every true "constitution" is a charter of defined and therefore limited government. In contrast, the dodge of "emergency powers" is an arrant apology for *un*defined and therefore *un*limited government. No so-called "constitution" subject to public officials' unilateral assertion of "emergency

---

[2955] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied).

[2956] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[2957] Emphasis supplied.

powers" could possibly survive. For no such "constitution" would constrain those officials, who on their own initiatives could relax, or remove, or refuse to recognize its paper restrictions simply by claiming that some extraordinary situation had arisen which of its own force licensed them to overstep the putative "constitution's" boundaries. If, however, all of a sudden some "emergency"—as self-interested, power-hungry officials and special-interest groups might define it—could beget new, theretofore unheard-of powers, constitutionalism itself would disappear, ushering in "government" limited only by politicians' and propagandists' rhetoric, with orchestrated political hysteria the measure of "law". Indeed, in any country populated by minimally rational citizens, such a suicidal "constitution" could never even come into existence. Only veritable political idiots would propose or write, let alone ratify, such a ridiculously self-contradictory, self-destructive instrument of their own enslavement.

Second, precisely because America's Founding Fathers were among the most legally and historically literate and politically astute men of modern times, the dodge of "emergency powers" can find no even colorable support in the Constitution they crafted. The Constitution contains no sentence, no clause, no phrase—not a single word—related to "emergency powers". It delegates to the General Government no "emergency power" under that rubric; no power that can come into existence, or may be exercised, only in an "emergency"; no power to define or describe an "emergency"; no power to declare that an "emergency" exists—and, most decisively of all, it does not even employ the word "emergency" with respect to any part of "the supreme Law of the Land".[2958] So, finding neither place, nor meaning, nor authority, nor justification in the Constitution, "emergency" can serve as the source or measure of no power whatsoever.

Even the Supreme Court has recognized, as a fundamental constitutional principle, that

> [e]mergency does not create power. Emergency does not increase granted power or remove or diminish the restrictions imposed upon power granted or reserved. The Constitution was adopted in a period of grave emergency. Its grants of power to the Federal Government and its limitations of the power of the States were determined in the light of emergency and they are not altered by emergency.[2959]

The existence of some situation that self-serving public officials label an "emergency" has no constitutional effect in and of itself. Neither a "grave national crisis" nor any other "[e]xtraordinary conditions" can > create or enlarge constitutional power. The Constitution established a national government with powers deemed to be adequate, * * * but these powers * * * are limited by the constitutional grants. Those who act under these grants are not at liberty to transcend the imposed limits because they believe that more or different power is necessary.[2960]

---

[2958] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[2959] Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 425 (1934).

Third, the conspicuous absence in the Constitution of anything referring to, or even redolent of, "emergency powers" is not the product of the Founders' negligence. They did not simply overlook the possibility of "emergencies" in this country's future. For example, the Constitution empowers Congress "[t]o declare War"[2961]—surely an "emergency" in the commonsensical understanding of that term. Yet even the "existence of a state of war could not suspend or change the operation upon the power of Congress of the guarantees and limitations of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments",[2962] or any other Amendment or constitutional limitation, for that matter.

In addition, the Constitution recognizes other extraordinary situations, which might without exaggeration be termed "emergencies", as predicates or conditions precedent for the exercise of powers or the release from disabilities it explicitly grants or imposes. For instance, Congress may "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[2963] "The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it".[2964] "No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, * * * or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay."[2965] "No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law."[2966] And "[n]o person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger".[2967] In each of these cases, without once using the term "emergency", the Constitution explicitly specifies the extraordinary circumstances that alone can justify the employment of some expressly delegated power, or the relaxation of some express disability, leaving nothing for public [2960] A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 528-529 (1935) (footnote omitted).

---

[2961] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[2962] United States v. L. Cohen Grocery Company, 255 U.S. 81, 88 (1921).

[2963] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 (emphasis supplied).

[2964] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2 (emphasis supplied).

[2965] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied).

[2966] U.S. Const. amend. III (emphasis supplied).

[2967] U.S. Const. amend. V (emphasis supplied).

officials to interpolate or extrapolate. If these can be styled "emergency powers", then the constitutional rule they illustrate is that "emergency powers" are always defined with particularity and can be exercised only within narrowly defined channels.

Furthermore, every one of these "emergency powers" presupposes and is consistent only with the existence of "well regulated Militia" composed of people who exercise "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms"—

- Congress obviously could not "provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" unless the Militia existed.

- The "Cases of Rebellion or Invasion" which would justify suspension of "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus" would constitute two of the reasons for which the Militia could be "call[ed] forth".

- If a State were "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay", she would likely have to depend upon her Militia to repel the attack initially, because there would be no time to raise regular "Troops, or Ships of War" of her own, or to await the arrival of contingents from the Armed Forces of the United States.

- A "Soldier * * * quartered in any house * * * in time of war" could be a member of the Militia "call[ed] forth" to "repel [an] Invasion[ ]". And,

- "[T]he Militia" would be expected to be "in actual service in time of War or public danger".

So much for the contention that "emergency powers" constitute a set of "exceptions" to the command that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arm, shall not be infringed".

4. Summary. The full meaning of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" can now be set forth in outline:

✶ To what purposes is "the right" directed—the maintenance of "well regulated Militia" in order to guarantee "the security of a free State" in each of "the several States" and for the Union as a whole.

✶ Who enjoys "the right"—essentially every able-bodied free American above the age of no more than sixteen years.

✶ What "Arms" does "the right" encompass—(i) every type of firearm that could find a profitable use with respect to Militia service, including so-called "assault rifles", "sniper rifles", "combat shotguns", "concealable handguns", and other small arms in any way suitable for contemporary light infantry, irregulars, partisans, guerrilleros, franc-tireurs, or résistants; (ii) ammunition of every type available for such firearms; and (iii) all related accoutrements.

✶What are the sources of such "Arms"—the free market, the States, and the General Government, in that order, with primary emphasis on the first.

✶How and where can "the right" be exercised—(i) in common Americans' performance of whatever duties may be assigned to them when called forth for active Militia service; (ii) by their personal acquisition of firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements, particularly in the free market; (iii) by their personal possession of that equipment at all times in their own homes and businesses, on the streets, and in other public places and places of public accommodation; and (iv) by their use of such "Arms" for training, sport, and hunting at target ranges, shooting clubs, and all other appropriate venues.

✶When and for what reasons may public officials prohibit or restrict "the people's" exercise of "the right"—never and for no reason.

✶When and for what reasons may public officials validly "regulate" "the right"—whenever it may be necessary and proper: (i) "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", for "governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States", and for "training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress";[2968] (ii) "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions";[2969] otherwise (iii) to provide for "[a] well regulated Militia", according to pre-constitutional standards, in each State under the laws thereof; and (iv) to exclude from the Militia individuals convicted of crimes who are incarcerated or for whose violations of the criminal law the just punishment is slavery.

[2968] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[2969] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX

The Second Amendment ensures that, with respect to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", the original Constitution will be "the bill of rights" it is intended to be.

The Second Amendment is one of the ten "further declaratory and restrictive clauses" that, compiled in the Bill of Rights, were "added" to the original Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers".[2970] Its purpose is both didactic and prophylactic—namely, to provide a pellucid statement that: (i) teaches the true interrelation among "the people", "Arms", "Militia", and "a free State"; (ii) repeats and reinforces certain principles embodied in the original Constitution that relate to those matters; (iii) prevents (or at least renders incredible) any misinterpretation by errant public officials of the constitutional provisions that deal with "Militia"; (iv) supplies the controlling legal basis for correction of rogue officials' and private parties' misbehavior with respect to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"; and thereby (v) confines the General Government, the States, and private parties within the boundaries the original Constitution defined. Its place as an Amendment renders it superior to any antecedent provision in the original Constitution to the extent of any perceived conflict between the two. Reading the original Constitution through the magnifying glass of the Second Amendment proves, however, that no inconsistency between the two is possible—and that, in fact, both the original Constitution and the Second Amendment constitute mutually complementary and supportive "bills of rights" with respect to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

A. The relevant rules of constitutional interpretation. In its relationship to other parts of the Constitution, the Second Amendment must be construed in accordance with certain fundamental rules.

1. A valid application of the Amendment must relate all of its particulars to every other provision in the Constitution that deals with the same subject-matter, so that "the supreme Law of the Land"[2971] is read as an entirety, harmonizing all of its mutually interrelated provisions. Because, as with every complex statute, all of the parts of the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights are parts of the same legal instrument, "each [of them] must be considered in the light of the other[s]",[2972] "must be read in relation to each other",[2973] and "must be reconciled so as to produce a symmetrical whole".[2974] With the caveat that any purported construction of any of the General Government's or the States' powers which is not completely consistent with the Second Amendment must be erroneous.

---

[2970] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

[2971] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

2. As with any statute, all other things being equal, "identical words used in different parts of the [Constitution and its Amendments] are intended to have the same meaning".[2975] So "[w]hen the same term which has been used" in one clause of the original Constitution is used in the Second Amendment, "it must be understood as retaining the sense originally given to it".[2976] This is especially true inasmuch as the purpose of the Second Amendment is, not to add something new, but instead (as noted above) merely "to prevent misconstruction or abuse of [the original Constitution's] powers"—which the Amendment could never accomplish if its words meant something different from the selfsame words in the Constitution. For the most obvious examples pertinent here—"the Militia" and "the Militia of the several States" incorporated within the original Constitution[2977] must be the selfsame "well regulated Militia" of which the Second Amendment speaks; and the "Arms" which the Amendment recognizes as within "the right of the people to keep and bear" must be (at least in type and serviceability) the selfsame "Arms" as to which Congress is "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia".[2978]

3. The Constitution is not psychotic. One of its provisions cannot detract from, contradict, or least of all nullify either itself or any other provision. Just as some particular positive "effect [must] be given to each word of the [2972] Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corporation, 377 U.S. 324, 332 (1964). Accord, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 653 (1898); Cherokee Intermarriage Cases, 203 U.S. 76, 89 (1906); Talbott v. Silver Bow County, 139 U.S. 438, 443-444 (1891); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 44 (1957) (opinion of Frankfurter, J.).

---

[2973] United States v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corporation, 344 U.S. 218, 222 (1952).

[2974] Federal Power Commission v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, 337 U.S. 498, 514 (1949). Accord, e.g., Richards v. United States, 369 U.S. 1, 11 (1962).

[2975] Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, Inc. v. United States, 286 U.S. 427, 433 (1932). Accord, e.g., Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Lundy, 516 U.S. 235, 249-250 (1996); Gustafson v. Alloyd Company, Inc., 513 U.S. 561, 569-570 (1995); Ratzlaf v. United States, 510 U.S. 135, 143 (1994); Department of Revenue of Oregon v. ACF Industries, Inc., 510 U.S. 332, 342 (1994); Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation, 509 U.S. 209, 230 (1993); Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Keystone Consolidated Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 152, 159 (1993); Estate of Cowart v. Nicklos Drilling Company, 505 U.S. 469, 479 (1992); Sullivan v. Stroop, 496 U.S. 478, 484 (1990); Sorenson v. Secretary of the Treasury, 475 U.S. 851, 860 (1986); Morrison-Knudson Construction Company v. Director, Office of Workers' Compensation Programs, 461 U.S. 624, 633 (1983). Of course, if all other things are not equal, then this rule becomes merely presumptive, not absolute. Helvering v. Stockholms Enskilda Bank, 293 U.S. 84, 86-87 (1934); Atlantic Cleaners & Dyers, 286 U.S. at 433-434.

[2976] See Hepburn and Dundas v. Ellzey, 6 U.S. (2 Cranch) 445, 453 (1805).

[2977] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[2978] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

Constitution",[2979] no negative effect can be assigned to the selfsame words, or read into other words in the Constitution. For "[t]he doing of one thing which is authorized cannot be made the source of an authority to do another thing which there is no power to do".[2980] Because all of the Constitution's powers—and its duties and disabilities, too—"are of equal dignity", none of them may "be so enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other".[2981] All of "these granted powers are always subject to the limitation that they may not be exercised in a way that violates other specific provisions of the Constitution".[2982]

B. The effect of the Second Amendment on the General Government. To understand the effect of the Second Amendment on the powers of the General Government requires a close examination of the original Constitution in several particulars.[2983]

1. "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" under the original Constitution. Were close attention paid to what the original Constitution actually provided, the Second Amendment would be recognized as something of a redundancy. For, as Alexander Hamilton pointed out, "[t]he truth is * * * that the [original] Constitution is itself, in every rational sense, and to every useful purpose, A BILL OF RIGHTS"[2984]—with respect to all of the General Government's rights, powers, duties, and disabilities, including every one that could touch upon the Militia.

The very purpose of the Second Amendment proved Hamilton correct. Primarily, the Amendment aimed at preventing "misconstruction * * * of [the original Constitution's] powers"—that is, the "[w]rong interpretation of [its] words".[2985] Not at detracting from exorbitant powers that had been carelessly delegated to the General Government, but instead at ensuring that no error would occur in the application of the already properly limited powers that had been delegated. So, what the Amendment meant, the original Constitution meant as well. But because the original Constitution could and should have been construed consistently with the meaning of the Second Amendment in the first place, with the Amendment thereafter serving at the most as a mere guide to and confirmation of [2979] Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 87 (1900).

---

[2980] Wilson v. New, 243 U.S. 332, 345 (1917).

[2981] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[2982] Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 29 (1968).

[2983] Throughout the following analysis, the original Constitution and the meaning and operation of its powers, duties, and disabilities will be described in the past tense, so as to focus on the state of the law between June of 1788 (when ratification of the Constitution was completed) and December of 1791 (when ratification of the Second Amendment was completed). The reader should recall, though, that, except insofar as some later Amendment may have modified it, what the Constitution meant then it still means now.

[2984] The Federalist No. 84.

[2985] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

that construction, then the original Constitution could and should have been so correctly interpreted and applied even before the Amendment's ratification, and even thereafter without the Amendment's aid.

The Second Amendment was adopted also to forefend "abuse" of the original Constitution. Then (as now), "abuse" imported something far more serious than mere "misconstruction". It was not simply "[t]he ill use of any thing",[2986] but an "[i]mproper treatment or use; application to a wrong or bad purpose; misuse"[2987]—and, if long continued, "[a] corrupt practice or custom; offense; [or] crime",[2988] such as, specifically, "the abuses of government".[2989] An "abuse" implies an action the perpetrator undertakes in knowing violation of some clear legal duty, or with wilful blindness to or in reckless disregard of the consequences of his misbehavior. Inasmuch as the United States was a "body politic or corporate", and the original Constitution its "franchise" or "charter" from WE THE PEOPLE, acting in their capacity as sovereigns, one could justly have said that an "abuse * * * of [the Constitution] * * * signifie[d] any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, wilfully done or caused to be done; the use of rights * * * as a pretext for wrongs and injuries to the public".[2990] So every "abuse" of the original Constitution was also a violation of it, and every significant violation of it was an "abuse", before the Second Amendment was ratified. For the Amendment did not add to, subtract from, or otherwise change the Constitution. Any "abuse" that Americans could have exposed with the Amendment's aid—whether an "ill use", an "application to a wrong or bad purpose", a "corrupt practice", or rogue public officials' "use of rights * * * as a pretext for wrongs and injuries to the public"—they could and should have been able to expose without it. An "abuse" of the original Constitution, then, should always have been apparent, both to the abusers and to their victims.

Not surprisingly, then, analysis demonstrates that, as to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", the original Constitution already contained all of the basic protections the Second Amendment later provided.

a. The original Militia Powers. As to both Congress and the President, the original Constitution's Militia Powers—construed according to the historical record and the common sense of the matter—fitted Hamilton's characterization perfectly.

[2986] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definition 1 in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

[2987] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 7, definition 1. Accord, The Compact Edition of the Oxford English Dictionary, ante note 11, Volume 1, at 11, definition 2.

[2988] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 7, definition 3. Accord, The Compact Edition of the Oxford English Dictionary, ante note 11, Volume 1, at 12, definition 3.

[2989] N. Webster, An American Dictionary, ante note 15, definition 2.

[2990] See Black's Law Dictionary, ante note 368, at 222, 786, 298, 25.

(1) The absence of Militia Powers in the Judiciary. Because the original Constitution delegated no Militia Powers to the Judiciary, the courts need receive no detailed separate treatment here. It suffices to point out the Supreme Court's shameful failure to exercise "the judicial Power of the United States"[2991] properly in the Heller case.[2992] In Heller, the Justices in the majority ruled that "a ban on handgun possession in the home violates the Second Amendment"; nevertheless, they also opined—albeit only in dicta but with the concurrence of the Justices in the minority as well, so that on this point the Court was unanimous—that the Amendment does not prohibit the General Government from "bann[ing]" "weapons that are most useful in military service—M-16 rifles and the like" as well as other "sophisticated arms that are highly unusual in society at large" precisely because they have been "banned".[2993] According to Heller, at best the Second Amendment imposes only a partial impediment upon the exercise of some general power of Congress—the exact location of which power in the Constitution the Justices did not identify—to "ban[ ]" certainly some, and perhaps all, firearms from WE THE PEOPLE'S possession. This perverse result emphasizes the wisdom in Hamilton's warning that > bills of rights * * * [we]re not only unnecessary in the [original] Constitution but would even be dangerous. They would contain various exceptions to powers which [we]re not granted; and, on this very account, would afford a colorable pretext to claim more than were granted. For why declare that things shall not be done which there is no power to do? * * * I will not contend that [a right set out in a bill of rights] would confer a regulating power; but it is evident that it would furnish, to men disposed to usurp, a plausible pretense for claiming that power. They might urge with a semblance of reason that the Constitution ought not to be charged with the absurdity of providing against the abuse of an authority which was not given * * * . This may serve as a specimen of the numerous handles which would be given to the doctrine of constructive powers, by the indulgence of an injudicious zeal for bills of rights.[2994]

(2) The Militia Powers of Congress. In the original Constitution, Congress's only powers with respect to the Militia were:

- "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions";[2995]

[2991] U.S. Const. art. III, § 1.

[2992] District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

[2993] Id. at 635, 627 (Scalia, J., for the Court).

[2994] The Federalist No. 84.

[2995] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

- "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress";[2996] and

- "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof".[2997]

(a) Limited by definition. These provisions both explicitly defined and by their definitions limited Congress's authority with respect to the Militia, excluding all other conceivable powers in that regard. For "[a]ffirmative words are * * * negative of other objects than those affirmed".[2998] Neither—if rationality were to prevail—could self-contradictory effects have been suffered to arise out of the selfsame words in these clauses. For, if "[t]he doing of one thing which is authorized cannot be made the source of an authority to do another thing which there is no power to do",[2999] then surely a power delegated for a particular purpose cannot be perverted into a power to do the very opposite.

(b) Duties as well as powers. More than that, under the original Constitution, Congress's powers with respect to the Militia were, perforce of the subject of those powers, inflexible legal duties as well.[3000] The delegation of each and every one of Congress's powers imposed a moral, a political, and a legal duty on its Members to exercise those powers whenever that exercise might have been "necessary and proper".[3001] Yet, in some situations, Members might have determined in good faith and for sufficient reasons that no necessity or propriety for the exercise of a particular power existed. For instance, the original Constitution allowed, but did not compel, Congress "[t]o constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court".[3002] Congress might honestly have determined that no such "Tribunals" were "necessary", because State courts could have provided sufficient judicial services for the country's needs; and, if such "Tribunals" were not "necessary", then expending scarce public resources on them, at the cost of attending to other needs, would not have been "proper". In that case, Members of Congress would have fulfilled their

---

[2996] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[2997] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[2998] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1803).

[2999] Wilson v. New, 243 U.S. 332, 345 (1917).

[3000] See ante, at 50-54.

[3001] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 and art. VI, cl. 3.

[3002] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9.

duty to investigate the matter, but would have invoked their privilege not to exercise their power in a wasteful fashion.

The inflexibility of Congress's duties with respect to the Militia arose out of the special constitutional character of the Militia, and Congress's peculiarly circumscribed relationship to them. The original Constitution did not create the Militia. Neither did it empower either the General Government or the States to create any ersatz "militia" from scratch, according to some pattern unknown to American history. Instead, the Constitution adopted and incorporated as permanent parts of its federal system "the Militia of the several States",[3003] just as they existed in 1788 and had existed for decade upon decade before anyone even imagined anything like the Constitution, the Articles of Confederation, or the Declaration of Independence. The Militia thus became (and remain) constitutional entities in their own right, even more than the States or the three branches of the General Government—which should hardly be surprising, inasmuch as the Militia consist of almost the entirety of WE THE PEOPLE themselves, whereas the General Government and the States are merely THE PEOPLE'S creations, representatives, and ultimately servants. Indeed, because of their composition and prior existences, the Militia's constitutional pedigree was obviously superior to that of the General Government, which WE THE PEOPLE created from nothing, and not inferior even to that of the States, because the Militia existed as parts of all but one of the Colonies' governments long before the States came into existence as political establishments independent of Great Britain. Under the original Constitution, therefore, Congress was as devoid of power to dissolve the Militia, to change their character, to alter their composition, to substitute different entities in their places, or to create new institutions to compete with them, as it was to take any such actions with respect to the States. And even in the face of a purported constitutional Amendment to such effect, the Militia will retain that status, as to both Congress and the States—because in the final analysis the Militia arise out of WE THE PEOPLE'S authority under the Declaration of Independence, which itself derives from "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", not the positive laws of the General Government or the States, and therefore which no mere Amendment of the Constitution or any State's law can negatively affect.

The original Constitution incorporated "the Militia of the several States" as permanent parts of its federal system, because WE THE PEOPLE considered them instruments perfectly fitted to serve at least four of the purposes of its Preamble—namely, "to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, [and] provide for the common defence". The Constitution explicitly authorized Congress to "call forth the Militia" from any and every State to "be employed in the Service of the United States" (thereby "form[ing] a more perfect Union"), and assigned to the Militia the authority and responsibility to "execute the Laws of the Union" (thereby "establish[ing] Justice"), "to * * * suppress Insurrections" (thereby "insur[ing] domestic Tranquility"), and "to * * * repel Invasions" (thereby "provid[ing] for the common defence").[3004] The Militia also served the other two of the Preamble's goals—namely, "to * * * promote the general Welfare * * * and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity"—because the Militia were soon to be described as "necessary to the security of a free State", of which equality and liberty have ever been the hallmarks.[3005] (As the reader's attention is being directed at this point to the original Constitution alone, this matter need simply be noted, but not harped on. It should be apparent, though, that if Americans understood the relationship among the Militia, "a free State", "the general Welfare", and "the Blessings of Liberty" when the Second Amendment was ratified in 1791 they more than likely understood it just as well when the Constitution was ratified in 1788.)

---

[3003] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

The original Constitution did delegate to Congress some very specific authority with respect to "the Militia of the several States", so that they could be organized, armed, disciplined, trained, and governed in an uniform manner in anticipation of their possibly being "employed in the service of the United States" for three limited, albeit critically important, National purposes.[3006] This delegation was necessary because, inasmuch as the Militia always had been and remained integral parts of the States' governmental structures—and, ultimately, within WE THE PEOPLE'S reserved authority under the Declaration of Independence—without it Congress could have exercised no power whatsoever over the Militia. After all, the only other authority of the General Government in the original Constitution which could have impinged directly upon the States' governments was the duty that "[t]he United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government".[3007] And this duty was coupled with the power adequate to fulfill it.[3008] So, because "a Republican Form of Government" required that a State field a Militia (which all of the independent States had done prior to 1788), the United States were bound to "guarantee" a Militia "to every State in this Union". Absent a delegation of authority to Congress with respect to the Militia, however, each such Militia would have had to subsist entirely within and under the control of its own State's "Republican Form of Government", not to any degree subject to Congress. For the United States could no more have "guarantee[d] to every State

---

[3004] Compare U.S. Const. preamble with art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3005] Compare U.S. Const. preamble with amend. II.

[3006] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3007] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3008] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

* * * a Republican Form of Government" in which each State's Militia was subservient to Congress than it could have "guarantee[d] * * * a Republican Form of Government" in which each State's legislature, executive, or judiciary was under Congress's control.[3009]

(c) Specific parts of the Militia Powers. In the original Constitution, the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively * * * the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress"[3010] was plainly unitary: All of these activities were to be performed simultaneously or at least in some rationally interrelated sequence, in order properly to prepare the Militia to be "call[ed] forth to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3011] Self-evidently, there would have been no point in "organizing * * * the Militia" without "arming" and "disciplining" them; or in "arming" them, without "organizing" and "disciplining" them; or in "disciplining" them without "organizing" and "arming" them. Certainly the States could not have exercised "the[ir reserved] Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress" unless Congress had actually "provide[d] for * * * disciplining, the Militia". And "training" according to the best theoretical plan for "discipline" would have been next to useless in practice had the Militia not been "arm[ed]", and probably impossible had they not been "organiz[ed]". (Although, of course, upon default by Congress, the States themselves could have "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" their own Militia.) For the sake of analysis, though, this power can profitably be subdivided into its parts.

(i) General considerations. The purposes the Preamble identified in the original Constitution WE THE PEOPLE intended to be permanent. And, since 1788, no one has ever proposed that even one of those purposes should be expunged from the Constitution. The original Constitution incorporated "the Militia of the several States" as permanent establishments within its federal system so that the goals of the Preamble would be served. To that end, the original Constitution empowered Congress "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" its enumerated powers with respect to the Militia.[3012] Moreover, the original Constitution explicitly assigned and entrusted to the Militia, and to only the Militia, the critical authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union,

---

[3009] The critical interrelationship between the Militia and "a Republican Form of Government" receives more extensive treatment ante, at 890-893, 921-922, 1038-1040, and 1301-1307, and post, at 1451-1453 and 1497-1499.

[3010] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3011] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3012] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"—without the fulfillment of which, when necessary, the Union could have been expected not to survive. So, from 1788 onwards, in order to satisfy the Preamble, it was always "necessary and proper" as a matter of law for Congress actually "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" in some sufficient manner at all times. Congress's powers with respect to the Militia, then, constituted duties which it was required to fulfill to the maximum extent practically possible either through the General Government's own action or through reliance on the States or the people—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

Under the original Constitution, Congress's power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" extended to preparation of the Militia to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for three purposes only: "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions". And the President could have exercised the office of "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" only when they were "called into the actual Service of the United States",[3013] necessarily for one or more of those three purposes only. All other possible employments for the Militia—everything else that today would fall within the rubric of "homeland security", such as executing the laws of the States, and preparing to deal with the effects of natural disasters, industrial accidents, epidemics, monetary and banking crises, and like calamities—were left to the States, because the Militia were, both originally and as incorporated within the federal system, "the Militia of the several States". Had the Constitution assigned to Congress the sole authority to organize, arm, discipline, train, and govern the Militia, and had Congress exercised this authority in such a manner that the Militia were organized, armed, disciplined, trained, and governed so as to be capable solely of "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union, suppress[ing] Insurrections and repel[ling] Invasions", then in effect the Militia would have been, not "the Militia of the several States" at all, but instead "the Militia of the United States", because they would have been prepared to "be employed in the Service of the United States" but not to serve any of the myriad other purposes for which the States might have found it necessary to call them forth. On the other hand, inasmuch as Congress could never have "provide[d] for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" both for the three constitutional purposes and for all of the peculiar needs that might have arisen in each State in the course of human events, WE THE PEOPLE would never have delegated to Congress an exclusive authority in the premises on the tacit assumption that Congress could have done the impossible. So, with respect to all of those matters, the States retained the authority to organize, arm, discipline, train, and govern their Militia as they saw fit, as long as they did not interfere with how Congress had "provide[d] for" the Militia so that they could be "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States"[3014]—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

---

[3013] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

(ii) The power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia". On the face of the original Constitution, Congress's power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" referred to "the Militia of the several States" as they existed in 1788. A basic principle of "the Militia" in 1788, and for generations theretofore, was that everyone eligible for the Militia was to be "organized" in some manner, even those who might have qualified for exemptions from certain Militia duties. And because of the nature of the three purposes for which the Militia might have been "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States"—especially "repel[ling] Invasions" which might have threatened the very survival of the entire Union—under the original Constitution Congress should have "provide[d] for organizing, arming, and disciplining" everyone eligible for "the Militia" in some appropriate manner. That is, "the Militia" should have been composed of "the body of the people" as a whole.[3015] Therefore, by definition, Congress's power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" excluded any license to decide, in some invidiously discriminatory fashion, who would or would not compose "the Militia". In the guise of "organizing * * * the Militia", Congress could not have jury rigged a "select militia", with everyone else consigned to an "unorganized militia" (or to no "militia" at all)—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

To be sure, although Congress could not constitutionally have "provide[d] for organizing * * * the Militia" by making narrow selections for the Militia from "the body of the people", it could have made judicious selections within the Militia, so that every individual could have been assigned duties commensurate with his particular ability or any exemption his special situation justified. The three constitutional purposes for which the Militia might have been "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" did not require that everyone be "organiz[ed]" in exactly the same way. For example, the youngest individuals could have been assigned no more than educational duties; older individuals, para-military duties; the infirm or elderly, administrative duties; whoever was qualified, of whatever age, duties in the medical or administrative services; and so on.

The individuals whom Congress "organiz[ed]" for the three constitutional purposes the States could also have "organiz[ed]" for their own purposes—and for the three constitutional purposes as well, in response to or even in anticipation of a possible default on the part of Congress. After all, WE THE PEOPLE could never have intended for such critical purposes to be left unfulfilled simply because officials of the General Government fell down on their jobs. And they surely recognized that the most pressing need "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" would likely arise in one of more of the States, which would then be the parties most exposed to the danger, and best situated to deal with it, too, provided that they could call forth organized Militia in their defense. Moreover, if both Congress and the States had defaulted in these particulars, then WE THE PEOPLE could have "organiz[ed]" the Militia themselves, because "the Militia of the several States" were establishments in which THE PEOPLE were not only entitled but even required to participate, perforce of the original Constitution itself (as well as the Declaration of Independence), no matter what Congress or the States did or did not do—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

---

[3014] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

[3015] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

The majority of the Justices in the Heller case staggered in the right direction when they recognized that > the militia is assumed by [the Constitution] already to be in existence. Congress is given * * * the power not to create, but to "organiz[e]" it—and not to organize "a" militia, which is what one would expect if the militia were to be a federal creation, but to organize "the" militia, connoting a body already in existence * * * . This is fully consistent with the ordinary definition of the militia as all able-bodied men.[3016]

Having said this, however, these Justices then stumbled into the error that,

> [f]rom that pool [of all able-bodied men] Congress has plenary power to organize the units that will make up an effective fighting force. * * * Congress need not conscript every able-bodied man into the militia, because nothing in [the Constitution] suggests that in exercising its power to organize, discipline, and arm the Militia, Congress must focus upon the entire body. Although the militia consists of all able-bodied men, the federally organized militia may consist of a subset of them.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * Congress retains plenary authority to organize the militia, which must include the authority to say who will belong to the organized force.[17]
>
> 17. * * * It could not be clearer that Congress's "organizing" power * * * can be invoked even for that part of the militia not "employed in the Service of the United States." * * * Both the Federalists and Anti-Federalists read the provision as it was written, to permit the creation of a "select" militia.[3017]

[3016] 554 U.S. at 596 (Scalia, J., for the Court) (emphasis in the original) (dicta).

[3017] Id. at 596, 600 & note 17 (dicta).

Any constitutionalist must almost despair at the amount of ignorance, or duplicity, compressed within the latter passages:

First, apparently the Justices did not realize (or care) that the constitutional term "the Militia" is not singular, but plural—"the Militia of the several States", from which a "Part of them * * * may be employed in the Service of the United States". The Militia are not "a [single] body already in existence", but as many "bod[ies] already in existence" as there are States. That the plurality of the Militia—and especially their status as State institutions—might have some constitutional significance entirely escaped the Justices (or was intentionally put to one side because it ran counter to their purpose).

Second, if (to use the Justices' verbiage) "the militia" is "a body already in existence" which consists of "all able-bodied men"; and if the power and duty of Congress is "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia", without any limitation or qualification stated on the face of the original Constitution; then on exactly what basis may Congress not "focus on the entire body"? How can Congress legitimately "organiz[e] * * * [only Part of] the Militia" under the power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia"? What then becomes of the remainder of "the Militia"? And may Congress "organiz[e]" parts of "the Militia" solely in specially selected States, or among certain specially selected classes or special-interest groups within particular States, so that one section of the country, or one segment of a community, can be pitted against another? Although the original Constitution foresaw that only "Part of the[Militia]" might be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" at a particular time, nowhere did it indicate that only some indefinite "Part" needed to be "organiz[ed]" in the first place. Indeed, the original Constitution allowed that only "Part of the[Militia]" might be "call[ed] forth" precisely because it presumed that, with "the Militia" "organiz[ed]" in their entireties, most situations would not require the whole of "the Militia" to "be employed in the Service of the United States". And, with "the Militia" "organiz[ed]" in their entireties, if only a "Part" were "call[ed] forth" for illegitimate purposes, and that "Part" turned rogue and complied with such an illegal summons, the remainder could still resist.

Third, why did the Justices focus only on Congress's supposedly "plenary power to organize the units that will make up an effective fighting force"? "[A]n effective fighting force" would be needed to "suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions", but not necessarily "to execute the Laws of the Union". So the power "to organize * * * units" for "an effective fighting force" does not exclude the power "to organize * * * units" for other purposes, in which "able-bodied men" not suited for a "fighting force" could serve.

Fourth, of course "Congress need not conscript every able-bodied man into the militia"—but only because the Militia, by definition, are already composed of every able-bodied man, impressed into service by the Constitution itself. For Congress to "organiz[e]" a "select militia", and consign everyone else to some "unorganized militia" or to no "militia" at all, thus excluding them from the Militia, would be to "*de*conscript" individuals whom the Constitution has conscripted.

Fifth, "the federally organized militia" as a whole "may [not] consist of a subset of [all able-bodied men]" alone. Different units within the Militia may consist of "subset[s]" of individuals chosen on the basis of age, physical abilities, special skills, and so on. But "the Militia" must consist of every eligible individual in the community, each one assigned to some appropriate duty.

Sixth, it is not true that "[b]oth the Federalists and the Anti-Federalists read" Congress's power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" "as it was written, to permit the creation of a 'select' militia". On its face, that power is not so "written", but excludes "a 'select' militia" if the term "the Militia" is given its commonsensical reading—precisely as the Justices themselves read it, as "connoting a body" consisting of "all able-bodied men". Moreover, for the Justices to have relied upon contentions from the Anti-Federalists in this situation was disingenuous at best. For in their writings the Anti-Federalists often put forward strained constructions and outright misconstructions of the Constitution in order to make out a political case against its ratification.[3018] To the extent that any "legislative history" is useful in this regard,[3019] the position espoused by the Federalists must be accorded more credence, because they were intent upon convincing WE THE PEOPLE to ratify the Constitution, and their views prevailed. Unfortunately for the Justices, though, the single Federalist they cited (but refrained from actually quoting), Alexander Hamilton, did not contend that the Constitution permitted Congress to create "a 'select' militia" of the narrow sort the Justices imagined.

As Hamilton argued,

> "[t]he project of disciplining all the militia of the United States is as futile as it would be injurious if it were capable of being carried into execution. * * * To oblige the great body * * * of the citizens to be under arms for the purpose of going through military exercises and evolutions, as often as might be necessary to acquire the degree of perfection which would entitle them to the character of a well-regulated militia, would be a real grievance to the people and a serious public inconvenience and loss. * * * [T]he experiment, if made, could not succeed, because it would not long be endured. Little more can reasonably be aimed at with respect to the people at large than to have them properly armed and equipped; and > in order to see that this be not neglected, it will be necessary to assemble them once or twice in the course of a year.

---

[3018] See generally Jackson T. Main, The Anti-Federalists: Critics of the Constitution, 1781-1788 (New York, New York: W.W. Norton & Company, Inc., 1974).

[3019] See ante, at 35-45.

>
> "But though the scheme of disciplining the whole nation must be abandoned as mischievous or impracticable; yet it is a matter of the utmost importance that a well-digested plan should, as soon as possible, be adopted for the proper establishment of the militia. The attention of the government ought particularly to be directed to the formation of a select corps of moderate size, upon such principles as will really fit it for service in case of need."[3020]

Evidently, as his references to "'disciplining all the Militia of the United States'", "'oblig[ing] *the great body * * * of the citizens* to be under arms'", "'*the people at large * *  properly armed and equipped'", and "'the scheme of disciplining the whole nation'" proved, Hamilton was well aware that "the Militia of the several States" were not narrow, "select militia", but instead encompassed just about every adult able-bodied free male American. Neither did he propose that "'the people at large'" should be excluded from the Militia, and what he called "'a select corps of moderate size'" substituted for them. Hamilton's concern was not with the near-universal character of the Militia, but instead that "'disciplining the whole nation'"—other than by "'assembl[ing] them once or twice in the course of year'" in order to insure that they were "'properly armed and equipped'"—would be "'mischievous or impractical'". This, however, was something of a straw man as a matter of law, because nothing in the original Constitution required Congress to attempt to "'disciplin[e] [everyone in] the whole nation'" to exactly the same degree, or even necessarily to an extraordinarily high degree, of purely military proficiency. And Hamilton's prediction that "'disciplining all the militia'" would be "'futile'" and "'injurious'", because it would prove so expensive that "'it would not long be endured'", rang hollow in the context of the historical fact that Americans had "'endured'" precisely that system throughout *pre-*constitutional times and then incorporated within the federal system the very "Militia of the several States" then in existence. In addition, Hamilton's warning that extensive participation by the citizenry in the Militia "'would be a real grievance to the people and a serious public inconvenience and loss'" partook of the myopia of "economic man", who views everything in the impurely materialistic terms of immediate personal comfort and monetary gain. For even the most thoroughly trained Militia would likely cost far less, and certainly would pose far fewer political and other dangers, in the long run than a professional "standing army" within an overblown "military-industrial complex". And even if securing freedom does demand a high price, being deprived of it invariably entails far greater "'inconvenience and loss'". In any event, even under Hamilton's view, not just a "select" group, but instead the entirety of "'the people at large'", would have been "organiz[ed]"—to be sure, only for the purpose of becoming "'properly armed and equipped'", and only subject to a minimum number of actual musters, but "organiz[ed]" to the last man nonetheless. So, although what Hamilton proposed was extreme in practice, and smacked of his personal élitism and ironically anti-federalist bias for political centralization, it was nonetheless consistent in principle with the kind of "organiz[ation]" the Militia employed in pre-constitutional times, when Rangers, Minutemen, and other highly trained units were formed within, but by themselves alone did not constitute the entirety of, the Militia. Thus, Hamilton provided no support for, but rather contradicted, the Heller majority's contention that "Congress retains plenary authority to organize the militia, which must include the authority to say who will belong to the organized force".

---

[3020] The Federalist No. 29.

As a capstone to that contradiction, upon ratification of the Constitution, Congress did not follow Hamilton's suggestion, but adopted a plan more in line with the pre-constitutional pattern.[3021] The Heller majority attempted to shore up its tottering house of argumentative cards by pointing out that the first Militia Act enrolled only "able-bodied white male citizens of the * * * states".[3022] This begged the question, however. For under the law and social mores of the time, Congress could have excluded all people of color from the Militia, not because it enjoyed the unfettered discretion to exclude anyone and everyone, but because those particular individuals were not considered part of "the body of the people" who comprised the Militia in the first place.[3023] People of color did not need to be affirmatively barred from the Militia to be excluded from enrollment—their race alone was usually the sufficient cause of that effect. Rather, they needed to be affirmatively included.

Seventh, to be sure, even if under the original Constitution Congress had properly "organiz[ed]" the entirety of "the Militia of the several States", depending upon circumstances it could still have "provide[d] for calling forth" only selected "Part[s] of them" to "be employed in the service of the United States". For example, if the problem at hand had been to "suppress [an] Insurrection[ ]" or "repel [an] Invasion[ ]", the first "Part" of the Militia "call[ed] forth" would surely have consisted of the mostly young, physically fit men equipped and trained as "an effective fighting force". Whereas, if the problem had been "to execute the Laws of the Union", men of different ages with different training would likely have been wanted. This obviously constitutional selectivity within the Militia is not what the Heller majority had in mind, however.

[3021] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271.

[3022] See 554 U.S. at 600 (Scalia, J., for the Court).

[3023] Compare and contrast Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 with Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393, 403-412 (1857) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

So, in this regard (as in many others), the opinion of the majority of the Justices in Heller must be condemned as pernicious.[3024] For, if Congress may exclude any eligible individual from the Militia, it may exclude just about everyone. In that case, no one can assert a constitutional right to participate in the Militia, just as no one can claim a constitutional right to participate in "Armies" or "a Navy" if Congress determines that it is not "necessary and proper" to create such establishments (although, in the case of "Armies" and "a Navy", the absence of such a constitutional right is plainly justified under any circumstances).[3025] Therefore, no one can assert a constitutional right to possess a first-class "Militia-grade" firearm—that is, a contemporary "military-grade" firearm. Which absence of right the majority of the Justices in Heller explicitly endorsed[3026]—in which endorsement, of course, the minority concurred, making unanimous the subversion of the Constitution on this point. And no one can assert a constitutional right to participate in the exercise the Militia's constitutional and statutory authority. Which means that, according to the entire Supreme Court in Heller, the only "militia" that can exist are such "'select' militia" as Congress deigns to create. Thus, once again, the Court has blatantly erased part of the Constitution from the pages of the United States Reports—adding further evidence to the indictment that the United States Reports are the most compendious, as well as the most transparent, work of poor legal fiction ever written.

(iii) The power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia". Because under the original Constitution Congress was obviously required to exercise all of the separate powers within the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" simultaneously or at least in some rational sequence; and because the power "[t]o provide for organizing" required the entirety of "the Militia"—that is, the whole "body of the people" (or, in Hamilton's phrase, the whole of "'the people at large'")—to be "organiz[ed]"; therefore the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" required that the entirety of the Militia—that is, the whole "body of the people"—be "arm[ed]" in some manner. So the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" could not have been mangled into a license for Members of Congress "[t]o [fail, neglect, or refuse in every way to] provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" either in whole or in part. Moreover, Members of Congress surely could not have affirmatively "[dis]arm[ed]" them. For that would effectively have destroyed "the Militia of the several States". But Congress could have claimed no more authority to destroy the Militia than to destroy any other parts of the States' governmental structures, or to destroy the States themselves, or [3024] Of course, the two opinions for the minority of the Justices were even worse. See 554 U.S. at 636-680 (Stevens, J., dissenting), 681-723 (Breyer, J., dissenting).

---

[3025] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13.

[3026] See 554 U.S. at 626-628 (Scalia, J., for the Court).

to destroy the Constitution's federal system of which the States and their Militia were installed as permanent components. Thus, inasmuch as every individual within "the body of the people" by definition was eligible for service in the Militia,[3027] Congress could not have denied "the people" a "right * * * to keep and bear Arms"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

Conceivably, Congress might have done nothing at all, simply allowing the States and "the people" to provide "the people" with whatever arms they thought fit and could acquire on their own. Such benign neglect, however, would not have promoted the uniformity in armaments "necessary and proper" in practice were Militia from different States "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States". So it was not the policy Congress adopted and followed for more than a century, while its Members still paid a modicum of attention to the Constitution.[3028] Only in 1903 did Congress introduce the policy of authorizing "the Secretary of War" "to issue" to the so-called "organized militia, to be known as the National Guard" "such number of the United States standard service magazine arms, with bayonets, bayonet scabbards, gun slings, belts, and such other necessary accouterments and equipments as are required for the Army of the United States"—while neither arming "the remainder [of the Militia] to be known as the Reserve Militia" out of the General Government's or the States' martial stores, nor explicitly directing the members of this "Reserve Militia" to arm themselves in the free market.[3029] In 1916, Congress renamed "the Reserve Militia" "the Unorganized Militia".[3030] So, today, the so-called "organized militia" (that is, the National Guard and the Naval Militia) is armed by Congress; whereas the so-called "unorganized militia", which consists of the vast majority of Americans eligible for the true Militia, is armed (if at all) by those Americans themselves, but at best only to the extent that various forms of "gun control" do not prevent them from acquiring sufficient arms.

Now, the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" under the original Constitution did not explicitly describe any particular types of arms. Self-evidently, however, they had to be arms suitable for "the Militia". In that era, though, just as they are today, all firearms were suitable for some kind of Militia service. Therefore, under the original Constitution, an effective "right of the people to keep

---

[3027] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3028] Compare An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271, with Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, § 1628, 18 Stat. 285, 285.

[3029] An Act To promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, Act of 21 January 1903, CHAP. 196, §§ 1 and 13, 32 Stat. 775, 775, 777.

[3030] An Act For making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, Act of 3 June 1916, CHAP. 134, § 57, 39 Stat. 166, 197.

and bear Arms" encompassed all firearms—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

Which means that, today, Congress may surely exercise its power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" in a protective fashion, so as to secure for Americans the possession of whatever firearms they may legally have acquired on their own by whatever means. In fact, Congress has provided that:

> (a) PROHIBITION ON CONFISCATION OF FIREARMS.—No officer or employee of the United States (including any member of the uniformed services), or person operating pursuant to or under color of Federal law, or receiving Federal funds, or under control of any Federal official, or providing services to such an officer, employee, or other person, while acting in support of relief from a major disaster or emergency, may—
>
> (1) temporarily or permanently seize, or authorize seizure of, any firearm the possession of which is not prohibited under Federal, State, or local law, other than for forfeiture in compliance with Federal law or as evidence in a criminal investigation;
>
> (2) require registration of any firearm for which registration is not required by Federal, State, or local law;
>
> (3) prohibit possession of any firearm, or promulgate any rule, regulation, or order prohibiting possession of any firearm, in any place or by any person where such possession is not otherwise prohibited by Federal, State, or local law; or
>
> (4) prohibit the carrying of firearms by any person otherwise authorized to carry firearms under Federal, State, or local law, solely because such person is operating under the direction, control, or supervision of a Federal agency in support of relief from the major disaster or emergency.
>
> (b) LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit any person in subsection (a) from requiring the temporary surrender of a firearm as a condition for entry into any mode of transportation used for rescue or evacuation during a major disaster or emergency, provided that such temporarily surrendered firearm is returned at the completion of such rescue or evacuation.
>
> (c) PRIVATE RIGHTS OF ACTION.—
>
> (1) IN GENERAL.—Any individual aggrieved by a violation of this section may seek relief in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress against any person who subjects such individual, or causes such individual to be subjected, to the deprivation > of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities secured by this section.

>
> (2) REMEDIES.—In addition to any existing remedy in law or equity, under any law, an individual aggrieved by the seizure or confiscation of a firearm in violation of this section may bring an action for return of such firearm in the United States district court in the district in which that individual resides or in which such firearm may be found.
>
> (3) ATTORNEY FEES.—In any action or proceeding to enforce this section, the court shall award the prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.[3031]

This statute is good as far as it goes. Its coverage is broad, extending to any "major * * * emergency"; to "any firearm the possession of which is not prohibited under Federal, State, or local law"; and to such standard means of "gun control" as seizure, registration, and prohibition of the possession and carrying of firearms. It even embraces a "major * * * emergency" in which some sort of "martial law" might be declared, because it applies, without exception, to each and every "officer or employee of the United States (including any member of the uniformed services)", which takes in both the regular Armed Forces and the National Guard. Nonetheless, the statute does not go far enough:

First, it applies only to individuals with some "Federal" connection. True enough, these days most State and Local police departments and other law-enforcement and emergency-services agencies are "receiving Federal funds", are being trained by various "Federal" agencies, and might likely come "under control of [some] Federal official, or provid[e] services to such an officer, employee, or other person, while acting in support of relief from a major disaster or emergency". Yet "emergenc[ies]" can readily be foreseen in which State and Local officials would act entirely on their own, with no "Federal" involvement. Under such circumstances, no reason exists to allow them to engage in any of the misbehavior this statute prohibits. Although Congress could eliminate this lacuna pursuant to its authority under Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment, as well as under its Militia Powers, the necessary legislation has yet to be enacted.

Second, the present statute applies to various "officer[s]", "employee[s]", or "person[s]" only "while [they are] acting in support of relief from a major disaster or emergency"—implying that those individuals might still be licensed to confiscate firearms in other situations. Far better would be for this or a new statute to deny the existence of such authority in all events—that is, to declare unequivocally that all Americans are entitled to and even should possess firearms, and that no American should ever be disarmed who is not charged with a crime and taken into custody, or not actually convicted of certain crimes, or not a visitor to a prison or like facility. After all, if confiscation of common Americans' firearms is improper in an admitted "emergency", how can it be any less so at all other times?

---

[3031] An Act Making appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes, Act of 4 October 2006, Pub. L. 109-295, TITLE V GENERAL PROVISIONS, § 557 [§ 706], 120 Stat. 1355, 1391-1392; now codified at 42 U.S.C. § 5207. See to similar effect Code of Virginia § 44-146.15(3), which exemplifies a State statute coming within the ken of § 557(a)(3).

Third, the present statute applies only to "any place * * * where such possession is not otherwise prohibited by Federal, State, or local law"—which leaves it open for officials to assert that confiscation is proper in so-called "gun-free zones". Inasmuch as the ultimate purpose of "gun controllers" is to expand such zones to the maximum degree politically possible, in principle this exception alone vitiates the entire statute.[3032]

Fourth, the statute seems to make a distinction between "possession of any firearm" and "carrying of firearms". Yet, self-evidently by dint of language and logic, an individual who is "carrying" a firearm must be in "possession" of it. So the statute should be read to say that "carrying of firearms by any person otherwise authorized to carry firearms under Federal, State, or local law" cannot be "prohibit[ed]" at all, even if "such person is operating under the direction, control, or supervision of a Federal agency". This should be constitutionally self-evident, too, because if individuals eligible for Militia service are "operating under the direction, control, or supervision of a Federal agency", and therefore under color of "Federal" law, then in a manner of speaking they have been "call[ed] forth * * * to execute the Laws of the Union", and in the performance of that duty should always be properly "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and discipline[d]", not ever "[dis]arm[ed]".[3033]

Fifth, in an apparent self-contradiction, the statute licenses various "officer[s]", "employee[s]", and "person[s]" to "requir[e] the temporary surrender of a firearm as a condition for entry into any mode of transportation used for rescue or evacuation". This is suspiciously peculiar, because it is precisely during a "rescue or evacuation" under "emergency" and therefore presumably chaotic conditions that displaced persons may most need their firearms to fend off human predators acting under color of law as well as in open violation of it. In addition, the statute nowhere guarantees that the firearms "temporarily surrendered" will travel along with their owners, so as to ensure and facilitate their immediate "return at the completion of such rescue or evacuation". Neither does the statute define what constitutes "the completion of such rescue or evacuation", or designate who shall determine when it has occurred. Moreover, if the "rescue or evacuation" transports an individual from a State or Locality in which he is legally entitled to possess some firearm into a State or Locality in which such possession is illegal or otherwise restricted, will the authorities in that place be entitled to confiscate his firearm? And may an individual refuse "rescue or evacuation" in the first place, precisely on the ground that he is not willing to "surrender[ ]" his firearm even "temporarily"?

---

[3032] See ante, at 1001-1007. See, e.g., Code of Virginia § 44-146.15(3).

[3033] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16. This, of course, is an hypothetical argument, because members of "the Militia of the several States" in actual service can never "operat[e] under the direction, control, or supervision of a Federal agency", only under "the direction, control, or supervision" of their own "Officers". See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16. And, as Militiamen in actual service, they can never be disarmed, either—because, if they were, they would hardly comprise "well regulated Militia". See U.S. Const. amend. II.

Sixth, the statute does provide judicial remedies for violations, but only at some indeterminate time in the future, perhaps long after the violations have occurred. This is hardly satisfactory, inasmuch as aspiring usurpers and tyrants may employ "a major * * * emergency" (which, of course, they may unilaterally declare) as the pretext for widespread confiscations of firearms, leading to the imposition of a full-blown police state in which the judicial remedies originally promised are later disallowed. "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is hardly secured by a purported judicial remedy that must fail, because the initial "infringe[ment]" of "the right" is aimed precisely at negating that remedy. In such a situation, the only security for "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is for "the people" to rely upon themselves, by never surrendering their "Arms" to anyone else in the first place, so that they will never find themselves in the position of suppliants having to rely upon judges in order to retrieve their "Arms" from some interlopers to whom the judges answer or by whom they can be overawed.

(iv) The power "[t]o provide for * * * disciplining, the Militia". Once again, because the original Constitution required Congress to exercise all of the separate but interrelated powers within its omnibus authority "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" simultaneously or at least in some rational sequence; and because the powers "to provide for organizing" and "arming" required the entirety of the Militia—that is, the whole of "the people at large"—to be "organiz[ed]" and "arm[ed]"; therefore the power "[t]o provide for * * * disciplining, the Militia" also required that the entirety of the Militia—that is, the whole of "the people at large"—be "disciplin[ed]" in some fashion. This, of course, followed as well from the definition common in those days of "a well regulated militia" being "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms",[3034] and the original Constitution's explicit recognition that "training" was part and parcel of "discipline" in its reference to "the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress", which it exclusively "reserv[ed] to the States respectively", each of which was to "train[ ]" her own Militia.[3035]

[3034] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 (emphasis supplied).

[3035] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

Interestingly, because the States were to take in charge the actual "training" of their Militia; and inasmuch as such "training" would have been largely useless, if not impossible of performance, without proper "organizing" and "arming", as well as "disciplining, the Militia"; therefore the States could have demanded that Congress should have fulfilled its responsibilities in those particulars. For, plainly, the original Constitution did not "reserv[e] * * * th[at] Authority" to the States while also licensing insouciant, incompetent, or ill-intentioned Members of Congress to render it nugatory. So, had Congress failed, neglected, or refused "[t]o provide for organizing" and "arming * * * the Militia", the States could have undertaken those tasks themselves, as the necessary predicates for their exercise of their "reserv[ed] * * *Authority of training the[ir] Militia"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

(v) The power "[t]o provide * * * for governing * * * Part of the[Militia]". Self-evidently, under the original Constitution, the successful exercise of the power "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the Militia as may be employed in the Service of the United States"[3036] depended upon Congress's proper exercise of the totality of its power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Milita", and on the States' due exercise of their own "Authority of training the Militia". Trying to "govern[ ] such Part of the[Militia] as m[ight have] be[en] employed in the Service of the United States" would have constituted a fool's errand indeed, had the men arrived in a state of utter confusion (that is, "[un]organiz[ed]"), poorly equipped (that is, "[un]arm[ed]"), and without at least rudimentary training (that is, "[un]disciplin[ed]"). Perhaps the power "[t]o provide * * * for governing" could have been invoked at that point, for the purpose of correcting those faults and filling in those lacunae at the last moment—but then it would in effect have amounted to an exercise, howsoever tardy, of the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia". So, under whatever circumstances might have obtained, the power "[t]o provide * * * for governing" would have relied upon, reinforced, or to some degree filled in for the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming" (and to the same effect as if the latter power had been exercised directly)—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

(vi) The power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia". Finally, under the original Constitution it would have been useless for Congress "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"[3037] had they consisted of nothing more than unstructured, unequipped, and uninstructed mobs. Indeed, in light of the three critical purposes for which the Militia might have been "call[ed] forth", leaving the Militia "[un]organiz[ed], "[un]arm[ed], [and un]disciplin[ed]" would have constituted at least criminal negligence, if not perhaps even "Treason". For example, if Members of Congress, either intentionally or with willful blindness towards or reckless disregard of the facts, had relegated the Militia to such a state of discombobulation as to be incapable of offering any assistance in "repel[ling] [an] Invasion[ ]" when "call[ed] forth" to do so, would those Members not have been guilty, by willful omission if not commission, of "adhering to the[ ] Enemies [of the United States], giving them Aid and Comfort"?[3038] Therefore, the ability to exercise the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" in a constitutionally effective manner depended upon the correct and complete exercise of the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

---

[3036] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3037] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

(vii) Intervention by the States and the President. Presumably, even had Congress shirked all of its responsibilities on this score, the Militia would have been at least rudimentarily prepared, because the States in their own self-interests would have "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" their Militia in order to provide Local "homeland security", which to some degree would have involved the Militia in exercises that stressed "execut[ing] the Laws * * * , suppress[ing] Insurrections and repel[ling] Invasions". This, too, would have occurred under the aegis of the original Constitution's incorporation of "the Militia of the several States" into its federal system—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

In addition, Congress could not have exercised unfettered discretion with respect to the powers "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", and "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions", because Congress was not the only coördinate branch of the General Government with a vital constitutional interest in the matter. As "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States",[3039] the President would desperately have needed "Militia" properly and sufficiently "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" in order to "suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions". And, to perform his duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed",[3040] he could have required the "actual Service[s]" of "Militia" capable of "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union". Presumably, then, in compliance with his "Oath or Affirmation * * * 'to the best of [his] Ability, [to] preserve, protect and defend the Constitution'",[3041] the President could and would have demanded that Congress provide him with such "Militia"; which Congress would have been required to do—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

[3038] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[3039] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3040] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3041] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 7.

(3) The status and duty of the President with respect to the Militia. Under the original Constitution, the President posed even less of a threat to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" than did Congress. For the President's only authority with respect to the Militia derived from: (i) his status as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States", which depended upon Congress's having "provide[d] for calling forth the Militia" for some constitutional purpose;[3042] and (ii) his duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed",[3043] which in some cases he could have fulfilled only with the assistance of "such Part of the[Militia] as m[ight have] be[en] employed in the Service of the United States" in the manner Congress established pursuant to its specific power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union".[3044]

From the beginning, the President's authority as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" was quite narrow. Under pre-constitutional Anglo-American imperial law, the King—not Parliament—enjoyed "the sole supreme government and command of the militia".[3045] But other than the office of "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States", the original Constitution denied the President—the executive in the American Union analogous to the King in the British Empire—this authority, and assigned it instead exclusively to Congress: namely, "the [King's] sole supreme government * * * of the militia" became the Congressional powers "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[3046] and "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States".[3047] The President retained no more than the King's status of "sole supreme * * * command[er] of the militia"—and even in that capacity always subject to the rules Congress promulgated "for governing such Part of the[Militia]" as might have come under the President's command when "employed in the Service of the United States". For the "powers actually granted" by the Constitution to any branch of the General Government "must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication".[3048] "[T]he President * * * possess[es] no power not derived from the Constitution."[3049] Consequently, "powers not granted are [3042] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

---

[3043] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3044] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 15.

[3045] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 262.

[3046] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3047] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3048] Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. (1 Wheaton) 304, 326 (1816).

[3049] Ex parte Quirin, 317 U.S. 1, 25 (1942).

prohibited".[3050] Whatever "Laws" might have been "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution * * * the Powers vested" in the President as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" were for Congress to enact.[3051] Moreover, as part of his duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed"[3052]—pursuant to his "Oath or Affirmation" that he would "'faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and w[ould] to the best of [his] Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States'"[3053]—the President was bound to conform to these limitations on his "Office".

Plainly, too, Congress could not have delegated, let alone abdicated, to the President any of its powers with respect to the Militia. First, notwithstanding their origin in British law, by their very placement in the Constitution these powers became "legislative Powers * * * vested in * * * Congress", not "executive Power * * * vested in [the] President".[3054] As a general matter, "[t]hat Congress cannot delegate [any] legislative power to the President is a principle [that has been] universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution".[3055] Second, and even more decisively, Congress could not have delegated to the President any of its powers with respect to the Militia in particular, because that would have reversed WE THE PEOPLE'S specific determination—consciously made in the face of and directly contrary to centuries of pre-constitutional Anglo-American legal tradition—to remove these powers from executive jurisdiction and transfer them to the legislative domain.

Thus, under color of the authority the original Constitution delegated to him, the President could have done nothing to interfere with "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not. He could not to any degree have disarmed the Militia as institutions, or "the people" possibly eligible for the Militia as individuals, because by any such usurpation he would have destroyed pro tanto the very forces the Constitution assigned to him as "Commander in Chief". Self-evidently, his status as "Commander in Chief" did not empower the President to disable himself from functioning as "Commander in Chief", by eliminating the very subjects of his command—particularly when those subjects were parts of the federal system entitled to at least the same constitutional permanence as the States, Congress, and "the Office of President" itself. Self-evidently, too, the part of the Constitution which designated the President as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States" did not

---

[3050] United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 68 (1936).

[3051] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3052] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3053] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 7.

[3054] Compare and contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 with art. II, § 1, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3055] Marshall Field & Company v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649, 692 (1892).

simultaneously license him effectively to nullify the other part of the Constitution which required him to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed"—let alone to negate his "Oath or Affirmation" to "'preserve, protect and defend the Constitution'"—by denying himself the very forces that might have been necessary to fulfill those duties. For no provision of the Constitution can "be so enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other".[3056]

In addition, the President could have claimed the status of "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States" only when they were "called into the actual Service of the United States".[3057] So if a rogue President had purported to call the Militia forth, but had commanded them to lay down their arms, that and any subsequent command predicated upon it could not have constituted the "actual Service of the United States", because such "Service" could not require the Militia to commit suicide by divesting themselves of the very implements that made them "Militia". Being other than "the actual Service of the United States", the Militia could have refused to perform it, not as an act of defiance or nullification, but as an act of enforcement, of the Constitution. Thus, "the people" themselves could have secured their "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" against even a rogue "Commander in Chief"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

Finally, under the original Constitution the President did enjoy the "Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties".[3058] But, inasmuch as no "Treaties" could then (or can now) override the Constitution,[3059] "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" could not have been held hostage to political deals contrived with foreign nations or international or supra-national organizations—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

b. The duty to maintain "a Republican Form of Government" in each State. The original Constitution commanded that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government"[3060]—and recognized no exception whatsoever from this duty. Therefore, every power of the General Government had to be so construed that its exercise could not have undermined "a Republican Form of Government" in any State, let alone in all of the States; and every disability of the General Government had to be so construed that

---

[3056] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[3057] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied). See ante, at 871-880.

[3058] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3059] See, e.g., Doe v. Braden, 57 U.S. (16 Howard) 635, 657 (1853); The Cherokee Tobacco, 78 U.S. (11 Wallace) 616, 620-621 (1871); Holden v. Joy, 84 U.S. (17 Wallace) 211, 242-243 (1872); Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 267 (1890); United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 701 (1898); Asakura v. City of Seattle, 265 U.S. 332, 341 (1924); United States v. Minnesota, 270 U.S. 181, 208 (1926); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 16-18 (1957) (opinion of Black, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

[3060] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

its enforcement would have supported "a Republican Form of Government" in every State.

When the Constitution was ratified in 1788, every American could easily have gleaned the interrelation between "a Republican Form of Government" and a Militia from both history and political science:

(1) American history provided "unmistakable evidence of what was republican in form, within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution", because in 1788 each of the States had "a Republican Form of Government".[3061] Leading up to that, each of the States (and, earlier, all but one of the Colonies) had long maintained Militia of a certain type as integral parts of their governmental structures. Indeed, the Articles of Confederation had required that "every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred".[3062] The Articles did not bother to define "a well regulated and disciplined militia", because everyone knew that such a "militia" was always "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms",[3063] according to the principles of the *pre-*constitutional Colonial and State Militia Acts. By the late 1780s, then, no one could have doubted that "a Republican Form of Government" in America meant a government which had settled a Militia of that type and only that type. So it was hardly accidental that the Constitution incorporated both the States and "the Militia of the several States" as permanent components of its federal system, and thereby protected the Militia within each State as a permanent component of the "Republican Form of Government" the United States were to "guarantee".

(2) American political science supported the same conclusion. In the late 1700s, the "definition of * * * a [republican] Government [wa]s * * * one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people".[3064] "Supreme Power" was a synonym for sovereignty. As Blackstone pointed out, > there is and must be in all [forms of government] * * * a supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority, in which * * * the rights of sovereignty, reside. And this authority is placed in those hands, wherein * * * the qualities requisite for supremacy, wisdom, goodness, and power, are the most likely to be found.[3065]

[3061] Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wallace) 162, 175-176 (1874).

[3062] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[3063] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3064] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (opinion of Wilson, J.).

[3065] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 49.

So "a Republican Form of Government" was one founded on popular sovereignty—the "supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority" in WE THE PEOPLE'S own hands. Every American knew, moreover, that "the Sword and Soveraignty always march hand in hand"[3066]—and from that insight would have taken to heart the ancient wisdom that "[w]hen the citizens govern for the public good * * * in such a state the profession of arms will always have the greatest share in the government".[3067] Therefore, an essential characteristic of "a Republican Form of Government" was "a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred", through which "the body of the people" wielded the Power of the Sword by their exercise of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms".

All that being so, if any State under the original Constitution had infringed her own people's "right * * * to keep and bear Arms"—and thereby undermined her own "Republican Form of Government"—"the people" could have demanded that the United States intervene to protect that "right" in order to "guarantee" that "Form of Government"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not. On the other side, the General Government was disabled from infringing "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" of the citizens of every State, because any such infringement would have contravened its duty to "guarantee to each State * * * a Republican Form of Government"—again, whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

c. The powers of Congress "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" and "[t]o regulate Commerce". Under the original Constitution, the General Government, through purported exercises of any of its other powers, could not have overridden the powers, duties, and disabilities of Congress with respect to the Militia, or the duty of the United States to "guarantee to each State in th[e] Union a Republican Form of Government" and therefore a proper Militia.

(1) General principles. In "vest[ing]" "[a]ll legislative Powers herein granted" in Congress,[3068] the original Constitution enumerated each of those "Powers" separately and independently of every other power, and directed each of them to a distinctly different subject. Thus, for pertinent examples, the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" appeared in one clause,[3069] the powers "[t]o regulate Commerce",[3070] "[t]o raise and support Armies",[3071] "[t]o provide and maintain a

---

[3066] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7.

[3067] Aristotle, Politics, Book III, Chapter VII, in A TREATISE ON GOVERNMENT OR, THE POLITICS OF ARISTOTLE, ante note 73, at 79.

[3068] U.S. Const. art. I, § 1.

[3069] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[3070] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

[3071] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

Navy",[3072] and "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" and "for * * * arming * * * the Militia"[3073] in other clauses. Sometimes, more than one power appeared in a single clause, because those particular powers were cognate. For instance, the original Constitution linked the power "[t]o coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin" in the same clause with the power "[t]o * * * fix the Standard of Weights and Measures", because "regulat[ing] the Value" of "Money" was a special case of "fix[ing] the Standard of Weights and Measures".[3074] And, of course, the specific power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" was conjoined with other particular powers "[t]o provide for organizing * * * and disciplining, the Militia", "for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States", and for "precrib[ing]" "the discipline" for "training the Militia"—because the subjects of all of these powers were the very same "Militia of the several States".[3075]

Certain fundamental principles informed this procedure:

First, no power could be taken to be, to any degree, unintelligible—because a statute couched "in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, violates the first essential of due process of law".[3076]

Second, the delegation of a power constituted the only, and the precise, definition of that power.

Third, the definition of a power excluded every authority not within that definition, and thereby established limitations on that power. Inherent in every power was a corresponding disability as to the subject of that power.

Fourth, the definition of one power constituted a limitation on all other powers. Inherent in each power were corresponding disabilities to be read into every other power with respect to the subject of the first power. For that reason, no power could have the capacity to add to, subtract from, frustrate, or negate any other power. And,

Fifth, because the definition of a power excluded every authority not within that definition, and because the definition of one power constituted a limitation on all other powers, therefore no supposed combination of any two or more powers could generate some purportedly new power (that is, the whole could never be greater than the sum of its parts).

[3072] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 13.

[3073] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3074] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 with E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 112-141.

[3075] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 with art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3076] Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926).

All of which can be compressed into the general rules, still applicable today, that "powers not granted are prohibited",[3077] and that all of "[t]he powers conferred upon the Congress are harmonious".[3078]

Thus, the original Constitution made crystal clear, for pertinent examples, that:

- "Armies" and "a Navy" were not "the Militia"—and therefore the special principles according to which "Armies" and "a Navy" were regulated could not be applied to regulation of "the Militia".

- "[T]he Militia" were not any form of "Commerce", but instead were component parts of the States' governments and potential instrumentalities of the General Government—and therefore "regulat[ions]" that might have been appropriate for "Commerce" were not appropriate for "the Militia".

- Although "lay[ing] and collect[ing] Taxes" might incidentally assist Congress in "regulat[ing] Commerce" and in "provid[ing] for * * * arming * * * the Militia", it was not a primary means for accomplishing either of those ends. And,

- No claim by Congress "t[o] lay and collect Taxes", "[t]o regulate Commerce", or "[t]o raise and support Armies" and "provide and maintain a Navy" could evade, frustrate, or contradict the duty of "the United States" to "guarantee to every State * * * a Republican Form of Government", including a properly organized, armed, trained, and otherwise disciplined "Militia".

Because "gun controls" emanating from the General Government in recent times have usually been rationalized as exercises of Congress's powers "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" and "[t]o regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States",[3079] consideration of these two provisions will adequately exemplify

---

[3077] United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 68 (1936).

[3078] Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330, 353 (1935).

[3079] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 1 and 3. See, e.g., as to taxation: AN ACT To provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof ("National Firearms Act"), Act of 26 June 1934, CHAPTER 757, 48 Stat. 1236; AN ACT To amend title 18, United States Code, to provide for better control of the interstate traffic in firearms ("Gun Control Act of 1968"), Act of 22 October 1968, Pub. L. 90-618, TITLE II—MACHINE GUNS, DESTRUCTIVE DEVICES, AND CERTAIN OTHER FIREARMS, 82 Stat. 1213, 1227. See, e.g., as to commerce: AN ACT To regulate commerce in firearms ("Federal Firearms Act"), Act of 30 June 1938, CHAPTER 850, 52 Stat. 1250; AN ACT To assist State and local governments in reducing the incidence of crime, to increase the effectiveness, fairness, and coordination of law enforcement and criminal justice systems at all levels of government, and for other purposes ("Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968"), Act of 19 June 1968, Pub. L. 90-351, TITLE IV—STATE FIREARMS CONTROL ASSISTANCE, 82 Stat. 197, 225; AN ACT To amend title 18, United States Code, to provide for better control of the interstate traffic in firearms ("Gun Control Act of 1968"), Act of 22 October 1968, why, quite contrary to the contemporary legal intelligentsia's suppositions and pretenses, the original Constitution, construed according to the principles just outlined, amounted to no less than a "bill of rights" with respect to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

(2) The power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes". Amazingly, in light of the prevalence of the notion that "gun control" can be effected under aegis of the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes", the very opposite conclusion stands out on the face of the original Constitution, when read as "those who framed and adopted it underst[ood its] * * * terms to designate and include".[3080]

(a) During the late 1700s no less than today, Americans knew perfectly well that a tax on some item or activity always decreases the amount of that item produced or the level of that activity undertaken in society. Through the imposition of a crushing financial burden, a tax can effectively prohibit its subject entirely.[3081] A tax can also be employed as a vehicle for imposing onerous regulations, restrictions, and supervision on the taxpayers.[3082] Parliament's so-called "Townshend Acts" had taught them as much.[3083] Thus they never doubted that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy", and "the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create".[3084] Moreover, they were aware that "[a] tax * * * does not become more constitutional because it is a small tax"[3085]—for "illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing * * * by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure".[3086]

All that being so, they would have inferred that the allowance of a power to tax the initial acquisition, continued possession, or use of firearms necessarily

---

Pub. L. 90-618, TITLE I—STATE FIREARMS CONTROL ASSISTANCE, 82 Stat. 1213, 1213; An Act To amend chapter 44 (relating to firearms) of title 18, United States Code, and for other purposes ("Firearms Owners' Protection Act"), Act of 19 May 1986, Pub. L. 99-308, 100 Stat. 449; An Act To control crime ("Crime Control Act of 1990"), Act of 29 November 1990, Pub. L. 101-647, TITLE XVII—GENERAL PROVISIONS, § 1702 ("Gun-Free School Zones Act of 1990"), 104 Stat. 4789, 4844; An Act To control and prevent crime ("Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994"), Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, TITLE XI—FIREARMS, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons ("Public Safety and Recreational Firearms Use Protection Act"), 108 Stat. 1796, 1996; An Act Making omnibus consolidated appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1997, and for other purposes, Act of 30 September 1996, TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS, § 657 [reënactment of "Gun-Free Schools Zones Act of 1990"], 110 Stat. 3009, 3009-369.

[3080] Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429, 558 (1895).

[3081] Today, see, e.g., McCray v. United States, 195 U.S. 27, 56-61 (1904); United States v. Sanchez, 340 U.S. 42, 44-45 (1950).

[3082] Today, see, e.g., Felsenheld v. United States, 186 U.S. 126, 131-134 (1902); In re Kollock, 165 U.S. 526, 536-537 (1897).

[3083] See, e.g., John Dickinson, Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies, Historical Introduction by R.T.H. Halsey (New York, New York: The Outlook Co., 1903).

[3084] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 431 (1819).

[3085] Forsyth County, Georgia v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 136 (1992).

[3086] Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616, 635 (1886).

implied the acceptance of some degree of politically imposed disarmament across society. And at the limit complete disarmament. For, if a tax could be imposed on the acquisition, possession, or use of any firearm then it could be imposed on all firearms; and if it could be imposed to any degree of financial burden then it could be imposed even to the extent of effective prohibition. Thus, if public officials could tax firearms for the specific purpose or with the inevitable effect of inhibiting (let alone prohibiting) their acquisition, possession, and transfer by and among private citizens—and under color of such taxes could regulate the private possession of firearms with strict requirements for the sort of licensing and registration usurpers and tyrants would find most expedient in order to expand their powers and cement their rule—they could "defeat and render useless" or even entirely destroy the Militia.

So, knowing that "the legality of [any governmental] power must be estimated not by what it will do but by what it can do",[3087] Americans would have concluded that no government should be trusted with a power to tax WE THE PEOPLE'S acquisition, possession, or use of firearms, or under color of taxation to regulate those activities—at least with respect to such firearms as THE PEOPLE might hold for Militia purposes. And as the set of such firearms then included essentially every working firearm, for all practical purposes no such power to tax could have existed.

(b) Reading the original Constitution in 1788, any legally and historically literate American would have recognized that WE THE PEOPLE had provided for exactly that result. Although it was potentially dangerous, the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" was not an omnipotent authority the Constitution had set above everything else, but merely one power of the new General Government among many. No less than any other power, it was subject to the rule that all "fundamental [constitutional] principles are of equal dignity, and n[one] must be enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other".[3088]

Americans would have read that the Constitution delegated to Congress the power specifically "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia". And they would have construed those words in terms of the operational definition of "Militia" drawn from *pre-*constitutional Colonial and State laws, which uniformly required almost all individuals within "the body of the people" to acquire, permanently possess, and usually own firearms, ammunition, and related accoutrements suitable for Militia service. Because they knew that the Constitution could not be self-contradictory, Americans would have deduced that the "[a]ffirmative words" of that clause had to be "negative of other objects than those affirmed", and an "exclusive sense [had to] be given to them",[3089] and that therefore those words defined not simply an explicit power—"[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia", but also an implicit reciprocal disability—"[not t]o provide for [dis]arming" or "[not t]o provide [against] * * * arming * * * the Militia".[3090]

---

[3087] Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, 162 (1921) (McKenna, J., dissenting).

[3088] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

At that point, everyone would have realized that, inasmuch as a fictional power for "[dis]arming * * * the Militia" was incapable of being interpolated into the real power "[t]o provide for * * * arming" them, which at least specifically referred to "arm[s]", it could not conceivably be insinuated into the Constitution anywhere else through the backhanded agency of other powers not specifically related to "arm[s]". For WE THE PEOPLE would never have precluded the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" from negating itself, while at the same time allowing other powers, unrelated to the Militia, to negate it. That is, the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" imposed on all other powers the selfsame limitation it imposed on itself. Which meant that the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" could not be used in effect "[t]o provide for * * * [dis]arming * * * the Militia", or "[t]o provide for * * * [dis]arming" anyone within "the body of the people" who were eligible for the Militia.

In addition, Americans would have observed that Congress's power was not simply "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" for any reason at all, but instead "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" for three particular purposes only: "to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States".[3091] Not only that. WE THE PEOPLE considered this limitation on the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" so consequential that they included it in the Constitution twice: once in general in the Preamble, which identified "provid[ing] for the common defence" as one of the purposes of the entire Constitution, and therefore as a direction for and limitation on the exercise of all constitutional powers;[3092] and again specifically in the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" itself. And from this express limitation set out in its very delegation, Americans would have inferred that the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" is utterly incapable, by constitutional definition, of being employed "to * * * provide [against] the common Defence".

Now, the original Constitution itself declared that one vitally important power for effectuating "the common Defence" was "[t]o provide for * * * arming

---

[3089] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1803).

[3090] As a famous example of this principle's application in modern times, Congress cannot invoke its power "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States" in order to repudiate public debts incurred under color of that very same power. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2, applied in Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330, 350-354 (1935), discussed in E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1191-1204.

[3091] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3092] Compare Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheaton) 1, 188-189 (1824), with W. Crosskey, Politics and the Constitution, ante note 206, Volume 1, at 363-379.

* * * the Militia", and therefore arming "the body of the people". Consequently, that power had to be interpolated affirmatively into the power "to lay and collect Taxes", so that in this particular the latter in effect read: "[t]o lay and collect Taxes * * * to provide for [arming * * * the Militia, and therefore 'the body of the people']". And that power had to be interpolated negatively into the power "to lay and collect Taxes" as an explicit limitation thereupon or disability thereof, so that the latter in effect read: "[t]o lay and collect Taxes * * * [but not] to provide for * * * [disarming the Militia or 'the body of the people']". The only possible alternative was to misread the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes"—notwithstanding its own internal self-constraint, as well as the external constraints derived from the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" as well as from the Preamble—as capable of overriding the power "for * * * arming". This was plainly inadmissible, though, because it would have entailed, not only the general blunder of construing one provision of the Constitution so as to confound two others, but also the particular idiocy of construing that provision of the Constitution so as to negate one of its very own explicit objects, and thereby to negate itself!

Thus, the original Constitution established a triple negative on the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" where firearms were concerned. That power could not possibly have been applied to WE THE PEOPLE'S acquisition, possession, and use of firearms suitable for Militia service, because: (i) the Constitution declared in its Preamble that "to * * * provide for the common defence" was a condition of its delegation of every power to the General Government; (ii) the Constitution explicitly defined and thereby limited the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes * * * to * * * provide for the common Defence"; and (iii) the disability as to "[dis]arming" that arose directly out of the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" (as well as the effect of the Preamble on that power) had to be interpolated into the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes". And if Congress could not have applied its power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" to firearms suitable for Militia service in the first place, it could not have subjected any such firearms to "regulations" under color of a scheme of supposed "taxation", either. Rather, any such manifest abuse of the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes"—for it could hardly have been explained away as a merely negligent misuse of that power, being in blatant violation of WE THE PEOPLE'S pellucid three-fold prohibition in the Constitution—would have amounted to "imposing Taxes on us without our Consent", a political crime familiar to all Americans as one of the most damning charges "the good People of the[ ] Colonies" had leveled against King George III in the Declaration of Independence.

(c) Even if under the original Constitution Congress could have refused "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" itself, its disability to disarm common Americans by taxing their acquisition, possession, and use of firearms suitable for Militia service would nevertheless have remained fully operative. For the Constitution incorporated into its federal system "the Militia of the several States",[3093] which the States were constitutionally authorized and required to maintain no matter what Congress might have failed, neglected, or refused to do. Therefore the States could have designated as "Militia" arms whatever firearms and ammunition in WE THE PEOPLE'S hands they deemed necessary to their security, thereby rendering those arms the equipment of State establishments engaged in the performance of State governmental functions, and as a consequence absolutely immunizing from taxation by the General Government the production, acquisition, possession, and use of those arms for and by members of those establishments. Against such a State designation, Congress could have done nothing: For "the instrumentalities, means and operations whereby the States exert the governmental powers belonging to them are * * * exempt from taxation by the United States"—and "[t]he maintenance of a police service by * * * [a State] * * * is a governmental function" which "extends * * * to the purchase of equipment and supplies needed to render the particular service efficient".[3094] Indeed, in later years, Congress itself recognized by statute its constitutional disability to tax the States on this score.[3095]

(d) Being familiar with fines levied against Militiamen for infractions of their duties during *pre-*constitutional times, Americans in 1788 would have presumed that Congress could have relied upon fines as means "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States".[3096] In fact, Congress did not explicitly mandate any fines in its first Militia Act in 1792[3097]—although States such as Rhode Island and Virginia on their initiatives provided for fines in the Militia Acts they subsequently enacted in pursuance of the Congressional statute.{EN-2054} In any event, the power of Congress in that regard would not have supported the

---

[3093] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3094] Indian Motorcycle Company v. United States, 283 U.S. 570, 575, 579 (1931).

[3095] E.g., AN ACT To provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof ("National Firearms Act"), Act of 26 June 1934, CHAPTER 757, § 13, 48 Stat. 1236, 1240 ("[t]his Act shall not apply to the transfer of firearms * * * to * * * any State * * * or to any political subdivision thereof"); AN ACT To amend title 18, United States Code, to provide for better control of the interstate traffic in firearms ("Gun Control Act of 1968"), Act of 22 October 1968, Pub. L. 90-618, TITLE II—MACHINE GUNS, DESTRUCTIVE DEVICES, AND CERTAIN OTHER FIREARMS, § 5853(a) and (b), 82 Stat. 1213, 1233-1234 ("[a] firearm may be transferred without the payment of a transfer tax * * * to any State, * * * any political subdivision thereof, or any official police organization of such a government entity engaged in criminal investigations"; and "[a] firearm made be made without payment of the making tax * * * by, or on behalf of, any State, * * * any political subdivision thereof, or any official police organization of such a government entity engaged in criminal investigations").

[3096] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3097] See An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXIII, 1 Stat. 271.

inference that Congress could "lay and collect Taxes" with respect to firearms, ammunition, and necessary accoutrements suitable for the Militia.

True enough, then just as now, a "fine" and a "tax" were economically equivalent in general principle, because both: (i) imposed financial burdens on, and thereby prohibited or at least created disincentives against, some activity; and (ii) collected revenue to be applied to some public purposes. Legally, politically, and practically, however, as to the Militia they would have been recognized as so completely distinguishable from each other that no one would have thought it sensible to conflate or interchange the two terms. After all, the Colonies and independent States imposed "fines" within their Militia solely in order to improve the Militia's performance. Specifically, "fines" were levied against Militiamen who failed to obtain firearms, to maintain them in their own personal possession, or to bring them into the field in good working order when called forth for duty. The goal was to create strong disincentives against individuals' voluntarily disarming themselves. Moreover, "fines" were usually paid into the Militia and applied to their peculiar expenses—typically, for the purchase of arms.[3098] In contradistinction to "fines", if true to their normal office (and particularly to the purposes for which they are levied these days) "taxes" would have been imposed on the Militia in order to impair their performance. With respect to firearms specifically, "taxes" would have been designed to punish some individuals for, and to deter or impede others from, acquiring or maintaining personal possession of firearms—that is, to promote *dis*armament of individuals against their wills. If the "taxes" had been extensive in scope, so too would have been the resulting disarmament. Moreover, receipts from such "taxes" would not have been applied to the Militia's costs. The Colonies and independent States, however, not only imposed no "taxes" on individuals as a condition precedent to or as a consequence of their acquiring, possessing, or using firearms, but also used funds derived from other "taxes" for the very purpose of purchasing firearms for poor citizens' use—so that "taxes" facilitated, rather than hindered, WE THE PEOPLE'S "right * * * to keep and bear Arms".[3099]

(e) Finally, Americans in 1788 would also have been familiar with the protection the pre-constitutional Colonial and State Militia Acts had provided for individuals' possession of firearms against various sorts of monetary judgments.[3100] So, they would have expected that Congress, in the exercise of its power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" could have done the same, even with respect to taxes. Which, of course, is exactly what Congress did provide, in its very first Militia Act: "[E]very citizen * * * enrolled [in the Militia], and providing himself with the arms, ammunition and accoutrements required * * * , shall hold

---

[3098] See ante, at 158-160 (Rhode Island) and 692-696 (Virginia).

[3099] See ante, at 160-161 (Rhode Island) and 424-428 (Virginia).

[3100] See ante, at 295-296 (Rhode Island); 460-463 and 715-717 (Virginia).

the same exempted from all suits, distresses, executions or sales, for debt or for the payment of taxes".[3101]

In sum, under the original Constitution, proper exercises of the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes * * * to * * * provide for the common Defence" could not have "infringed", but would have protected, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not.

(3) The power "[t]o regulate Commerce". Just as "the power to tax involve[d] the power to destroy",[3102] so, too, under the original Constitution the power "[t]o regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes"[3103] entailed the power to restrain or even prohibit "Commerce" in pernicious articles or activities in order to prevent criminality, immorality, public nuisances, or other evils or harms from spreading throughout the Union.[3104] Nonetheless, the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" "d[id] not carry with it the right to destroy or impair those limitations and guarantees which [we]re also placed in the Constitution"—or, later on, "in any of the amendments to that instrument".[3105]

Of course, it would have been just as easy in 1788 as it was in 1934 or 1968 for aspiring usurpers to concoct some chain of spurious reasoning to float the fiction that the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" licensed Congress to enact "gun control". For example, (i) firearms must be manufactured and distributed; (ii) typically, this occurs in the free market; (iii) even if a firearm is manufactured, marketed, and kept within only one State, that process results in some other firearm's not being transported from some other State to the first State for such use; thus, (iv) all firearms are the subjects of "Commerce", directly or indirectly; for that reason, (v) all firearms fall within the power of Congress to "regulate"; (vi) "regulat[ion]" can include licensing and even prohibition; (vii) Congress's "Laws" are supreme over the State's laws; therefore, (viii) comprehensive National "gun control" is permissible. It would also have been no less easy in 1788 than it is today, though, to point out

---

[3101] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 272 (emphasis supplied). Continued, Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, § 1628, 18 Stat. 285, 285. Something of this protection still exists in the provision of the General Government's tax code that "[t]here shall be exempt from levy * * * [s]o much of the fuel, provisions, furniture, and personal effects in the taxpayer's household, and of arms for personal use, livestock, and poultry of the taxpayer, as does not exceed $6,250 in value". 26 U.S.C. § 6334 (emphasis supplied).

[3102] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 431 (1819).

[3103] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

[3104] See, e.g., Champion v. Ames, 188 U.S. 321, 354-364 (1903); Brooks v. United States, 267 U.S. 432, 436-439 (1925); and United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 113-115 (1941), which correctly stated the principle, even if perhaps they did not properly apply it.

[3105] United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 571 (1898). Accord, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 479 (1894).

that, had such contentions been correct, then the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" would have amounted to a power over the Militia with respect to firearms far broader than the actual power the Constitution explicitly delegated to Congress, because the Constitution specifically limited that power "[t]o provide for * * * arming", rather than extending to Congress an open-ended license to "regulate" in any way that struck its Members' fancies. Self-evidently, the narrow power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" would have been unnecessary if the broad power "[t]o regulate Commerce" encompassed every possible aspect of access to, or denial of, arms. In which case, the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming" would have been, not only superfluous, but no less than a fraudulent misstatement that, by drawing the reader's attention to those specific words, concealed Congress's actual, albeit recondite, authority under the general terms "[t]o regulate Commerce". Americans in 1788, however, would never have "presumed that any clause in the constitution [wa]s intended to be without [its own particular] effect".[3106] And certainly—although they were undoubtedly aware of the legal maxim fraus in generalibus latet[3107]—they would have rejected with scorn the suggestion that the Framers had included in the Constitution the general power "[t]o regulate Commerce" (or anything else) with the intention to bamboozle future generations with respect to other powers that were set out in their own specific terms. From the original Constitution's very structure and terms, Americans would immediately have concluded that the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" was utterly inapplicable both to the Militia themselves and to whomever and whatever were inextricably connected to the Militia and their operations. In particular, that the original Constitution precluded all ostensibly "commercial" controls with respect to firearms which were suitable for Militia service and to individuals who were actual or potential members of the Militia.

(a) The Militia not "Commerce", but "government". Most obviously, the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" under the original Constitution could not have encompassed either the Militia, or "the body of the people" who composed or were eligible for the Militia, or the equipment without which the Militia could not have functioned.

(i) Self-evidently, "the Militia of the several States" could not have been comprehended within the term "Commerce" in 1788, because they were not, in any capacity or for any purpose, mere private entities, but at all times and for all purposes were integral parts of each State's "Republican Form of Government", and some of the time could have functioned as instrumentalities of the Union

---

[3106] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1803). Accord, Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 151-152 (1926); Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 87 (1900); Blake v. McClung, 172 U.S. 239, 260-261 (1898); Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 572-573 (1933).

[3107] "Fraud is concealed in generalities."

"employed in the Service of the United States" for certain National purposes.[3108] And for Americans of that era, "Commerce" and "Government" were conceptions distinctly separate in both fact and law.

"Commerce" was generally defined as "exchange of one thing for another; interchange of any thing; trade; traffick"[3109]—whereas "government" was defined as the "[f]orm of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority", "[a]n establishment of legal authority", the "[a]dministration of publick affairs", and "[a]n established state of legal authority".[3110] In terms of legal particulars, Blackstone described "the King of England's prerogative, so far as it related to mere domestic commerce", under three heads: namely,

> • "the establishment of public marts, or places of buying and selling, such as markets and fairs";
>
> • "the regulation of weights and measures", which, "for the advantage of the public, ought to be universally the same, throughout the kingdom; being the general criterions which reduce all things to the same or an equivalent value"; and
>
> • "money [a]s the medium of commerce", which "it is the king's prerogative, as the arbiter of domestic commerce, to give it authority or make it current".[3111]

Thus, as a matter of law, Americans in the late 1700s understood "Commerce" as akin to what contemporary economists call "the market economy", based upon places and procedures for exchanges of goods and services, physical standards for trade, and a socially accepted medium of exchange. In addition, Americans knew "Commerce" to be distinct from, and subordinate to, "government"—because Blackstone described the King as "the arbiter of commerce";[3112] and an "arbiter" was generally understood to be "[o]ne who has the power of direction or regulation".[3113] In the original Constitution, these principles found their embodiments in the delegations to Congress of the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" (Blackstone's "public marts, or places of buying and selling"),[3114] and the cognate powers "[t]o * * * fix the Standard of Weights and Measures" (Blackstone's "regulation of weights

---

[3108] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1; art. IV, § 4; and art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3109] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, the sole definition in the First Edition (1755) and definition 1 in the Fourth Edition (1773).

[3110] Id., definitions 1 through 3 in the First Edition (1755) and definition 2 in the Fourth Edition (1773).

[3111] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 274, 276.

[3112] Id., Volume 1, at 273 (emphasis supplied).

[3113] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definition 2 in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

[3114] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

and measures") and "[t]o coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin" (Blackstone's "give [money] authority or make it current").[3115]

(ii) Inasmuch as "the Militia" were not "Commerce", the appearances in public of individuals eligible for or actually enrolled in the Militia, in anticipation or fulfillment of their Militia duties, with firearms and ammunition suitable for Militia service were not "Commerce" either. A fortiori when those individuals simply possessed such firearms and ammunition in their own homes. Thus, no "keep[ing] and bear[ing of] Arms" by "the body of the people"[3116] could have been the subject of Congress's power "[t]o regulate Commerce", any more than the keeping and bearing of arms by members of the regular Armed Forces could have constituted "Commerce".

(iii) Although Americans in 1788 doubtlessly accepted that, in many if not most cases, activities within the free market were properly the subjects of the power "[t]o regulate Commerce", they also knew that activities within the free market closely connected to the Militia constituted a special case, because in that particular an inextricable partnership existed between the economic and political spheres of human endeavor which necessarily removed arms suitable for the Militia from the category of "Commerce" altogether. During the *pre-*constitutional era, the Colonies and the independent States had provided for arming their Militiamen primarily by requiring them as individuals to furnish themselves with firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements through the free market.[3117] Over the course of decades and generations, a striking interdependence had developed: The extent of the free market in arms had come to depend upon the demand for arms from the Militia, while the effectiveness of the Militia had come to depend upon the supply of arms from the free market. And American governments had made sure both that most individuals among "the body of the people" would procure their arms in the market, and that the market could function with efficiency sufficient to provide the arms "the people" needed. Indeed, even early on, the free market in arms had become so essential to the proper regulation of all of the Colonial and State Militia that it had in effect been adopted as a working component of America's governmental structures everywhere. In incorporating "the Militia of the several States" into the constitution's federal system, WE THE PEOPLE took to heart this lesson of history: A well-functioning free market in which individuals who are eligible for the Militia can obtain firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements suitable for Militia service is absolutely necessary for the Militia to function properly.

[3115] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5.

[3116] Compare U.S. Const. amend. II with Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3117] See ante, Chapters 6, 7, 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Any regulation of that market—with respect to either the individuals or the arms—would necessarily have affected each and every one of the Militia as a Militia. And, insofar as "the Militia of the several States" were parts of the States' permanent governmental establishments, any such regulation would necessarily have affected each and every one of the States as a State. Thus, because the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" under the original Constitution was, by its own definition, neither the power "[t]o regulate [the Militia of the several States]" nor the power "[t]o regulate [the States themselves]" it could not have reached the free market in arms through the indispensable assistance of which the Militia, and the States through their Militia, exercised their constitutional prerogatives.

(b) The Militia not "Commerce * * * among the several States". If the unbridgeable gulf between "the Militia of the several States" and "Commerce" was apparent to every legally literate American in 1788, that the Militia could not have been treated as "Commerce among the several States" must have been even more glaringly patent. Had Harvard Law School then existed, no one would have needed to attend it to have learned that, if WE THE PEOPLE had meant to empower Congress "[t]o regulate" all "Commerce", they would have delegated simply the power "[t]o regulate Commerce". "[T]he enumeration of the particular classes of commerce * * * would not have been made, had the intention been to extend the power to every description. The enumeration presuppose[d] something not enumerated".[3118] The added words "with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes" were terms of specific limitation. Thus, the phrase "among the several States" plainly implied "Commerce" that involved activity occurring in more than one State at the same time or in the course of the same extended transaction. Had WE THE PEOPLE intended to empower Congress "[t]o regulate Commerce" wholly inside any one State alone, their natural choice of words would have been "within the several States", because physically all domestic "Commerce" must take place somewhere, whether it be interstate or intrastate.

> Comprehensive as the word "among" is, it may very properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more States than one. * * * The genius and character of the whole [General G]overnment seem to be, that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the nation, and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally; but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere, for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the [General G]overnment. The completely internal commerce of a State, then, may be considered as reserved for the State itself.[3119]

[3118] Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1, 194-195 (1824).

[3119] Id.

Now, every free White adult American of the constitutional era knew, in the case of males from their own direct personal experience, that each of "the Militia of the several States" was the Militia of a single State. Unless it were "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States",[3120] each Militia's origin, authority, and operations were and would remain "completely within a particular State", would "not affect other States", and would "be considered as reserved for th[at] State [her]self". So even if the operations of "Militia" in principle somehow fell within the broad category "Commerce", the operations of each actual Militia in each of the several States were not "Commerce among the several States"—and not being the latter could not be "regulate[d]" simply because they could have been comprehended within the general rubric "Commerce" alone. Moreover, if some of the Militia were "call[ed] forth" "in the service of the United States"—and as a result then temporarily performed functions "among the several States"—nonetheless Congress was "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of them" as Militia,[3121] not to "regulate" them as "Commerce". In addition, no two or more States by themselves could have called together their Militia in some ad hoc enterprise, because the original Constitution prohibited each State, "without the Consent of Congress", from "enter[ing] into any Agreement or Compact with another State".[3122] Had Congress granted such "Consent", though, it would have provided such a dispensation through the exercise of its power "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution th[at] * * * Power [of 'Consent']"[3123] with respect to its power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia", not its power "[t]o regulate Commerce". And certainly no "Agreement or Compact" among two or more States, so sanctioned by Congress, could rationally have been deemed "Commerce" in any event.

(c) No "regulat[ion of] Commerce" in "Arms" suitable for the Militia but what was permissible under the power and duty "[t]o provide for * * * arming". Americans in 1788 would have accepted the generality that the power "[t]o regulate Commerce", "like all others vested in Congress, * * * acknowledge[d] no limitations, other than [we]re prescribed in the [original] constitution".[3124] As to the Militia, however, the question would have remained: "What were those limitations?" The answer was that, because "[t]he powers conferred upon the Congress [we]re harmonious",[3125] Congress could not have "regulate[d] Commerce" in a manner that negated any of its other powers and especially that contravened

---

[3120] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3121] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3122] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3123] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3124] Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheaton) 1, 196 (1824).

[3125] Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330, 353 (1935).

any of its duties. Thus, even if the "keep[ing] and bear[ing of] Arms" suitable for Militia service by "the people" eligible for the Militia—and therefore the production, distribution, and acquisition of such "Arms" in the free market—could have been taken in some sense to constitute "Commerce", the ostensible authority of Congress to "regulate" those matters would have been circumscribed and controlled in several ways:

(i) By the duty of "the United States"—and therefore of Congress, too—to "guarantee to every State in th[e] Union a Republican Form of Government".[3126] For under the original Constitution a "militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms",[3127] was an integral component of "a Republican Form of Government".[3128] And what "the United States" needed to "guarantee" with respect to the Militia was not left to conjecture under the power "[t]o regulate Commerce", but was specifically spelled out in other powers of Congress and in the status of the President.[3129]

(ii) Importantly, this result would have obtained even in the absence in the original Constitution of an explicit "guarantee" of "a Republican Form of Government". For any permissible Congressional intervention in the free market for firearms would have had to have found its source, substance, and operation in the power explicitly directed to that very subject, and in the specific manner that power was to be exercised, rather than in some other power addressed to an amorphous subject, and the possible exercises of which were undefined—in this case, the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" in particular, rather than the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" in general. After all, the original Constitution was not legally psychotic. It did not delegate to Congress the explicit, specific power and duty "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" while simultaneously delegating an implicit (but supposedly superior) license to "[dis]arm[ ] * * * the Militia" through "regulat[ions of] Commerce". The power of Congress "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" defined and thereby constrained its power "[t]o regulate Commerce" in arms suitable for Militia service. No such "regulat[ion]" could have extended beyond what Congress could have done under its power "[t]o provide for * * * arming"—that is, the only proper "regulat[ion]" of such "Commerce" would have been to assist in (or at least not to interfere with) "arming" WE THE PEOPLE, rather than "[dis]arming" them. This, of course, would have entailed not merely allowing the free market to function with the least degree of hindrance, but also encouraging, fostering, and even relying upon the market.

[3126] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3127] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3128] See ante, at 890-893, 921-922, 1038-1040, 1301-1307, 1451-1453, and 1497-1499.

[3129] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

(iii) The principle that all of Congress's powers were "of equal dignity", and none could have been "enforced [so] as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other"[3130] also appeared in the power of Congress the power "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution * * * [its other delegated] Powers".[3131] Under color of this power Congress could not have enacted some "Law[ ]" supposedly "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" one of its "Powers" that simultaneously was "[un]necessary and [im]proper for carrying into Execution" some other "Power[ ]", because it would have negated, frustrated, or interfered with the "Execution" of the first "Power[ ]". Thus, the standard for what amounted to a "necessary and proper" "regulat[ion of] Commerce" in firearms had to be that "regulat[ion's]" perfect coincidence with Congress's power and duty "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia". Applied to the same subject at the same time, both of those powers would have had to be capable of being "carr[ied] into Execution" with the very same result, or the exercise of the more general power ("[t]o regulate Commerce") would have had to be denounced as "[un]necessary and [im]proper" in relation to the more specific power.

So, even if under the original Constitution Congress could have "regulate[d]" firearms and ammunition suitable for Militia service pursuant to its power over "Commerce", it would have been obliged to "regulate" them only so as to "arm[ ]", or so as to facilitate or otherwise aid in "arming", or at least so as to leave alone with the "arm[s]" they already possessed or could have acquired on their own every able-bodied adult American eligible for service in the Militia. But, if the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" could not have been exercised to impose restraints on "the people" beyond what would have been permissible under the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia", then, as to the free market in firearms, the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" was simply irrelevant. The power "[t]o provide for * * * arming" covered the field. It and it alone was the original Constitution's special "regulat[ion] of Commerce" with respect to firearms suitable for Militia service in the hands of individuals eligible for the Militia.

(d) Permissible "regulat[ions of] Commerce" in firearms. Nonetheless, under the original Constitution, Congress did enjoy a power "[t]o regulate Commerce * * * among the several States" which involved firearms *un*suitable for Militia service, or individuals *in*eligible for the Militia. For example—

(i) Although the category of truly "unsuitable" firearms would have been quite narrow, Congress could certainly have penalized, or even prohibited, the marketing of palpably unsafe firearms, or the employment of false or deceptive advertising in the marketing of any firearms.

[3130] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[3131] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

(ii) The category of "unsuitable" firearms would surely also have included stolen firearms being trafficked from State to State by people who enjoyed no claim of right to possess them.[3132]

(iii) Controls over "Commerce" in firearms "among the several States" could have been justifiable, too, had they been specifically limited to "criminals" whose sentences had excluded them from the Militia, "juveniles" not old enough to serve in the Militia but who had sought to acquire firearms without the knowledge or consent of their parents or guardians, certain types of "mental defectives" who had been exempted or excluded from the Militia on the grounds of their conditions (of course, on the basis of sufficient psychiatric evidence submitted pursuant to the full panoply of due process of law), and "armed groups" which had attempted without warrant to "supplant the functions of duly constituted public authorities" (that is, insurrectionists) the actions of which the Militia might have been called upon to suppress.[3133]

In sum, under the original Constitution, no proper exercise of the power "[t]o regulate Commerce * * * among the several States" could have infringed "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—whether the Second Amendment had existed or not. The original "Constitution [wa]s itself, in every rational sense, and to every useful purpose, A BILL OF RIGHTS" with respect to that particular "right".[3134]

2. The additional effect of the Second Amendment. Although the original Constitution did secure to WE THE PEOPLE what amounted to a complete "right * * * to keep and bear Arms", the Second Amendment added important elements of constitutional elucidation and protection:

> • Elucidation, by explicitly connecting in a single constitutional provision "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" to "[a] well regulated Militia", and "[a] well regulated Militia" to "the security of a free State". These connections were less obvious, and to some degree only implicit, in the original Constitution. By historical definition, "the body of the people, trained to arms" comprised the Militia in every State;[3135] and the original Constitution established both that "the Militia of the several States" were necessary "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections

---

[3132] See, e.g., AN ACT To regulate commerce in firearms ("Federal Firearms Act"), Act of 30 June 1938, CHAPTER 850, § 2(g) and (h), 52 Stat. 1250, 1251.

[3133] See, e.g., AN ACT To assist State and local governments in reducing the incidence of crime, to increase the effectiveness, fairness, and coordination of law enforcement and criminal justice systems at all levels of government, and for other purposes ("Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Acts of 1968"), Act of 19 June 1968, Pub. L. 90-351, TITLE IV—STATE FIREARMS CONTROL ASSISTANCE, § 901(a)(2), 82 Stat. 197, 225.

[3134] See The Federalist No. 84 (Alexander Hamilton).

[3135] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

and repel Invasions" (or it would not have incorporated them into its federal system),[3136] and that all of those "Laws" were aimed at "secur[ing] the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity".[3137] But one had to draw these separate sources together, and examine them carefully, in order to arrive at the conclusion the Second Amendment set out so clearly.

• Protection, by explicitly directing on the basis of those connections that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed". This command, too, was less obvious in the original Constitution. Again, by historical definition, "the body of the people, trained to arms" comprised the Militia in every State; and the Constitution required Members of Congress, not only "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia",[3138] but also to be "bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution" in that particular.[3139] One needed, however, to associate and parse all of these provisions in their mutual interrelation in order to infer what the Second Amendment recited in its last fourteen words.

In short, the Second Amendment's inestimable contribution is to render pellucid and undeniable that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is absolute.[3140] On its face, the injunction issued by WE THE PEOPLE themselves that "the right * * * shall not be infringed" admits of no limit, because it contains no exception, excuse, equivocation, or evasive expression on the purported basis of which any violation could be even imagined to be tolerable. In legal principle it must be without limit, because it guarantees "the right of the people" who are America's sovereigns, and therefore whose rights cannot be constrained. And in political practice it can have no limit, either, because it secures "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"—and, in the final analysis, all "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'".[3141] The absolute nature of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" is a matter of practical logic, too. For the perdurance of every one of "the several States" as "a free State" under the Constitution is not subject to compromise—the survival of "a free State" in a world hostile to freedom is impossible without adequate "security"—the deployment of "[a] well regulated Militia" is no less than "necessary to the security of a free State"—and the existence of "[a] well regulated Militia" absolutely depends upon the unfettered exercise of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

[3136] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3137] See U.S. Const. preamble.

[3138] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3139] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

[3140] See ante, at 1401-1423.

[3141] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

a. The effect of the Second Amendment on Congress's Militia Powers. Being that the Second Amendment was "added" to the original Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers",[3142] and being that the Amendment itself is absolute, its ultimate purpose must be to make Americans absolutely sure that the duties of Congress in the original Constitution as they relate to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" are absolute, too.

This is a matter with serious practical consequences in the realm of legislation. After all, when Congress exercises its powers "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia",[3143] it must determine what is "necessary and proper" according to some objective standard against which WE THE PEOPLE can judge how well or ill Congress has performed its duties. Its very language proves that the original Constitution did not license Members of Congress to decide what might be "necessary and proper" on an ad hoc, subjective basis, with their personal opinions to be accepted as the final words on the subject. Had that been the Constitution's intent, the limiting phrase "which shall be necessary and proper" would have been supererogatory. All "Laws" which Congress enacted would have had to be taken as "necessary and proper" simply because Congress enacted them. "It cannot be presumed", however, "that any clause in the constitution [wa]s intended to be without effect."[3144] The Constitution cannot be "interpret[ed] * * * as if th[ose words] were not to be found" there.[3145] Rather, "effect [must] be given to each word of the Constitution".[3146]

To be sure, with respect to some exercises of some powers, what might be "necessary and proper" could safely be consigned to Members of Congress to determine in the first instance, subject to later disapproval by the electorate if their decisions crossed into the pale of political unacceptability. Exercises of the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", however, are too crucial to leave to the unfettered discretion, ignorance, incompetence, or possibly malign motives of Members of Congress, and the vagaries and frequent corruptions of the electoral process, especially when elections for the House of Representatives and the Senate occur only every two, four, or six years—leaving time for usurpation, tyranny, or some other disaster to fester while WE THE PEOPLE as voters can do nothing to correct the situation. And because "[t]he very purpose of [the entire]

[3142] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

[3143] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 18 and 16.

[3144] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1803).

[3145] Blake v. McClung, 172 U.S. 239, 261 (1898).

[3146] Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 87 (1900).

Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles", so that "[o]ne's * * * fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections",[3147] then certainly "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of participating in "well regulated Militia"—the only "right" that the Bill of Rights ties directly to "the security of a free State"—must be "beyond the reach of majorities and officials". To that end, the Second Amendment provides an absolute standard for what is "necessary and proper" "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia". As before, although this is a single power in which the several component powers are plainly intended to be exercised simultaneously or at least sequentially in some rational relationship to one another, for purposes of analysis the component powers will be addressed separately.

(1) The power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia". The Second Amendment does not explicitly identify a "right of the people" to be "organiz[ed]" in "well regulated Militia". That right plainly inheres there, however. The Amendment commands that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed", not for reasons it refrains from cataloguing, but instead for the single, specific purpose of maintaining "well regulated Militia" in every State. The Amendment would never have mentioned "[a] well regulated Militia" unless it intended inextricably to connect that "right" to such a "Militia" in a relationship of cause and effect. Thus, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of maintaining "[a] well regulated Militia" in every State necessarily implies a "right of the people" in every State actually to serve in such a "Militia", which "right" also "shall not be infringed". This would be true even if the foundational right were phrased simply as "the right * * * to keep * * * Arms", because the purpose of "keep[ing]" them would be to enable "the people" to perform Militia service. But the foundational right also includes "the right * * * to * * * bear Arms", which in the context of the Amendment's nominative absolute clause can only mean "to * * * bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia". So, "the right of the people" to participate in "well regulated Militia"—and therefore to have such Militia properly "organiz[ed]" to that end—is implicit in "the right * * * to keep * * * Arms" and explicit in "the right * * * to * * * bear Arms".

That "the right of the people" to participate in "well regulated Militia" as a consequence of their "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" "shall not be infringed" imposes a corresponding duty on public officials to organize the totality of "the people" into such Militia at all times. This, of course, is just what the original Constitution provided, when its words were interpreted as, "prior to its adoption,

---

[3147] West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943).

[they had] been frequently used",[3148] and in the light of the law as it existed at the time.[3149] Under the original Constitution, Congress's power and duty "[t]o provide for organizing" were informed and controlled by the principle of the pre-constitutional Militia Acts that always required near-universal service.

The Second Amendment emphasizes that the power and duty are absolute, and must be exercised according to an objective standard by which "the Militia" so "organized" can be adjudged to be "well regulated" or not. The power and duty are absolute, because the Amendment allows for no exception; and as they are to be employed and fulfilled ultimately in aid of "the security of a free State", no exception can be tolerated. The standard for their exercise is near-universal participation. As the pre-constitutional Militia Acts evidence, "[a] well regulated Militia" invariably consists of all eligible citizens, "the body of the people, trained to arms".[3150] "[T]he body of the people, trained to arms" consists of the selfsame "people" who enjoy "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of Militia service. Therefore, *no "Law[ ] for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]"* of Congress "[t]*o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" can be "necessary* [or] proper" unless it promotes, or at least does not hinder, the participation of all of "the people" in some way or other in "well regulated Militia" that are capable of taking whatever action may be necessary "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3151]

Because the Second Amendment recognizes no limitation on "the people" (other than some of the exceedingly narrow exclusions embodied in the pre-constitutional Militia Acts, and for otherwise eligible individuals rightfully convicted of crimes for which the proper punishment could be slavery), "well regulated Militia" cannot be truncated "select militia"—and assuredly not "militia" which are intentionally "[un]organiz[ed]" in any part or to any degree. "Select militia" on the one extreme and "[un]organiz[ed] * * * Militia" on the other are constitutionally impossible, because the final purpose of "well regulated Militia" is to provide "the security of a free State" in which "the people" themselves exercise supreme political authority. Inasmuch as "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'",[3152] "the people" as a whole cannot exercise supreme political power unless "the people" as a whole control the guns; and "the people" as a whole cannot effectively control the guns unless "the people" as a whole are "organiz[ed]" in "well regulated Militia".

[3148] See Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 96 (1900).

[3149] See Mattox v. United States, 156 U.S. 237, 243 (1895); United States v. Barnett, 376 U.S. 681, 693 (1964).

[3150] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3151] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 18.

[3152] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

Nonetheless, even though "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is inextricably linked with "well regulated Militia", if Congress should fail, neglect, or refuse "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" it still could not *dis*arm "the people" who were thus "[un]organiz[ed]", or prohibit them from arming themselves, either through their State governments or on their own through the free market. WE THE PEOPLE'S "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" exists even outside of an actually "organiz[ed] * * * Militia", because that "right" is in effect the cause, the Militia only the effect. Because an "[un]arm[ed] * * * Militia" is constitutionally a contradiction in terms, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is the condition precedent sine qua non for "well regulated Militia" to exist. In the final analysis, without adequate "Arms" organization is useless, discipline meaningless, training worthless, and security nonexistent. But with "Arms" "the people" can eventually achieve all of the rest. So, under the Second Amendment, WE THE PEOPLE'S temporary lack of "organiz[ation]" cannot rationalize denying them "Arms". This insight is important to emphasize, because it defeats the strategy of "gun controllers" who, on the one hand, opine that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" applies only to individuals actually enrolled in some sort of a "militia", but, on the other hand, oppose any revitalization of "the Militia of the several States" which in keeping with constitutional principles would enroll most Americans. If Americans remain unorganized, "gun controllers" argue, they need not be armed; and eventually, "gun controllers" hope, those Americans who happen to possess firearms can be *dis*armed completely and permanently. Once Americans realize, though, that "organiz[ation]" is not the predicate for "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", but that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is the foundation upon which "organiz[ation]" can be made useful, this strategy collapses.

(2) The power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia". With respect to this matter, the Second Amendment is eminently realistic. Overall, in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Amendment implicitly recognizes that rogue public officials may someday control the General Government (and perhaps the States' governments as well); that these miscreants will set about to exploit, oppress, and even terrorize common Americans; and that one of their first steps will be to disarm "the people", so that, without the instruments of resistance, their victims cannot transform inchoate mass anger into effective collective action. By guaranteeing "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", rather that any right or privilege of disloyal public officials or of defective governmental institutions, the Amendment identifies whom those "Arms" are to protect. By defining that "right" as "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", the Amendment mandates that those "Arms" are actually to be wielded by "the people" themselves, in their very own hands, not by someone else purporting to "represent" them. By declaring "[a] well regulated Militia * * * necessary to the security of a free State", the Amendment confirms that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is indispensable to "a free State". By focusing on "the security of a free State", the Amendment recognizes that the "'[p]olitical power [which] grows out of the barrel of a gun'"[3153] is WE THE PEOPLE'S own sovereignty, maintained by the "Arms" they personally possess, because "the Sword and Soveraignty always march hand in hand".[3154] And by commanding that "the right of the people * * * shall not be infringed", the Amendment denies even loyal public officials any colorable claim to superior authority over "the people", and strips disloyal officials of any claim to any authority whatsoever.

Thus, no "Law[ ] *for carrying into Execution the * * * Power*[ ]" "[t]*o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" can be "necessary* [or] proper" unless it promotes, or at least does not hinder, the permanent personal possession of "Arms" by each and every one of "the people" themselves—either in a positive manner, by actually supplying "the people" with "Arms"; or in a neutral fashion, by eliminating incompetent or rogue officials' interference with WE THE PEOPLE'S acquisition of "Arms" on their own; and in any event never in a negative way, by purporting to compel "the people" to remain "[un]arm[ed]", let alone to "[dis]arm[ ]" them.[3155]

(3) The power "[t]o provide for * * * disciplining, the Militia". As pointed out above, the Constitution relates the power of Congress with respect to "disciplining" the Militia largely to "training". The Second Amendment not only emphasizes this link but also elucidates and elaborates on its meaning.

(a) The Amendment guarantees, without exception or limitation, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" so that they can participate in "well regulated Militia". By pre-constitutional definition, "a well regulated militia" must be "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms".[3156] Therefore, "the people" must enjoy a right to be "trained to arms" for Militia purposes with the very "Arms" they "keep and bear". This should be self-evident: For "the people * * * keep * * * Arms" in order to be "trained to arms"; they "bear Arms" in the course of being "trained to arms"; and they cannot otherwise competently "keep and bear Arms" without having been sufficiently "trained to arms". Moreover, because it derives from and effectuates "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", the right to be "trained to arms" "shall not be infringed" by anyone, either.

(b) "[T]he right of the people" to be "trained to arms" is not the sole right of that nature the Second Amendment protects. The Amendment also guarantees a

---

[3153] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[3154] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7.

[3155] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 18 and 16.

[3156] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 (emphasis supplied).

right of the States on that score. The original Constitution "reserv[ed] to the States respectively * * * the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress", so that the Militia would be competent to perform the three purposes for which they might be "call[ed] forth".[3157] This "Authority" was and remains exclusive to the States. Therefore, the States enjoy a constitutional right, as against the General Government, to train "the body of the people" in their Militia; and Congress labors under a duty, in favor of the States, to "prescribe[ ]" a proper "discipline" for such "training", and then not to interfere with its implementation. Inasmuch as such "training" would be useless without proper "organizing" and "arming" of the Militia, the States enjoy a further right to demand that Congress fulfill its responsibilities as to those particulars, too. And if Congress fails, neglects, or refuses to do what is necessary to render effective the States' "reserv[ed] * * * Authority of training the Militia", then the States may fill the gap. In addition, because the original Constitution delegated no power to Congress to "organiz[e]", "arm[ ]", or "disciplin[e]" the Militia for any purpose other than the three for which the Militia could be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States", it implicitly "reserv[ed] to the States respectively" the unlimited "Authority"—and therefore an equally comprehensive right as against the General Government—to train their Militia for all other purposes.[3158]

(c) Importantly, the Second Amendment also recognizes that the States as political establishments have significant constitutional interests in making sure that "the right of the[ir] people to keep and bear Arms" is not "infringed" with respect to "training". For the purpose of training the Militia—whether "according to the discipline prescribed by Congress" with respect to the three constitutionally mandated tasks, or according to various "discipline[s]" the States may prescribe for other duties—is to render that "right" effective in the most practical manner possible where it counts the most: namely, in the field. Without such "training", "the security of a free State" would be jeopardized in every State; and the very existence of each State as a State would be compromised. Self-evidently, the General Government can claim no legal right or power to endanger the survival of the States as States, because the General Government and all of its parts—that is, the entire constitutional "Union"—depend, not only for their legitimacy but also for their very existence, upon the States' perdurance. "The States disunited might continue to exist. Without the States in union there could be no such political body as the United States."[3159] A fortiori, without the States in existence the Union would dissolve into nothingness. Thus, the very continuance of the General Government

---

[3157] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 15.

[3158] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 with amend. X.

[3159] Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 71, 76 (1869).

itself hinges upon its recognizing and to the maximum degree assisting the States in the exercise of their "reserv[ed] * * * Authority of training the Militia".

(d) The Second Amendment is a statement, not simply of States' rights, but of States' duties as well. "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" cannot prove effective in practice unless "the body of the people" is properly "trained to arms". Therefore, "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" includes the right to be "trained". In the first instance, "the people" must look to the States for "training", because the States enjoy the undoubted constitutional "Authority of training the Militia", and all of the rights and powers appertaining thereto. This "Authority" was not granted in order to and cannot remain dormant, however, because "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". So it constitutes a duty, too. Therefore, if the States fail, neglect, or refuse to provide their "people" with such "training" although they are lawfully entitled and have the ability to do so, they "infringe[ ]" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". In that event, "the Authority of training the Militia" does not "revert" to the General Government, because it was never "delegated to the United States by the Constitution" in the first place, but was "reserved to the States respectively". If the States default on their responsibilities, that "Authority" must devolve directly upon "the people" who, as sovereigns, are the residual claimants of all governmental powers.[3160]

In sum, *no "Law[ ] for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o provide for * * * disciplining, the Militia" can be "necessary [or] proper" unless it promotes, or at least does not hinder, the States in the exercise of their "*reserv[ed] * * * Authority of training the Militia", and the ability of "the people" to train themselves to "Arms" in the event the States default on their responsibilities.*[3161] In no instance may any supposed "Law[ ]" purport to assign to any officer or agency of the General Government either a simulacrum of "Authority" for "training the Militia" or a license to attempt to prevent such "training".

(4) The powers "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" and "for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States". The Second Amendment's effects on these powers can be easily summarized. To be "call[ed] forth" as "the Militia", and to perform as such "in the Service of the United States", "the people" must be so "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" as to constitute "well regulated Militia" that are capable of maintaining "the security of a free State". Thus, exercises of Congress's powers "[t]o provide for calling forth" and "for governing [any] Part of" the Militia must always be contingent and must depend upon prior proper exercises of its power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" in compliance with the Amendment's standard. If "the people" are not properly "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" they can neither be "call[ed] forth" nor "govern[ed]", because they are not, strictly speaking, "well regulated Militia" (or perhaps even any kind of "militia" at all). So, inasmuch as the exercise of its power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" is obviously mandatory on Congress due to the especially critical nature of the purposes for which the Militia may be "call[ed] forth"[3162]—and inasmuch as the exercise of its power "for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States" is also mandatory, because it would be absurd for Congress to be required to "call[ ] forth the Militia" but not also required to "govern[ ] such Part of them" as might be "call[ed] forth"—and inasmuch as any exercise of those powers depends upon the prior proper exercise of the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia"—and inasmuch as the exercise of that power must conform to the Second Amendment's standard of "[a] well regulated Militia"—and inasmuch as "[a] well regulated Militia" is one in which "the people" exercise "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms"—therefore, no "Law[ ] *for carrying into Execution the * * * Powers*" "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" and "for governing [any] Part of them" can be "necessary [or] proper" unless it relies upon and promotes, or at least does not hinder, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".[3163]

---

[3160] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 with amend. X.

[3161] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 18 and 16.

(5) The locus of final authority to decide what is "necessary and proper" in the execution of Congress's Militia Powers. The Constitution does not identify who will have the last word in determining whether the actual execution of any of Congress's Militia Powers is, in fact and law, "necessary and proper". The Second Amendment makes clear, however, that final authority in that regard cannot rest with Congress itself, or with any branch, department, or officer of the General Government.

The qualification that "Laws * * * shall be necessary and proper" is neither a mere hope, nor even an hopeful admonition, but instead is an actual legal duty, or it would not appear in the Constitution at all—rather, the clause would read simply, "[t]o make all Laws for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers [of Congress]".[3164] (For one would always hope, without having to say so, that Congress would refrain from exercising any of its powers if such exercise were other than "necessary and proper".) As opposed to a mere moral duty, which sounds only in the consciences of the parties subject to it, and then all too often only according to their own subjective interpretations of it, a legal duty requires: (i) an objective standard

---

[3162] See ante, at 50-54.

[3163] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 18 and 16.

[3164] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 (emphasis supplied).

of performance, (ii) a set of beneficiaries who can assert a right to have that standard enforced on their behalf, (iii) a tribunal competent to inquire into whether the standard has been properly applied, and (iv) an effective remedy for any violation so discovered. In this case—

(a) With respect to Congress's Militia Powers, the Second Amendment sets out an objective standard of necessity and propriety: namely, whether the exercise of those powers produces "[a] well regulated Militia" capable of maintaining "the security of a free State". Not the facile, fallible, and even fraudulent political notions of men, but "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" establish what constitutes "a free State".[3165] The Amendment establishes beyond the possibility of legal contradiction that "the security of a free State" depends upon "[a] well regulated Militia". The principles of "[a] well regulated Militia" derive from the *pre-*constitutional Militia statutes—all of which are subject to scientific corroboration, in that any researcher who examines the historical record can verify or falsify them to the same degree of certainly. And the foremost of these principles, upon which the practical application of all the others depends, is "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

(b) "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" identifies the real parties in interest who are to benefit from the standard of necessity and propriety. This is corroborated by the connection the Second Amendment makes between "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" and "the security of a free State"—in which "the people" are sovereign,[3166] "Governments * * * deriv[e] their just powers from the consent of the governed", and "it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish" "any Form of Government [that] becomes destructive of the[ir unalienable Rights]".[3167] Moreover, as the Amendment declares,"the right of the people * * * shall not be infringed" by anyone. "[T]he right" is absolute in its terms, without limitation, exception, qualification, or equivocation. So no one can claim a colorable entitlement to Militia "Laws which shall [not] be necessary and proper". Indeed, even "the people" themselves can assert no such dispensation, because "the right of the people" is also their duty.

(c) The only tribunal competent to investigate and if necessary indict Congress for violations of the standard of "necess[ity] and prop[riety]" with respect to America's Militia "Laws" is "the court of public opinion"—for, being composed of WE THE PEOPLE themselves rather than their mere representatives, it alone contains judges with constitutional authority sufficient to that end. If Members of

---

[3165] See Declaration of Independence.

[3166] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 454, 456 (opinion of Wilson, J.), 471-472 (opinion of Jay, C.J.) (1793).

[3167] Declaration of Independence.

Congress are trying in good faith to the best of their abilities to enact "necessary and proper" legislation, and if time and other circumstances allow, they may temporarily be given the benefit of the doubt. If "the people" observe questionable behavior, they can immediately inform ignorant legislators of their errors by "petition[ing] the Government for a redress of grievances".[3168] Or, if time allows, THE PEOPLE as voters can remove incompetent or incorrigible legislators through the electoral process. If, however, Members of Congress are not proceeding in good faith, "petition[ing] the Government" will prove worse than useless—because rogue officials who have set out to destroy "a free State" will hardly be swayed from their evil purpose by complaints that they are actually achieving their end, but instead will be encouraged by their past successes to expand their efforts. And, even if they are not rigged, elections may come too late to provide succor. In that event, THE PEOPLE themselves must decide, in the present moment, whether Congress's actions are "necessary and proper" or not—because they may never be afforded another chance to do so.

To render such a decision, of course, is their absolute right. For, as Blackstone taught Americans in the Founding Era, "whenever a question arises between the society at large and any magistrate vested with powers originally delegated by that society, it must be decided by the voice of the society itself: there is not upon earth any other tribunal to resort to".[3169] And specifically with respect to the Constitution, which WE THE PEOPLE themselves "ordain[ed] and establish[ed]",[3170] no less than with any other statute "[t]he power to enact carries with it final authority to declare the meaning of the legislation".[3171]

(d) The appropriate remedy then becomes the issue. "The court of public opinion" is no toothless paper tiger which can growl but not bite. In a conflict between THE PEOPLE, on one side, and a Congress saturated with rogues, on the other, who would serve most effectively as "the voice of the society"? Initially, the States. The States are not entities without rights and powers within the federal system. If rogue Members of Congress refuse "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", then the States, upon petitions from their citizens, can "organiz[e]" their own Militia, simply by authorizing their people to form Independent Companies; can "arm[ ]" their own Militia, simply by manufacturing or purchasing firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements on their own account, and then distributing that equipment to their citizens, or by assisting their citizens to acquire "Arms" on their own through the free market; and can "disciplin[e]" their own Militia, simply by allowing their citizens to train themselves according to some

---

[3168] U.S. Const. amend. I.

[3169] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 212.

[3170] U.S. Const. preamble.

[3171] Propper v. Clark, 337 U.S. 472, 484 (1949).

common plan. Indeed, clear-eyed and foresighted State officials, recognizing the problem even before most of their constituents did, might take the lead in mobilizing the citizenry against rogues in the District of Columbia. But in a conflict between THE PEOPLE, on one side, and rogues in control of both Congress and the States' governments, on the other, who would be "the voice of the society"? THE PEOPLE themselves. They are not without their own constitutional—and, perforce of the Declaration of Independence, supra-constitutional—rights and powers. If rogues in the District of Columbia and their State capitals refused to "organiz[e], arm[ ], and disciplin[e], the Militia", THE PEOPLE throughout America could proceed on their own initiative, just as patriotic Virginians did when Lord Dunmore refused to revive that Colony's Militia in 1774 and 1775.[3172] And if no less-drastic means of redress were available, "the People" not only could organize themselves in Militia, but also through those Militia could "throw off such Government" entirely, and "provide new Guards for their future security".[3173]

b. A special effect of the Second Amendment on the powers of the President. Most of the effects of the Second Amendment on the powers of the President should be obvious to any reader who has reached this point. One peculiar to these times warrants special examination, though.

The Constitution requires the President to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3174] After the Declaration of Independence, first and foremost among these "Laws" is the Constitution itself,[3175] which the President must "'swear (or affirm) * * * to the best of [his] Ability, [to] preserve, protect and defend'".[3176] One important part of the body of constitutional "Law[ ]" which relates to the Militia is the appointment of the President as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States",[3177] along with the authorization for the Militia "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" when "call[ed] forth" for those purposes.[3178] Another is the Second Amendment. And inasmuch as "the people" have both a right and a duty to participate in "well regulated Militia", they have both a right and a duty "to execute the Laws of the Union" in and through the Militia in support of and coöperation with the President. In this unique respect it can be said that "the people" and the President partake of a constitutional identity and share a constitutional responsibility.

[3172] See ante, at 567-597.

[3173] Declaration of Independence.

[3174] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3175] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[3176] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 7.

[3177] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3178] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

These provisions assign to the President, at the National level, constitutional authority analogous to, but even more extensive than, the common-law and statutory authority Sheriffs exercised in their Counties under pre-constitutional English law. As Blackstone explained,

> [A]S the keeper of the * * * peace, both by common law and special commission, [a sheriff] is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein, during his office. He may apprehend[ ], and commit to prison, all persons who break the peace or attempt to break it * * * . He may, and is bound ex officio to, pursue and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and other misdoers, and commit them to gaol for safe custody. He is also to defend his county against any * * * enemies when they come into the land: and for this purpose, as well as for keeping the peace and pursuing felons, he may command all the people of his county to attend him; which is called the posse commitatus, or power of the county: which summons every person, above fifteen years old * * * is bound to attend * * * under pain of fine and imprisonment.[3179]

Mutatis mutandis, this passage perfectly describes the powers of the President entailed in his "tak[ing] Care that the Laws be faithfully executed", and in his commanding the Militia to attend him in that endeavor. This description would also apply in principle to the "commander in chief" of the Militia—usually the Governor—in each of the several States, as well as "the County Lieutenant" or other chief commanding officer of the Militia in Local jurisdictions (such as Counties, Cities, or Towns) within each State. Which demonstrates that, although the call of many contemporary patriots for Sheriffs to assume responsibility as the supreme law-enforcement officers within their jurisdictions lacks any constitutional basis, the same effect could and should be achieved by recognizing that the various commanders of the Militia enjoy precisely such plenary authority, and with complete constitutional approbation, at the National, State, and Local levels.

In fulfillment of its duty "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union",[3180] Congress should enact statutes necessary and sufficient for that purpose. And such statutes—albeit not as comprehensive as they ought to be—do exist today:

> Whenever the President considers that unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages, or rebellion against the authority of the United States, make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any State by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, he may

---

[3179] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 343-344 (footnotes omitted).

[3180] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

> call into Federal service such of the militia of any State * * * as he considers necessary to enforce those laws or to suppress the rebellion.[3181]
>
> The President, by using the militia * * * , shall take such measures as he considers necessary to suppress, in a State, any insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, if it—
>
> > (1) so hinders the execution of the laws of that State, and of the United States within the State, that any part or class of its people is deprived of a right, privilege, immunity, or protection named in the Constitution and secured by law, and the constituted authorities of that State are unable, fail, or refuse to protect that right, privilege, or immunity, or to give that protection; or
> >
> > (2) opposes or obstructs the execution of the laws of the United States or impedes the course of justice under those laws.[3182]

More than ever before, application of such statutes is desperately needed, because America is beset by "unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages * * * against the authority of the United States" that "make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any State by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings", and "so hinder[ ] the execution of the laws of th[e] State[s], and of the United States within the State[s]" that untold numbers of "people [are] deprived of * * * right[s], privilege[s], immunit[ies], or protection[s] named in the Constitution and secured by law". These "unlawful combination[s]" or "conspirac[ies]" include:

- rogue public officials in both the General Government and the States, especially in so-called "administrative agencies" and "law-enforcement agencies" the personnel of which all too often pervert and subvert the laws, or behave lawlessly or as if they were laws unto themselves, because no effective "checks and balances" restrain them;

- political parties that function shamelessly as quintessential "factions"—that is, "number[s] of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community"[3183]—their main occupation being the rigging of fraudulent elections;

---

[3181] 10 U.S.C. § 332.

[3182] 10 U.S.C. § 333.

• racketeering enterprises that masquerade as legitimate businesses, especially in the banking and financial sectors of the economy; as well as outright criminal syndicates that ply their nefarious trades on a nationwide and international scale—especially in the distribution of narcotics, in which they are more or less openly allied with banks that launder dirty money, and protected by thoroughly corrupted police, prosecutors, and judges; and

• renegade public officials and private special-interest groups that labor tirelessly at the direction of and for the benefit of foreign powers at America's expense. Pre-constitutional English law denounced these activities as "[C]ONTEMPTS against the king's prerogative, * * * by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own, or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence in favour of such extrinsic power".[3184] Today, such behavior would constitute "contempts" against WE THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty—as well as clear-cut violations of the criminal law.[3185]

Yet, although these and other contemporary problems are so widespread and serious—threatening fatal consequences for this country—America has next to no Militia worthy of the name, anywhere "from sea to shining sea", ready to be "call[ed] forth" to deal with them!

Of course, the absence of "well regulated Militia" throughout the several States is anything but accidental. No country with an electoral system consisting of a single political party (even one with two faces) can claim to be "a free State". In America, however, notwithstanding several generations of political domination by one hermaphroditic party of an ever-increasingly totalitarian cast, so many common citizens remain armed that "the people" could still organize themselves in proper Militia and resuscitate "a free State" in most of the States—particularly if an economic crisis occasioned by an hyperinflationary explosion of the Federal Reserve System supplied the motivation. Aware of this potential danger, the Money Power, through its Pinocchios in the General Government, is feverishly erecting a National para-military police-state apparatus, centered around the Department of Homeland Security, which is rapidly festooning itself with all the trappings of a typical "Ministry of the Interior" from some East-European Stalinist "People's Republic" of

---

[3183] The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison).

[3184] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 122.

[3185] See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 953.

the early 1950s. Critical to the Department's operations is its absorption of all State and Local police, Sheriffs', and other "law-enforcement" departments and agencies into a single nationwide network, to be followed by their permanent administration "from the top down" out of a central headquarters in the District of Columbia. Not accidentally, this program conforms perfectly to the axiom that, in a one-party totalitarian state, if "the Party" can maintain its complete control over only one institution, that institution must be the secret police within the ministry of internal security.[3186] Once the Department of Homeland Security has established a monopoly over "law enforcement" across the length and breadth of this country, attempts will be made to eliminate the private possession of most, if not all, firearms and especially ammunition as quickly as circumstances allow, so that the possibility of WE THE PEOPLE'S revitalization of the Militia will be eradicated.

An even more ominous development is the increasing participation of the regular Armed Forces in this "homeland-security" régime. Even as the present study is being written, the Establishment's faucets of mass brainwashing are spewing forth floods of propaganda and agitation to condition the public into acquiescing in the imposition throughout America of "martial law" at the hands of a "military-industrial-bureaucratic complex".[3187]

To be sure, a patriotic President together with WE THE PEOPLE could stir up significant political controversy, by demanding that Congress disband the Department of Homeland Security and "provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" in its place. By itself, though, such controversy alone could not correct the situation. For if recalcitrant Members of Congress, beholden to selfish special-interest groups that hate and fear THE PEOPLE (as all such groups do and should), refused to accede to that eminently constitutional proposal, the President could not enact the necessary "Laws" by himself. Even in that eventuality, however, all would not be lost on this front, because "the Militia of the several States" do not depend upon Congress for their existences. They are State establishments that the Constitution has permanently incorporated into its federal system, no matter what Congress may do or refuse to do. So the President could appeal directly to the States and to THE PEOPLE for assistance.

In fact, the Second Amendment plainly instructs the President to embark upon that very course of action. The Constitution commands the President to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3188] The Second Amendment declares that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". To

---

[3186] See, e.g., Mátyás Rákosi, Secretary General of the Hungarian Workers' [Communist] Party, quoted in Francois Fejtö, History of the People's Democracies: Eastern Europe Since Stalin, Daniel Weissbort, Translator (London, England: Pall Mall Press, 1971), at 99.

[3187] See post, Chapters 47 and 48.

[3188] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

"take Care that the [Amendment] be faithfully executed", the President must "take Care" that "well regulated Militia" exist in every State. No such Militia exist at the present time. No likelihood exists that Congress will enact legislation providing for the revitalization of the Militia, or that the Supreme Court will rule that Congress is required to do so. As "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States", however, the President could "call into Federal service such of the militia of [all of the several] State[s] * * * as he consider[ed] necessary", in the persons of the Governors (or perhaps other individuals) to whom the laws of the various States gave "Appointment" as "commanders in chief" or equivalent "Officers" of their Militia,[3189] and could order (not simply request) the Governors, as Militia "Officers" answerable directly to him, to use their best efforts, under his personal supervision, to revitalize the Militia in their States. At a meeting in the White House, the President could present all fifty Governors with comprehensive model bills, each tailor-made for a particular State within a common pattern, which they would be commanded to shepherd through the legislative processes in their States as quickly as possible. The President could further order the Governors, under the aegis of the laws already in existence in their States if the new laws could not be passed in time, to raise no less than (say) 1,000 Militiamen in each State, organized in Independent Companies according to set criteria that would guarantee the men's competence and above all loyalty, to be put at his disposal in order to assist him in "tak[ing] Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".

Although not all of the States might initially comply, some of them would enact these bills and raise the necessary men—and that would surely prove to be enough. For with several thousand Militiamen under his personal command, the President could immediately institute throughout the bureaucracy in the District of Columbia what might be styled "the Eight I's Policy": illuminate, investigate, interrogate, implicate, indict, inculpate, incarcerate, and infame. As transparency swept away "state secrets" and accountability replaced "governmental immunity", cover-ups would be exposed and evildoers in dark corners spotlighted. Even those miscreants who, for one reason or another, could not be prosecuted would be driven in disgrace from office—and likely driven out of this country entirely—by the notoriety of their misdeeds and WE THE PEOPLE'S clamor for their scalps.

For the greatest effect, this method of revitalizing the Militia should be combined in each State with: (i) the incorporation within the Militia of all State and Local police forces, Sheriffs' departments, and other "law-enforcement" and "emergency-response" agencies;[3190] and (ii) the introduction through the Militia of an alternative currency.[3191] Once the members of all State and Local police forces

---

[3189] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3190] See ante, at 327-328, 1135-1138, 1194-1202, 1276-1277, and 1291-1293.

[3191] See ante, at 1208-1233.

and related agencies became "Officers" of the Militia, they would be constitutionally immune from Congressional control, except when "call[ed] forth" for the three purposes the Constitution allows—and then they would be under the direct command, not of a possibly rogue Congress, but only of the President (who, for the purposes of this discussion, would presumably be a true constitutionalist). Moreover, at no time would they be subject to interference from, let alone control by, any other "Officers" of the General Government, whether in the Armed Forces or such civilian agencies as the Department of Homeland Security.[3192] Thus, at one stroke, the nascent National para-military police-state apparatus would be irreparably smashed to smithereens, and the Power of the Sword would return to WE THE PEOPLE'S hands. Similarly, the States' adoption of an alternative currency could not be prevented by the Money Power's stooges in Congress or the Judiciary. Thus, at one stroke, the axis of financial fraud extending from New York City to the District of Columbia would be irreparably shattered, and the Power of the Purse would return to THE PEOPLE'S control.[3193]

c. The effect of the Second Amendment on the duty of the United States to "guarantee to every State * * * a Republican Form of Government". In the original Constitution, the connection between "a Republican Form of Government" and the Militia was essentially historical. When they entered the Union, each of the States had what was then deemed to be a "Republican Form of Government", and each of those governments included within it a settled and regulated Militia—so such a Militia was taken to be an integral part of that "Form of Government". Yet, although this relationship existed in every State, skeptics could have described the connection as merely coincidental or even accidental, and therefore somehow dispensable. The Second Amendment dispelled all such speculation. Being "necessary to the security of a free State" perforce of constitutional declaration, and being a governmental establishment by definition, "[a] well regulated Militia" must therefore always be a "necessary" characteristic and component of the specifically American conception of "a Republican Form of Government" as a matter of law. No State without "[a] well regulated Militia" has or can have "a Republican Form of Government". Therefore, the United States must guarantee to each State "[a] well regulated Militia" as an essential part of her "Republican Form of Government". A fortiori, no branch of the General Government can take any action that prevents such a Militia from coming into existence, or hinders its operations. Just as the General Government is powerless to deny to any State "a Republican Form of Government" by act of commission or omission, so too it is powerless to deny to any State, in any way or for any reason,

---

[3192] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

[3193] See generally Edwin Vieira, Jr., "The Purse and the Sword: Imminent Dangers of U.S. Economic and Homeland Security Policies" (Metamora, Michigan: DVDs produced by the Heritage Research Institute, 2010).

"[a] well regulated Militia"—rather, the General Government must exert its powers to the utmost in order to insure that such Militia exist at all times within every State.

d. The effect of the Second Amendment on the powers of Congress "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" and "[t]o regulate Commerce". Because sycophantic and unscrupulous "court lawyers" have always proven adept at concocting slick rationalizations to disguise rogue public officials' usurpations of authority, tyranny, and other wrongdoing, the Second Amendment was "added" to the original Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers".[3194] And well that it was. Because, where "gun control" has been concerned, the most tortuous "misconstruction[s] [and] abuse[s] of [the Constitution's] powers" have been and continue to be the order of the day.

(1) For example, propagandists for "gun control" argue that, if Congress directs its powers "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" and "[t]o regulate Commerce" at solitary individuals, or at particular things, or at certain kinds of individuals' behavior with certain things, rather than at "the Militia of the several States" as establishments, it may constitutionally tax and regulate the former even though its "Taxes" and "regulat[ions]" inevitably impact adversely upon the latter. To "gun controllers", that a potential inconsistency, or even contradiction, can arise between the powers "[t]o lay and collect Taxes" and "[t]o regulate Commerce", on the one hand, and the power "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia", on the other, is simply a minor legal friction that cannot be allowed to retard Congress from arriving at a politically desirable goal. Thus, according to this line of argument, it lies within Congress's powers even to prohibit: (i) certain classes of so-called "civilians" from possessing any firearms at all; (ii) the marketing of certain classes or types of firearms to all "civilians"; (iii) law-abiding "civilians" from possessing certain classes or types of firearms often misused by criminals; and (iv) all "civilians" from engaging in private para-military training with firearms. "Civilians" is the necessary qualifier here, because even "gun controllers" do not contend that Congress should disarm the regular Armed Forces or all of the General Government's or the States' various "law-enforcement agencies"—inasmuch as they plan to employ those very forces to repress WE THE PEOPLE as soon as THE PEOPLE are sufficiently disarmed.

Such contentions, however, the Second Amendment refutes, because it guarantees "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of enabling "the people" to participate in "well regulated Militia" in every one of the several States. Thus, the Amendment protects all individuals among "the people"; all things that fall within the term "Arms", including firearms, ammunition, and related accoutrements; and all activities that relate to what "well regulated Militia" do. So, whether a purported "Tax[ ]" or a "regulat[ion of] Commerce" is directed at individuals ("the people"), or at specific things ("Arms"), or at particular activities (such as individuals' training with "Arms" for the purpose of preparing themselves to perform Militia service), if it interferes with the personal possession or use of "Arms" by individuals who are actual or potential members of the Militia, or if it constrains the free market in firearms suitable for Militia service, or if it prohibits activities that are intended to qualify or prepare individuals for such service, then it is unconstitutional.

[3194] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

It is bootless to attempt to evade the Second Amendment by contending (as many "gun controllers" do) that "the people" remain mere "civilians" until they are formally enrolled in some manner in a "militia". Constitutionally, the label "civilian" means nothing, one way or the other.[3195] As a matter of constitutional law, everyone among WE THE PEOPLE becomes a member of the Militia immediately upon and as the result of becoming constitutionally eligible for the Militia—and that eligibility occurs as soon as an individual becomes an able-bodied adult capable of exercising "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms". At that point, the individual becomes subject to a constitutional duty "to keep and bear Arms" (or, in the case of a conscientious objector or an individual otherwise specially exempted, to serve in some manner without arms) in the Militia; and the Constitution presumes that what should be done will be done. So, if a "civilian" is someone who is not protected by "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", then no American can be categorized as a "civilian" from the time he becomes eligible for the Militia for as long as he remains so eligible.

(2) The highly confused—indeed, legally and morally psychotic—nature of contemporary "gun control" effected under the deceptive color of Congress's power "[t]o regulate Commerce" appears perhaps most clearly in two statutes, one unfortunately still in force and the other mercifully defunct (as of this writing), through which Congress bans or banned the possession of certain firearms by average Americans. On the one hand, Congress has declared it "unlawful for any person to transfer or possess a machinegun".[3196] This statute does not apply, however, to "a transfer to or by, or possession by or under the authority of, the United States * * * or a State, or a department, agency, or political subdivision thereof"[3197]—because, of course, "the United States" and "a State" do not constitute, and therefore cannot be "regulate[d]" as, "Commerce". And, not so long ago, Congress declared illegal private individuals' acquisition of newly manufactured so-called "semiautomatic assault weapons", including both certain specifically designated semiautomatic rifles then on the market "or copies or duplicates of th[os]e firearms in any caliber", along with every other semiautomatic rifle that thereafter might be produced with certain characteristics, including "an ability to accept a detachable magazine" and at least two other attributes from among "a folding or telescoping stock", "a pistol grip that protrudes conspicuously beneath the action", "a bayonet mount", "a flash suppressor or threaded barrel designed to accommodate a flash suppressor", and "a grenade launcher".[3198] This statute as well did "not apply to * * * the manufacture for, transfer to, or possession by the United States or a department or agency of the United States or a State or a department, agency, or political subdivision of a State, or a transfer to or possession by a law enforcement officer employed by such an entity for purposes of law enforcement (whether on or off duty)"[3199]—because, once again, even the most roguish Members of Congress recognized that "the United States" and "a State" do not constitute, and therefore cannot be "regulate[d]" as, "Commerce".

---

[3195] See, e.g., Craig v. Missouri, 29 U.S. (4 Peters) 410, 433 (1830); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 429 (1963); New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 268-269 & notes 7 through 12 (1964); Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 826 (1975); City of Madison, Joint School District No. 8 v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, 429 U.S. 167, 173-174 & note 5 (1976).

[3196] An Act To amend chapter 44 (relating to firearms) of title 18, United States Code, and for other purposes ("Firearms Owners' Protection Act"), Act of 19 May 1986, Pub. L. 99-308, § 102(9) [§ 922(o)(1)], 100 Stat. 449, 452-453; now codified at 18 U.S.C. § 922(o)(1).

On the other hand, Congress has also declared that:

> (a) The militia of the United States consists of all able-bodied males at least 17 years of age and * * * under 45 years of age who are, or who have made a declaration of intention to become, citizens of the United States and of female citizens of the United States who are members of the National Guard.
>
> (b) The classes of the militia are—
>
> (1) the organized militia, which consists of the National Guard and the Naval Militia; and
>
> (2) the unorganized militia, which consists of the members of the militia who are not members of the National Guard or the Naval Militia.[3200]

Thus, "all [of the] able-bodied males at least 17 years of age and * * * under 45 years of age" who are not members of the National Guard and the Naval Militia are [3197] Act of 19 May 1986, § 102(9) [§ 922(o)(2)(A)], 100 Stat. 449, 453; now codified at 18 U.S.C. § 922(o)(2)(A).

---

[3198] An Act To control and prevent crime ("Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994"), Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, TITLE XI—FIREARMS, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons ("Public Safety and Recreational Firearms Use Protection Act"), § 110102(a) and (b), 108 Stat. 1796, 1996-1998. This Subtitle expired of its own force in 2004. See § 110105(2), 108 Stat. at 2000.

[3199] Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, § 110102(a), 108 Stat. 1796, 1997.

[3200] 10 U.S.C. § 311.

members of the so-called "unorganized militia". Inasmuch as the Constitution provides for no "militia of the United States", the so-called "organized militia" must be identified with the "Troops, or Ships of War" which the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress".[3201] As such, "the organized militia" is no "militia" at all. By default, "the unorganized militia" must include everyone who is not somehow enrolled among the States' "Troops, or Ships of War", and therefore is eligible for membership in "the Militia of the several States". This "unorganized militia" is surely "unorganized" as a matter of statutory definition and present fact; but its constituents are nonetheless members of "the Militia of the several States" as a matter of constitutional law. For they are members of the Militia not simply by dint of some tortuous construction of this statute (assuming arguendo that some construction could lend the statute any constitutional validity at all),[3202] but also because the constitutional definition of "Militia" subsumes "all able-bodied males at least 17 years of age and * * * under 45 years of age", and quite a few others (including most adult women) as well.

So here especially, the Second Amendment exposes the unconstitutional incoherence of contemporary "gun control"—that these statutes taken together exhibit, not simply a gross "misconstruction" of the Constitution or even a palpable "abuse of its powers", but an outright absurdity masquerading as legislation. The Militia consist of "the body of the people"[3203]—that is, essentially every able-bodied adult American, male or female, who is capable of performing any type of Militia service. The Militia are governmental institutions of the several States primarily, and of the United States secondarily when "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service" thereof, and are invested with the governmental authority and responsibility to enforce the laws both of the Union and of the States.[3204] The "Arms" that "the people [are] to keep and bear" in preparation for or performance of their Militia duties—whether "machineguns", "semiautomatic assault weapons", or any other firearms suitable for Militia service—necessary constitute "Arms" to be "possess[ed] by or under the authority of * * * the United States * * * or a State, or a department, agency, or political subdivision thereof", or "by the United States or a department or agency of the United States or a State or a department, agency, or political subdivision of a State, or * * * by a law enforcement officer employed by such an entity for purposes of law enforcement (whether on or off duty)". As even Congress recognizes, all such "Arms" in the possession of individuals performing functions for such governmental institutions are constitutionally immune from being

[3201] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied). See ante, at 786-793.

[3202] See, e.g., Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 (1932); National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U.S. 1, 30 (1937); Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S. 705, 710-711 (1962).

[3203] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3204] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16, and amends. II and X.

"regulat[ed]" as articles of "Commerce". Yet, in what can be adequately described only as political psychosis, on the one hand Congress acknowledges its disability to apply "gun control" to governmental institutions or establishments of either the United States or the several States; while, on the other hand, Congress claims the power to impose sweeping "gun controls" on the very individuals who make up arguably the most important of these institutions or establishments—and certainly the institutions or establishments most closely associated with WE THE PEOPLE—"the Militia of the several States". Of course, just as nothing happens in politics by accident, so nothing that appears crazy in politics lacks some sinister, if recondite, logic. Thus, a methodical, if malign, purpose lurks behind this legislative madness: namely, to deny in principle WE THE PEOPLE'S constitutional position as the ultimate governing authority in America, and to prevent THE PEOPLE from asserting that authority in practice through their exercise of the "'[p]olitical power [that] grows out of the barrel of a gun'".

C. The effect of the Second Amendment on the States. The effect of the Second Amendment on the States has long been the subject of controversy which has generated far more heat than light. Actually, the matter is rather straightforward.

1. Limitations on the States under the original Constitution. When Alexander Hamilton wrote that the original "Constitution [wa]s itself, in every rational sense, and to every useful purpose, A BILL OF RIGHTS" as to the General Government,[3205] he understated the matter, because the Constitution embodied "A BILL OF RIGHTS" as to the States, too. This was self-evident with respect to those provisions that explicitly prohibited the States from exercising certain powers or engaging in certain activities,[3206] which the Supreme Court early on described as "a bill of rights for the people of each state".[3207] But it should also have been obvious with respect to the States' powers that concerned the Militia.

a. "[T]he Militia of the several States". On its face, the original Constitution set out at least four limitations on the States that effectively guaranteed "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" and to participate in "well regulated Militia" even in the absence of the Second Amendment.

(1) By incorporating "the Militia of the several States" as permanent parts of its federal system,[3208] the original Constitution precluded the States from doing away with their Militia entirely or from rendering them so ineffective that they could not perform the tasks to be expected of them.

[3205] The Federalist No. 84.

[3206] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10.

[3207] Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. (6 Cranch) 87, 138 (1810).

[3208] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

(2) By assigning certain powers over the Militia to Congress,[3209] the original Constitution imposed several duties on the States: Because the Constitution is "the supreme Law of the Land * * * and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding",[3210] and because "the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers * * * of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution",[3211] from the beginning the States were powerless to interfere with Congress's constitutional exercises of its powers and duties "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[3212] and "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States".[3213] Moreover, because Congress was required to enact whatever "Laws * * * shall be necessary and proper" in order to ensure that all eligible Americans were personally possessed of firearms suitable for Militia service, Congress could not have enacted any supposed "Laws" that disabled common Americans from acquiring, possessing, and owning firearms suitable for Militia service. And, if confronted with any such purported "Law", all State officials would have had to refuse to lend their aid in enforcing it, because it was not enacted "in Pursuance" of the Constitution.[3214] So no State could have prevented "the people" within her own jurisdiction from being "arm[ed]" through some "provi[sion]" of Congress. And no State could have disarmed "the people" within her jurisdiction in compliance with some purported statute of Congress, let alone on her own initiative.

(3) Because the original Constitution created no "Militia of the United States", but instead incorporated into its federal system "the Militia of the several States" as they then existed, it necessarily reserved the penultimate authority over and responsibility for the Militia to the States. (The ultimate authority, of course, the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence reserved to WE THE PEOPLE.) The Militia were subject to be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States", and were regulated in particular ways for that purpose by Congress,[3215] but otherwise were governmental institutions of the several States. Indeed, even when "employed in the Service of the United States" they remained governmental institutions of the States, because, except for the President as their

---

[3209] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3210] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[3211] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

[3212] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3213] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3214] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

[3215] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

"Commander in Chief", all of their "Officers" were appointed by the States.[3216] For that reason, the Constitution reserved to the States certain powers and duties with respect to the Militia—powers and duties which amounted to limitations on what the States could do or could refuse to do.

The most obvious of these was the explicit "reserv[ation] to the States respectively" of "the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress".[3217] This consisted of both a power and a duty, because if "discipline [was in fact] prescribed by Congress" then the States were required to "train[ ] the[ir] Militia according to" it. Self-evidently, the Constitution did not "reserv[e] * * * th[is] Authority" to the States so that the States could have refused to exercise it—particularly when the exercise of that "Authority" was necessary to prepare the Militia to be "call[ed[forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for one or more of the three constitutional purposes.

"[T]raining the Militia" would have been useless, if not impossible, though, if the Militia had not already been properly "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and [otherwise] disciplin[ed]". In the first instance, this was Congress's responsibility. But what if Congress defaulted on it? Then other of the States' reserved powers and duties would have come into play. Had Congress not "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed], the Militia" so as adequately to prepare them to be "call[ed] forth", then each of the States would have been required to "organiz[e], arm[ ], and disciplin[e]" her own Militia to that end in conformity with *pre-*constitutional principles. For the Militia could not have been left "[un]organiz[ed], [un]arm[ed], and [un]disciplin[ed]", and therefore unserviceable if not altogether useless for the Union's needs. In addition, each of the States would always have been required to "organiz[e], arm[ ], and disciplin[e]" her own Militia for all purposes of "homeland security" other than the three in service of which the Militia could have been "call[ed] forth"on behalf of the General Government—for, had the States failed, neglected, or refused to do so, the Militia would have ceased to be "the Militia of the several States", in derogation of their constitutional identities.

Finally, in order to have exercised those powers and fulfilled those duties in accordance with *pre-*constitutional standards, the States would have had to recognize, protect, and enforce the rights and duties of individuals in relation to their Militia—in particular, the right and duty of each individual eligible for the Militia to acquire in the free market (or be supplied by the public with) at least one firearm, ammunition, and accoutrements suitable for Militia service, and thereafter to maintain personal possession of that equipment in his own home at all times. And nowhere within any of these powers and duties could the States have discovered even the merest shred of a license to disarm "the people" within their jurisdictions.

---

[3216] Compare U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 with art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3217] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

(4) The original Constitution recognized a reserved right and duty of "the people" as against the States with respect to WE THE PEOPLE'S possession of arms and participation within the Militia. As the Supreme Court observed in Presser v. Illinois,

> [i]t is undoubtedly true that all citizens capable of bearing arms constitute the reserved military force or reserve militia of the United States as well as of the States, and, in view of this prerogative of the general government, as well as of its general powers, the States cannot, even laying the [Second Amendment] out of view, prohibit the people from keeping and bearing arms, so as to deprive the United States of their rightful resource for maintaining the public security, and disable the people from performing their duty to the general government.[3218]

Of course, Presser was wrong to assert that "all citizens capable of bearing arms" constitute a "reserve militia of the United States". For no "militia of the United States" exists under the Constitution. Rather, "all citizens capable of bearing arms" comprise "the Militia of the several States"—and at all times and in all sorts of active capacities, not just as a "reserve". Nonetheless, the essential point remained true, that no State could constitutionally have "prohibit[ed] the people [within her own jurisdiction] from keeping and bearing [the] arms" that they might have needed for Militia service, or from participating in the Militia (at least "in the Service of the United States").

By logical extension, no State could have prevented "the people" within her own jurisdiction from arming themselves on their own recognizance with equipment suitable for Militia service should both Congress and that State's government have failed, neglected, or refused "[t]o provide for * * * arm[ing]" them. A fortiori, no State could affirmatively have disarmed "the people", particularly if Congress and that State's government had previously failed, neglected, or refused to arm them, and "the people" had thereby been compelled to arm themselves in order to fulfill their constitutional "duty to the general government".

By combining the constitutional principle adduced in Presser with the original Constitution's "reserv[ation] to the States respectively * * * [of] the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress",[3219] the breadth of the protection the Constitution afforded to "the people" as against the States (and as against Congress, too) comes fully to the fore:

[3218] 116 U.S. 252, 265 (1886) (dicta).

[3219] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

(i) The States were required to "train[ ] the Militia". Therefore, (ii) "the people" were entitled to receive "training". (iii) Effective "training" required proper "organiz[ation], arm[s], and [other] disciplin[e]". Therefore, (iv) "the people" had a right to such "organiz[ation], arm[s], and [other] disciplin[e]". (v) If "the people" were not provided with the necessary "organiz[ation], arm[s], and [other] disciplin[e]", either by Congress in the first instance or by the States upon Congress's default, then "the people" had a duty, and a corresponding right and power, to "organiz[e], arm[ ], and [otherwise] disciplin[e]" themselves howsoever they could have arranged such matters, and even to supply their own "training" if neither Congress nor the States had done so.

Self-evidently, all of this added up to nothing less than the substance of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in the Second Amendment. That is, through its Militia Clauses alone, the original Constitution applied to the States the substance of the Second Amendment even in the absence of the Second Amendment.

b. "[A] Republican Form of Government". The requirement in the original Constitution that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government"[3220] also secured for "the people" the rights "to keep and bear Arms" and to participate in "well regulated Militia" as against the States even in the absence of the Second Amendment.

Throughout America in 1788, "a well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms"[3221] was understood to be a necessary characteristic and component of "a Republican Form of Government". Every legally and politically literate American knew that the definition of a republican government was "one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people"[3222]—that "the Supreme Power" was a synonym for sovereignty[3223]—that "the Sword and Soveraignty always march[ed] hand in hand"[3224]—and therefore that "the body of the people" had to hold "the Sword" firmly in "the people['s]" own hands, if they intended to secure a republican government for themselves.

"[T]he Sword" in WE THE PEOPLE'S hands was the Militia. This was implicit in the Declaration of Independence. The Declaration explicitly recognized that "it is th[e People's] right, it is their duty, to throw off [an abusive] Government". But

---

[3220] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3221] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3222] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (opinion of Wilson, J.).

[3223] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

[3224] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7.

it implicitly understood, as well, that no "Government" which had engaged in "a long train of abuses and usurpations" aimed ultimately at "reduc[ing] the[People] under absolute Despotism" could be "throw[n] off" without the application of armed force. Moreover, for some period of time during an interregnum while "the People" struggled "to throw off such Government", they would have no regular army to put into the field. So only Militia could have served the purpose. And, "being composed of the body of the people", only Militia would have provided instruments that fit the Declaration's invocation of "the Right of the People to alter or to abolish" an abusive "Form of Government".

Not surprisingly, then, the inextricable connection between the Militia and republican government was writ large upon the legal-historical record. Since 1776 and when the original Constitution was ratified, every State had "a Republican Form of Government".[3225] Every Colony in America other than Pennsylvania prior to 1776, and every independent State thereafter, established and maintained Militia of a certain type as integral parts of their governmental structures. Relying on this, the Articles of Confederation had required that "every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred"[3226]—a requirement which everyone expected would easily be fulfilled, because such Militia were already in the field. These Militia, "the Militia of the several States", the Constitution incorporated as permanent parts of its federal system. Therefore, a Militia of that type and only that type—"composed of the body of the people, trained to arms" according to *pre-*constitutional principles—constituted an essential characteristic of "a Republican Form of Government". For such an unbroken legislative cavalcade provided "unmistakable evidence of what was republican in form, within the meaning of that term as employed in the Constitution".[3227]

Now, under the original Constitution, the United States—that is, all of the States acting collectively through the General Government—were required to guarantee "a Republican Form of Government", and therefore "a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred", to each State. Thus, it was the implicit duty of each State to maintain such a "Government" and such a Militia within her own territory. No State could have claimed a right, privilege, or power to set aside her "Republican Form of Government", or to disestablish her Militia as part of that "Form of Government"—because if she had attempted to do so the United States would have been required to intervene. Indeed, if rogue officials in a State had attempted to set aside her "Republican Form of Government" or to disestablish her Militia, as one of the United States that State herself would have been required, through the efforts of her loyal officials and her citizens (presumably [3225] See Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wallace) 162, 175-176 (1874) (dictum).

---

[3226] Arts. of Confed'n, art. VI, ¶ 4.

[3227] Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wallace) 162, 176 (1875) (dictum).

deployed in her own Militia), to stop her own disloyal officials from so offending the Constitution! That is, the original Constitution implicitly authorized and even commanded the Militia in each State to prevent rogue officials from attempting to disestablish it.

Although it was never tested in the early days of the Union, this implicit authority and command would have been particularly applicable and insistent with respect to the most fundamental—indeed, the indispensable—principle of the Militia, that each and every eligible individual in the community should personally acquire and possess, and wherever possible own outright, at least one firearm, with sufficient ammunition and accoutrements, suitable for Militia service. So, even in the absence of the Second Amendment, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" could not have been "infringed" by the States; and "the people" themselves, through their Militia, would have seen to its protection in the most fitting and striking manner possible.

c. The States' reserved powers. Under the original Constitution, the States enjoyed no "reserved" powers to impose upon their citizens what Americans today call "gun control".

(1) The original Constitution explicitly reserved to the States only three powers: namely,

- "the Appointment of the Officers, and the authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress";[3228]
- the authority to "make * * * gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts";[3229] and
- the authority to "engage in War" when "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3230]

The first and the third of these were antithetical to "gun control", and the second was not relevant to it.

(2) The original Constitution implicitly reserved many powers to the States—as the Tenth Amendment later declared, all of "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, [we]re reserved to the States respectively, or to the people".

(a) A general power of "gun control" was not among these reserved powers. To the contrary: The original Constitution prohibited powers favorable to "gun

---

[3228] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3229] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1.

[3230] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

control" to the States, and delegated powers antithetical to "gun control" to the United States. Because the Constitution permanently incorporated "the Militia of the several States" within its federal system, the States were disabled from disestablishing them, directly or indirectly. Because the original Constitution delegated to Congress the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia",[3231] the States were disabled from interfering with the exercise of that power by attempting to disarm "the people" within their jurisdictions.[3232] And because "the Militia of the several States" were permanent State establishments which would have provided the States with "homeland security" for every purpose other than the three for which the Militia could have been "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States",[3233] the States were required to maintain them in readiness—fully organized, armed, trained, and otherwise disciplined for those other purposes—no matter what Congress did or did not do.[3234]

(b) Even the most dangerous of the States' reserved powers—the power to tax, which "involves the power to destroy"[3235]—did not allow for "gun control" under the original Constitution. As a general principle, the States could not have applied their powers to tax so as to hinder, let alone to frustrate or defeat, the exercise by Congress of any of its powers, let alone the fulfillment of any of its duties.[3236] So, specifically, where Congress had "provide[d] for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" so that they might be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States", the Constitution precluded any State tax on the Militia themselves, or on individuals as a consequence of or in relation to their eligibility for or actual enrollment in the Militia, or on the equipment those individuals could have used to perform their Militia service.[3237]

Moreover, inasmuch as the Militia were "the Militia of the several States" themselves, not "the Militia of the United States", any such State taxes would have undermined the very existence of the Militia as State institutions the permanence of which the original Constitution commanded, and therefore would have been ultra vires on that score alone, no matter what Congress had or had not done. Even a commonplace general State sales tax, specifically applied to firearms suitable for

---

[3231] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3232] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

[3233] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3234] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

[3235] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 431 (1819).

[3236] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

[3237] See McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 425-436 (1819); Warren Trading Post Company v. Arizona Tax Commission, 380 U.S. 685, 690-692 (1965). As these cases involved merely Congressional instrumentalities as distinguished from constitutional establishments such as the Militia, they recognized and enforced the minimum bounds on the States' authority in such situations.

Militia service, should have been invalid, because "a tax on the sale of an article * * * is a tax on the article itself",[3238] and therefore a tax on firearms suitable for Militia service would have amounted to a tax on the operations, and thereby an attack on the effectiveness, of the Militia.

(c) Under the original Constitution, the States could not have invoked even their most general reserved power, "the Police Power", on behalf of "gun control". The Police Power "is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the general government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive"[3239] which "'extends * * * to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State'".[3240] It is often assumed that "[a]n attempt to define [the Police Power's] reach or trace its outer limits is fruitless".[3241] But where the Militia are concerned, this is nonsense—for the original Constitution sharply defined the "outer limits" of the Police Power by its incorporation of "the Militia of the several States" into its federal system, and by its delegation to Congress of particular powers with respect to the Militia.

Inasmuch as the Police Power is ultimately directed towards public safety and security, and the enforcement of the laws, it logically could never have formed the legalistic basis for "gun control". For the original Constitution infused the Militia with the explicit authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union";[3242] and, being "the Militia of the several States", they were under an implicit obligation to execute the laws of their States, too, when called forth for that purpose. So, because "gun control" would have undermined, and if carried to its logical conclusion would have destroyed, the Militia, "gun control" and the Police Power were mutually contradictory from the beginning.

In addition, because the original Constitution incorporated the Militia as permanent parts of its federal structure, their continued existence was mandated by "the supreme Law of the Land", which every public official in the States was "bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support", in particular the "Judges in every State * * * any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding".[3243] So any purported exercise of a State's Police Power in aid of "gun control" that jeopardized the existence or effectiveness of her Militia would have been unconstitutional on its face.

[3238] Brown v. Maryland, 25 U.S. (12 Wheaton) 419, 444 (1827).

[3239] In re Rahrer, 140 U.S. 545, 554 (1891).

[3240] Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wallace) 36, 62 (1873).

[3241] Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26, 32 (1954).

[3242] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3243] U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

Furthermore, the powers "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" and "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" being among "[t]he powers * * * delegated to the United States by the Constitution",[3244] every supposed power in the States to prevent or hinder any such "calling forth" or "organizing, arming, and disciplining"—such as by undermining the effectiveness of the Militia through disarmament of "the people" under comprehensive "gun control"—was implicitly "prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States".[3245]

(d) Finally, many exercises of the Police Power have been rationalized, and perhaps in some cases even justified, by general appeals to "public safety". Laws that properly provide for "public safety", however, must always recognize the authority of, and in the final analysis rely for their enforcement upon, the Militia. For the very purpose of the Militia is to secure "public safety" for the community by the community, especially when all else fails. The Militia arise out of WE THE PEOPLE'S supra-constitutional authority and responsibility with respect to "public safety", and constitute the ultimate means by which THE PEOPLE exercise that authority and fulfill that responsibility. So, having THE PEOPLE organized, trained, and otherwise disciplined—and, in particular, fully armed—in the Militia is the precondition for constitutional "public safety". Anything less is, to the degree of its deficit, "public insecurity".

Nonetheless, laws sharply focused on the misuse of firearms do not violate any constitutional principle of the Militia. For misuses of firearms—whether negligent, reckless, or criminal in nature—are contrary to the purpose for which "the people * * * keep and bear Arms", and therefore can be prohibited and their perpetrators punished without interfering with that right. Which is why, when during pre-constitutional times such laws were enacted, no one ever imagined that they interfered with the Militia or denied anyone a "right * * * to keep and bear Arms".[3246] And which is why they would not have violated the original Constitution, either.

On this legal-historical basis, though, "public safety" could never have been invoked as a credible ground under the original Constitution for indiscriminately disarming individuals eligible for the Militia, simply because a few individuals might have behaved in negligent, reckless, or even criminal manners. To use the contemporary judicial jargon, "less-restrictive means" were always available to deal with such problems. For negligent and potentially reckless individuals, training and related personal discipline were indicated—and were available through the Militia.

[3244] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 with amend. X.

[3245] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3 with amend. X.

[3246] See generally, e.g., Robert H. Churchill, "Gun Regulation, the Police Power, and the Right to Keep Arms in Early America: The Legal Context of the Second Amendment", 25 Law and History Review 139 (2007), at 161-165 & notes 54 through 61.

For individuals with minor criminal proclivities, the knowledge that they would have been apprehended, if necessary by the Militia, would have provided sufficient deterrence. Hardened criminals who might not have been deterred from committing violent crimes by the mere likelihood of arrest, conviction, and condign punishments would not have been deterred from misusing firearms by ordinances providing for "gun control", either. If they were to be stopped, some legal authority—such as the Militia—would have had to employ force, doubtlessly in the form of firearms.

More importantly, the purpose of arming "the people" for participation in "the Militia of the several States" was to place the community's ultimate force firmly in the hands of ordinary citizens, so that "public safety" would be controlled by the public itself. Americans in 1788 were doubtlessly familiar with the gist of the facile argument jurists of the present day put forward in favor of "gun control", that the Constitution should be loosely construed so as to "provid[e] protection only against unreasonable regulations of guns".[3247] But they would have rejected it as an obvious example of the logical fallacy petitio principii.[3248] For what would the standard of "reasonableness" have been to them, other than the set of principles gleaned from the *pre-*constitutional Militia Acts, under which the universal "regulation[ ] of guns" was that every able-bodied adult male (not a conscientious objector or otherwise specially exempted) was required personally to possess at all times (and usually own) at least one firearm, ammunition, and accoutrements suitable for Militia service? Americans in 1788 knew perfectly well that such objective standards were far better suited to a free society than the subjective notions of "good public policy" emanating from possibly rogue officials. Their own recent experiences had taught them that what individuals purporting to act in the name of "governments" did was not necessarily "reasonable", and all too often proved quite "*un*reasonable", from the perspective of "the people"—and that if the "reasonableness" of public officials and the "reasonableness" of "the people" stood in mutual contradiction, then the latter had to prevail, no matter what "reasons" those officials might have advanced in opposition to it.

True enough, Americans of that era were aware that arms in private individuals' hands could prove to be instruments of all sorts of harm to all sorts of people in all sorts of situations. But they also recognized that some harms might have to be tolerated, and some to be done, in order to preserve their freedom. And that, with respect to a tyranny as comparatively mild as the one they attributed to King George III. So, particularly myopic is the contention of a contemporary judicial apologist for "gun control", that

---

[3247] McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___, ___ (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 29.

[3248] Figuratively, "begging the question."

> [g]overnment regulation of the right to bear arms normally embodies a judgment that the regulation will help save lives. The determination whether a gun regulation is constitutional would thus almost always require the weighing of the constitutional right to bear arms against the "primary concern of every government—a concern for the safety and indeed the lives of its citizens."[3249]

Evidently, even the most superficial familiarity with modern history was no part of this Justice's supposed qualification for his seat on the Bench. For no one who merely lived through the second half of the Twentieth Century should not know that "the 'primary concern of every government'" has most assuredly not been "'a concern for the safety and indeed the lives of its citizens'". Quite the contrary: Self-styled "governments" in recent times have been the greatest purveyors of violent deaths to innocent people known to history.[3250] It may be that some lives would be spared initially if individuals—because they had been preëmptively disarmed—could not attempt to oppose with main force the accession to power of usurpers and tyrants. But eventually murders and associated horrors would be multiplied beyond all calculation, when millions from among the helpless, hopeless masses were arrested and deported to concentration camps, slave-labor camps, or outright death camps by the tyrants' para-military police. For which gory result the jurists who considered themselves entitled to "weigh[ ]" the constitutional right to bear arms against the "concern[s]" of "governments", and to rule in favor of the "governments" when they could have done otherwise, should bear a heavy load of guilt.

2. Limitations on the States perforce of the Second Amendment. Whether the Second Amendment applies to the States at all, and if so how, has been a matter of controversy which has required more than two centuries to arrive at a temporary respite—from the Amendment's ratification in 1791 to the decision of the Supreme Court in McDonald v. City of Chicago in 2010,[3251] which applied to the States the Court's earlier decision in District of Columbia v. Heller.[3252] McDonald represents only a respite rather that a resolution of the controversy, however, because no opinion from any number of Justices of the Supreme Court can definitively resolve any question about the Constitution. Even the Court itself

---

[3249] McDonald, 561 U.S. at ___ (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 12, quoting from United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 755 (1987).

[3250] See Rudolph J. Rummel, Death by Government: Genocide and Mass Murder in the Twentieth Century (New Brunswick, New Jersey: Transaction Publishers, 1994). As to communist "governments" in particular, see Stéphane Courtois, Nicholas Werth, Jean-Louis Panné, Andrzej Paczkowski, Karel Bartošek, and Jean-Louis Margolin, The Black Book of Communism: Crimes, Terror, Repression, Jonathan Murphy and Mark Kramer, Translators (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1999).

[3251] 561 U.S. ___ (2010) (Alito, J., for the Court).

[3252] 554 U.S. 570 (2008) (Scalia, J., for the Court).

admits as much.[3253] Also, the life-expectancies of both McDonald and Heller are likely to be short, for three reasons: First, the puppets who populate America's professional political class and the special-interest groups that pull their strings despise WE THE PEOPLE—but, as long as tens of millions of THE PEOPLE possess hundreds of millions of firearms, and Heaven alone knows how much ammunition, they also fear them. So they desperately want to strip THE PEOPLE of even the minuscule legal protections McDonald and Heller provide, as the prelude to confiscating as many of THE PEOPLE'S firearms as possible. Second, because both McDonald and Heller rest on paper-thin five-to-four majorities—with McDonald cobbled together from three separate opinions on the majority's side—they are politically vulnerable decisions, no matter how sound their legal reasoning might be. Third, resting upon the sandy foundation of an "individual right" "to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of personal self-defense, which Heller wrongly claimed to be "the central component of the right itself",[3254] they are wide open to destructive criticism, condemnation, and demands for correction, repudiation, and formal reversal. Indeed, the legal intelligentsia who tout "gun control" have already begun to roll out the wrecking-balls.

For example, a dissenting Justice in McDonald pointed out that

> [s]ince Heller, historians, scholars, and judges have continued to express the view that the Court's historical account was flawed. * * *
>
> Consider as an example of these critiques an amici brief filed in this case by historians who specialize in the study of the English Civil Wars. They tell us that Heller misunderstood a key historical point. * * * Heller's conclusion that "individual self-defense" was "the central component" of the Second Amendment's right "to keep and bear Arms" rested upon its view that the Amendment "codified a pre-existing right" that had "nothing whatever to do with service in a militia." * * * That view in turn rested in significant part upon Blackstone having described the right as "'the right of having and using arms for self-preservation and defence,'" which reflected the provision in the English Declaration of Right of 1689 that gave the King's Protestant "'subjects'" the right to "'have Arms for their defence suitable to their Conditions, and as allowed by law.'"[3255] * * * The Framers, said the majority, understood that right "as permitting a citizen to 'repe[l] force by force' when 'the intervention of society in his behalf, may be too late to present an injury.'" * * *
>
> The historians now tell us, however, that the right to which Blackstone referred had, not nothing, but everything, to do with the militia.

[3253] See, e.g., Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 828-830 & note 1 (1991) (collecting cases in which prior constitutional decisions had been overruled).

[3254] 554 U.S. at 599 (opinion of Scalia, J., for the Court) (emphasis in the original). See ante, at 1340-1351.

[3255] See Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 143-144.

> As properly understood at the time of the English Civil Wars, the historians claim, the right to bear arms "ensured that Parliament had the power" to arm the citizenry: "to defend the realm" in the case of a foreign enemy, and to "secure the right of 'self-preservation,'" or "self-defense," should "the sovereign usurp the English Constitution." * * * Thus, the Declaration of Right says that private persons can possess guns only "as allowed by law." * * * Moreover, when Blackstone referred to "'the right of having and using arms for self-preservation and defence,'" he was referring to the right of the people "to take part in the militia to defend their political liberties," and to the right of Parliament (which represented the people) to raise a militia even when the King sought to deny it that power. * * * Nor can the historians find any convincing reason to believe that the Framers had something different in mind than what Blackstone himself meant.[3256]

Now, these "historians who specialize in the study of the English Civil Wars" may have been correct to point out that "'the right of having and using arms for self-preservation and defence'" under British law was no more than a right for the British people to defend themselves against an usurper or tyrant on the British Throne when so authorized by the British Parliament. But apparently they forgot that America's patriots fought their War of Independence against Parliament, as well as against King George III—that the patriots employed "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" to "throw off" the entire abusive British government, together with all of the corpus of strictly British law, "and to institute new Government"[3257]—and that the patriots raised and deployed their Militia on the basis of the principles embodied in American Colonial and State laws, not any laws emanating from the British Parliament. So to claim, as did the "historians", that nonetheless America's patriots understood the Second Amendment as guaranteeing nothing more than the right Blackstone described is little less than Nonsense wearing a dunce cap.

Amazingly, though, after agreeing with the "historians" "that the right to which Blackstone referred had, not nothing, but everything, to do with the militia"—and, therefore, concluding that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in the Second Amendment must "ha[ve], not nothing, but everything, to do with the militia", too—this Justice then failed to ask "What is the relationship between 'the right of the people to keep and bear Arms' and '[a] well regulated Militia'?", "What are the Militia?", "Where are the Militia today?", "Why have the Militia '"largely faded as a popular concern"'?",[3258] and "Can the Militia, in the manner of proverbial old soldiers, just [3256] McDonald, 561 U.S. at ___ (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 3-5 (citing eight scholarly articles critical of Heller, in addition to the "historians'" amici brief).

---

[3257] Declaration of Independence (emphasis supplied).

[3258] The inner quotation is from McDonald, 561 U.S. at ___ (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 8.

silently fade away, with no constitutional consequence?" So one is left with the distinct impression that perhaps the whole shebang amounts to nothing more than comic judicial theater, and of a decidedly slapstick variety.

The matter deserves better treatment than that, however.

a. Application of the Second Amendment to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment. No one doubts that the Second Amendment's command reaches the General Government. Confusion has arisen from the Supreme Court's decision in Barron ex rel. Tiernan v. Mayor of Baltimore,[3259] that the Bill of Rights does not apply to the States. Although Barron has been followed many times over the years in many different contexts, it was wrong when it was written, and is no less wrong today.[3260] Large numbers of Americans have sensed that this was the case since the *mid-*1800s. The question has always been what to do about it.

(1) The answer most widely accepted today is that, for any part of the Bill of Rights to apply to the States, it must be (as the lawyers' jargon has it) "selectively incorporated" by the Supreme Court within the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment: "[N]or shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law". A minority of legal scholars still contends that the Bill of Rights in its entirety applies to the States through that Amendment's Privileges or Immunities Clause: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States". Nothing in particular would be gained by rehearsing in other then outline the convoluted chronicle of how these positions emerged.

By the *mid-*1860s, the political forces that soon coalesced behind the Fourteenth Amendment were intent on overruling the decisions of the Supreme Court in Barron and Scott v. Sandford.[3261] As noted above, Barron had held that the Bill of Rights did not apply to the States. Scott had held that persons of African ancestry, even though free men, could not be "citizens of the United States" and were not entitled to the "rights", "privileges", and "immunities" that the Constitution guaranteed to such "citizens".[3262] Basically, two parts of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment accomplished the reformers' purpose of setting these decisions aside. The Citizenship Clause—to wit, "[a]ll persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside"—overruled Scott; and the [3259] 32 U.S. (7 Peters) 243 (1833).

---

[3260] See generally W. Crosskey, Politics and the Constitution, ante note 206, Volume 2, Chapter XXX. Of course, there should be nothing surprising about that. See, e.g., Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 828-830 & note 1 (1991).

[3261] 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393 (1857).

[3262] See id. (19 Howard) at 403-427.

Privileges or Immunities Clause overruled Barron. Or so the proponents of the Amendment, and anyone who read it with a working knowledge of its legal language and the standing constitutional law of the time, believed. The Amendment also included a Due Process Clause as well as an Equal Protection Clause—to wit, "nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws"—in order to secure minimal constitutional guarantees of fairness and equal treatment to "any person", whether a "citizen[ ]" or not. The Supreme Court, however, almost immediately muddied these waters beyond easy clarification, by effectively nullifying the Privileges or Immunities Clause. Thereafter, apparently recognizing the magnitude of its error but unwilling to admit and repair the damage honestly, the Court began "selectively incorporating" into the Due Process Clause various rights or parts of genuine rights drawn from the Bill of Rights, as well as faux "rights" that the Justices themselves cobbled together from whatever sources fit their fancies. Through this so-called "gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion",[3263] the Due Process Clause eventually became the unstable foundation for an elaborate edifice of supposed "rights" that consisted of two separate tiers: one applicable to the General Government; the other, usually less comprehensive, to the States.[3264]

(2) Rightly understood, "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" include all of the freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, and more besides. For example, the most obvious "privilege[ ]" the Fourteenth Amendment protects which was not included in the Bill of Rights is "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus", which "shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it".[3265] From its placement in the original Constitution, this disability might have been deemed to apply solely to Congress[3266]—leaving the States free to suspend habeas corpus whenever they wished. Although recognizing even a circumscribed power in Congress to suspend habeas corpus was bad enough,[3267] leaving untrammeled licenses

---

[3263] Davidson v. City of New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97, 104 (1878).

[3264] See W. Crosskey, Politics and the Constitution, ante note 206, Volume 2, Chapters XXXI and XXXII.

[3265] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2.

[3266] Compare and contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cls. 2, 3, 5, and 8 with art. I, § 10, cls. 1 and 2.

[3267] See THE GENUINE INFORMATION, DELIVERED TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF MARYLAND, RELATIVE TO THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION, HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, IN 1787, BY LUTHER MARTIN, ESQUIRE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF MARYLAND, AND ONE OF THE DELEGATES IN THE SAID CONVENTION (29 November 1787), reproduced in The Records of the Federal Convention of 1787, ante note 2, Volume 3, at 213: "[I]t was urged, that if we gave this power to the general government, it would be an engine of oppression in its hands; since, whenever a State should oppose its views, however arbitrary and unconstitutional, and refuse submission to them, the general government may declare it to be an act of rebellion, and, suspending the habeas corpus act, may seize upon the persons of those advocates of freedom, who have had virtue and resolution enough to excite the opposition, and may imprison them during its pleasure, in the remotest part of the Union".

to that effect in each of the States was arguably worse. For, even without a suspensory power in the General Government, rogue public officials there could have combined with rogue officials in the States to set aside "the Privilege of the Writ" in the States' courts without any limitation. The Fourteenth Amendment corrected this problem.

Much useful information on this matter is collected in one of the opinions in McDonald.[3268] That compendium need not be examined here, because the equivalence specifically between "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" and the freedoms included within the Bill of Rights should be glaringly apparent in the case of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". For, as Chief Justice Taney opined in Scott, if Negroes were citizens of the United States and thereby "entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens * * * it would give them the full liberty of speech * * * ; to hold public meetings upon political affairs, and to keep and carry arms wherever they went".[3269] If Taney knew of any sources for these "privileges and immunities of citizens" other than the First and especially the Second Amendments, he failed to identify them.

To be sure, applying the Bill of Rights to the States through reference to "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States"—in comparison, for example, with simply declaring that "Amendments I through IX shall apply to the States, as well as to the General Government"—appears today to have been a clumsy way of achieving that end. It was, however, in keeping with the common legal language and understanding of the times, particularly as that terminology had been used in Scott. In any event, once the equivalence between the Bill of Rights and "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" is recognized, the constitutional command that "[n]o State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States" is easy to understand and to apply—and offers the inestimable advantage of affording the American people the selfsame protections for their constitutional rights as against both the General Government and the States. This, of course, would be eminently consistent with the principle of uniformity in America's foundational law that "[t]his Constitution * * * shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding".[3270] And this principle should apply most insistently to those "certain unalienable Rights" "to secure" which the Declaration of Independence attests that "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving [3268] See 561 U.S. at ___ (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgement). This opinion is sullied, however, by its embrace of the error that most of the Bill of Rights originally did not apply to the States. Id. at ___, Slip Opinion at 14-15.

---

[3269] 60 U.S. (19 Howard) at 416-417 (emphasis supplied).

[3270] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

their just powers from the consent of the governed", and "[t]hat whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government".

In addition, properly applied in this particular, the Fourteenth Amendment could be especially valuable, because it prohibits every State from "mak[ing] or enforc[ing] any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States".[3271] Now, a State can "make" a "law" only within her own jurisdiction. But she can "enforce" not only her own "law[s]", but also all valid "law[s]" enacted by the General Government.[3272] So, properly construed, the Privileges or Immunities Clause would preclude the States, not simply from "mak[ing]" and trying to "enforce" their own invalid "law[s]", but also from participating in any manner in the "enforce[ment]" of each and every unconstitutional "law" of the United States that violated any part of the Bill of Rights (among other provisions, both constitutional and statutory, that constitute "privileges or immunities of citizens"). That clause would even require the States to oppose within their own territories the attempted "enforce[ment]" of all such invalid "law[s]" by rogue agents of the General Government. Correctly understood, then, although ironically the Fourteenth Amendment arose out of the suppression of Southern secession, its Privileges or Immunities Clause would provide a firm constitutional basis for the doctrine and practice of "interposition", through which the States would be required to protect their own citizens (who would be both "citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside") from usurpation and tyranny at the hands of rogue officials of the General Government, by invoking their own duty under that Clause! Not only that. Under the aegis of the Privileges or Immunities Clause, "citizens of the United States and of the State[s] wherein they reside" as individuals could demand through their State courts that their States engage in constitutionally mandated "interposition" whenever rogue agents of the General Government threatened to assail those "citizens". Thus, the Tenth Amendment—which the enemies of federalism have long derided as "stat[ing] but a truism"[3273] and as "not operat[ing] as a limitation upon the powers, expressed or implied, delegated to the national government"[3274]—would be fitted with legally argumentative teeth rather sharper than any "truism". Is this perhaps one recondite reason why the Supreme Court has been so careful to render the Privileges or Immunities Clause more or less a dead letter?

Those readers sufficiently masochistic to negotiate the legalistic labyrinth of "'selective incorporation' through the Due Process Clause" will find that doctrine

---

[3271] Emphasis supplied.

[3272] See, e.g., Tafflin v. Levitt, 493 U.S. 455, 458-460 (1990); Testa v. Katt, 330 U.S. 386, 389-394 (1947).

[3273] United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 124 (1941).

[3274] Fernandez v. Wiener, 326 U.S. 340, 362 (1945).

as applied to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" verbally beaten to a well-deserved death in various opinions in McDonald.[3275] The specifics of this rather acrimonious discussion, however, need not be rehashed here, for numerous reasons:

> • As far as the Second Amendment is concerned, except for the requirement that the States not "enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States", the Fourteenth Amendment is superfluous. Section 5 of the Amendment does delegate to Congress the "power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article" against the States. But, with respect to "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", Congress already possessed (and still possesses) such authority under the original Constitution.[3276]
>
> • In principle the doctrine of "selective incorporation" is ridiculous. No fair-minded individual would attribute to the statesmen who wrote and ratified the Fourteenth Amendment an intent to saddle this country with a constitutional rule of construction that required volume upon volume of convoluted judicial mumbo jumbo to apply—and then in what has proven to be manifestly unsatisfactory ways.
>
> • In practice "selective incorporation" is so lacking in either verifiable or falsifiable standards as to be utterly amorphous, leaving "men of common intelligence" to "guess at its meaning and differ as to its application"—which "violates the first essential of due process of law".[3277] This deficiency could be cured if jurists relied upon the exact terminology of the Constitution, understood as Americans in the late 1700s understood it, as their exclusive guide to what "rights" should be "incorporated". That approach, though, would effectively replace "selective incorporation" with the direct application of the entire Bill of Rights, which "selective incorporation" was designed to avoid. And,
>
> • "Selective incorporation" subverts the rule of constitutional law, because through it a tiny clique composed of political appointees of questionable qualifications and perhaps dubious motivations has licensed itself to sit as an ersatz permanent constitutional convention—deciding, not only which freedoms are to be "incorporated" at all, but also the extent to and the conditions under which those freedoms are to be protected. No constitution can long survive if a mere five individuals can dictate with supposed finality to WE THE PEOPLE what constitutes the "fundamental

---

[3275] 561 U.S. at ___ (Alito, J., for the Court), ___ (Scalia, J., concurring), ___ (Stevens, J., dissenting), and ___ (Breyer, J., dissenting).

[3276] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15, 16, and 18; art. IV, § 4; and art. VI, cl. 2.

[3277] See Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926).

> principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions",[3278] "which inhere[ ] in the very idea of free government and [are] the inalienable right[s] of a citizen of such a government",[3279] and which are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty"[3280]—but in the course of such dictation need not adhere to the texts of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, although these are the charters "of all our civil and political institutions" which embody "the very idea of free government" and explain how "the concept of ordered liberty" can be put into practice. And no "right" is secure when five individuals can arrogate to themselves the license to determine what "function [it] serve[s] * * * in contemporary society",[3281] or whether it "continues to receive strong support"[3282]—and can arbitrarily conclude that it serves a "function" too tenuous or receives "support" too feeble to be accorded the status of or preserved as a "right".

Suffice it to say that the slippery doctrine of "selective incorporation" should provide an object lesson to Americans in the extent to which unscrupulous public officials will abuse their authority: at its inception, at the urging of Pride, in order to save their intellectual and political face; in its continuation, at the goading of Ambition, in order to arrogate to themselves powers they would find intolerable in others.

(3) The many fallacies embedded in judicial misinterpretations of the Fourteenth Amendment aside, on its face the Amendment plainly does empower Congress to prohibit rogue officials in the States from "infring[ing]" "the right of people to keep and bear Arms". For example, one Congressional statute explicitly describes its provisions which disallow "confiscation of firearms" as recognizing enforceable "rights, privileges, or immunities".[3283] These are "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States", because the statute applies, without exception, to any and every American who legally possesses a firearm. In principle, moreover, these "privileges" or "immunities" do not run solely against officials, agents, or assistants of the General Government, because they ultimately derive from: (i) the constitutional nature of "the Militia of the several States", which requires near-universal possession of firearms by all individuals eligible for service

---

[3278] Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 535 (1884).

[3279] Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U.S. 78, 106 (1908).

[3280] Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325 (1937).

[3281] Apodaca v. Oregon, 406 U.S. 404, 410 (1972).

[3282] Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 154 (1968).

[3283] An Act Making appropriations for the Department of Homeland Security for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2007, and for other purposes, Act of 4 October 2006, Pub. L. 109-295, TITLE V GENERAL PROVISIONS, § 557 [§ 706(c)(1)], 120 Stat. 1355, 1392; now codified at 42 U.S.C. § 5207(c)(1). This statute is discussed in detail ante, at 1443-1446.

in every State;[3284] (ii) the power and duty of Congress "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia", to which the States are subject;[3285] and (iii) the Second Amendment—for the behavior the statute protects with respect to "the possession" and "carrying" of firearms falls within the ambit of "keep[ing] and bear[ing] Arms". Therefore, through a new statute enacted under its power in Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment "to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of [Section 1 of the Amendment]", Congress could declare that attempts by rogue officials of a State to engage in "confiscation of firearms" "abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States". Similarly, the present Congressional statute secures certain "rights" of "liberty" and "property" with respect to the "possession" and "carrying" of firearms. These types of "rights" Congress could enforce against rogue officials in the States perforce of the command in Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment that no State shall "deprive any person of * * * liberty, or property, without due process of law". Thus, a statute of this kind could be written so as to protect, not just citizens, but also resident aliens "who have made a declaration of intention to become[ ] citizens" and therefore are possibly eligible for the Militia.[3286] And, of course, general judicial remedies—with both civil and criminal penalties—would already be available for the statute's enforcement.[3287]

b. Application of the Second Amendment to the States directly. The Second Amendment need not be "incorporated" into anything, "selectively" or otherwise, in order to apply to the States, because it does so directly.

(1) The Bill of Rights was "added" to the original Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers", by appending "further declaratory and restrictive clauses" intended to "extend[ ] the ground of public confidence in the Government" and "best ensure the beneficent ends of its institution".[3288] "[T]he Government" the Constitution created, did not consist of General Government alone, but was a federal system which included the States as governmental institutions, too. So, promoting "public confidence in the Government" and "ensur[ing] the beneficent ends of its institution" required "ensur[ing]" the proper behavior of the States. After all, Americans could hardly have expected to achieve the Preamble's goal of "form[ing] a more perfect Union" if the people in some of the States "secure[d] the Blessings of Liberty to [them]selves and [their] Posterity", while the people in other States suffered under tyrannies with no legal recourse.

[3284] See ante, Chapters 38 through 40.

[3285] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 and art. VI, cl. 2.

[3286] See 10 U.S.C. § 311(a).

[3287] See 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (civil) and 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242 (criminal).

[3288] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

Now, in certain "restrictive clauses", the original Constitution explicitly denied the States particular powers.[3289] In other "restrictive clauses" the denials were more general and partially implicit.[3290] But, in both cases, "restrict[ions]" there were. On the other hand, the Constitution implicitly left the States free to exercise many other powers, even before the Tenth Amendment emphasized that fact. Because Americans appreciated that "any Form of Government" could conceivably "become[ ] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which "Governments are instituted among Men",[3291] they anticipated that one or more of the States might someday misconstrue or abuse these powers, too, contrary to "the beneficent ends of [the Government's] institution" as set out in the Constitution's Preamble. To prevent such a possibility or to rectify its sequelae, further "restrictive clauses" applicable to the States were in order. Many (albeit not all) of those "restrictive clauses" were couched in broad language intended to apply to both the States and the General Government—because, of course, the potential for "misconstruction or abuse" of governmental authority was unique neither to the latter nor to the former.

(2) The text of the Bill of Rights proves that, in a few particulars, it literally applies to only the General Government, whereas in most others it literally applies, and therefore was meant to apply, to both the General Government and the States.

(a) Conclusive evidence of this appears in the First and the Seventh Amendments. The whole of the First Amendment is subject to the command, "Congress shall make no law", and part of the Seventh Amendment to the declaration, "no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law".[3292] Plainly, these provisions can apply only to the General Government, because they say so. But if the entire Bill of Rights applied only to the General Government, then the words "Congress" and "of the United States" would be superfluous. The First Amendment would commence, "No law shall be enacted"; and the Seventh would read simply, "no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court". No words in the Constitution are superfluous and without their own particular effect, however.[3293] So the words of limitation emphasized above must have been employed to distinguish the reach of these provisions from that of other parts of the Bill of Rights.

[3289] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cls. 1 through 3.

[3290] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 with art. I, § 8.

[3291] Declaration of Independence (emphasis supplied).

[3292] Emphases supplied.

[3293] E.g., Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1805); Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. (14 Peters) 540, 570-571 (1840) (opinion of Taney, C.J.); Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 534 (1884); Blake v. McClung, 172 U.S. 239, 260-261 (1898); Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 87 (1900); Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 572-573 (1933).

(b) The remaining eight Amendments are phrased in broad language that contains not even an implicit limitation to "Congress" or "the United States", let alone anything that could be taken as an exclusion of the States. So they must be read to reach the States. After all, the general prohibitions contained within the Constitution must be applied in as comprehensive a manner as they are stated;[3294] and "where no exception is made in terms, none will be made by mere implication or construction".[3295] Thus—

• The Third Amendment provides that "[n]o Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law".[3296] Although this prohibition might seem of scant consequence today, it was considered a sufficiently serious "injur[y] and usurpation[ ]" in 1776 that the Declaration of Independence indicted King George III "[f]or quartering large bodies of armed troops among us". And rightly so. For "quartering * * * armed troops" in private houses offers a proficuous means for putting "martial law" into effect without openly declaring it, by insinuating "Soldier[s]" throughout the population under circumstances in which they can keep a watchful eye on dissidents and enforce order immediately.

The Amendment's reference to "Soldier[s]" must include both "soldiers" and "sailors" strictly so called, because it could not be less offensive to have the latter, rather than the former, forcibly "quartered in any house". A "Soldier", then, could be a member of "the Army or Navy of the United States"[3297]—that is, the "Armies" that Congress may "raise and support" or "the Navy" it may "provide and maintain", "the land and naval Forces" "for the Government and Regulation" of which it may "make Rules".[3298] But a "Soldier" could also be counted among the "Troops, or [men serving on] Ships of War" that the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress", or may raise in order to "engage in War" when "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3299] A "Soldier" could also be a member of one of "the Militia of the several States", because Militiamen were often described as "soldiers" in *pre-*constitutional Militia Acts. In that case, he might be "call[ed] forth to "be employed in the Service

---

[3294] See, e.g., Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. (6 Cranch) 87, 137-139 (1810); Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 122, 199-200, 204-206 (1819).

[3295] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U.S. (12 Peters) 657, 722 (1838). Accord, Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 14 U.S. (1 Wheaton) 304, 338-339 (1816).

[3296] See generally, William S. Fields and David T. Hardy, "The Third Amendment and the Issue of the Maintenance of Standing Armies: A Legal History", 35 American Journal of Legal History (Temple) 393 (1991); Tom W. Bell, "The Third Amendment: Forgotten but Not Gone", 2 William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal 117 (1993).

[3297] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3298] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12, 13, and 14.

[3299] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

of the United States";[3300] or he might be employed in the service of his own State. So, because someone could be a "Soldier" of or attached to either level of government, "in time of war" he could be "quartered in any house * * * in a manner to be prescribed by" either the "law" of the General Government or the "law" of some State, depending upon circumstances.

Yet, during the *pre-*constitutional era, no basis existed for concluding that "the Owner" of "any house" would find it more objectionable to be required to provide "quarter[s]" for some "Soldier" of the United States, as opposed to a "Soldier" from some State, including his own. For example, in 1777 Rhode Island's General Assembly complained that > the Soldiers serving in this State, who have been quartered in the College Edifice and other public Buildings, have broke the Windows, Doors and Floors of the same, and have done other Mischief, to the great Hurt and Damage as well of the Public as of Individuals; and notwithstanding the frequent Orders which have been issued by the Honorable General Spencer to prevent the same, all the Buildings where they are quartered are marked with their Devastations:

>
> WHEREFORE, * * * Major-General Spencer * * * is hereby requested to take such effectual Methods to prevent, for the future, any Waste or Destruction of the Houses, Barracks or Buildings where the Soldiers are quartered, as to him shall appear best for the Preservation thereof.{EN-2055}

If "the Soldiers serving in this State", many if not most of whom were Rhode Island's own "Soldiers", behaved so destructively in public buildings, which presumably were, if not well protected, at least under some public officials' close observation—including "the College Edifice in the Town of Providence", which was "so greatly damaged as to render the same useless for the Purpose" of a "Barracks"{EN-2056}—what depredations might they have committed, or been expected to commit, in mere private homes?!

Neither, during the *pre-*constitutional era, did any basis exist for believing that the "manner" in which "Soldier[s] shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house" was "to be prescribed by law" other than by the States' own legislatures. For example, during the French and Indian War in the *mid-*1750s, Virginia's General Assembly observed that "there is and may be occasion for the marching and quartering of soldiers in several parts of this colony", and therefore > enacted * * * That * * * it shall and may be lawful to and for any one justice of the peace in any county, city or borough within this colony, and > he is hereby required to billet the soldiers in his majesty's service in ordinaries and licensed taverns, and in no private houses whatsoever * * * . And in case any person shall find himself aggrieved in that such justice of the peace has billeted in his house a greater number of soldiers than he ought to bear in proportion to his neighbours, and shall complain thereof to any two other justices of the peace * * * , such justices are hereby impowered to relieve such person, by ordering such and so many soldiers to be removed and billeted upon such other person or persons, keeping public houses, * * * as they shall see cause; and such other person or persons shall be obliged to receive such soldiers accordingly.

---

[3300] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

>
> * * * [T]he soldiers so billeted * * * shall be received by the persons on whom they are billeted, and furnished with vinegar, salt, and the use of fire to dress their victuals, without demanding any reward or satisfaction for the same.{EN-2057}

Although "soldiers in his majesty's service" were to be billeted, Virginia deferred for the applicable rule neither to the British Army, nor to Parliament, nor even to her own Governor as "commander in chief" of the Colony's military forces, but instead empowered her Justices of the Peace—Colonial civil officials—to oversee the matter. Moreover, the General Assembly prohibited the quartering of "soldiers" in any "private houses whatsoever", even though in some Locales the available "ordinaries", "licensed taverns", and other like "public houses" could have proven insufficient. In this, the General Assembly went beyond what became the strictures of the Third Amendment, asserting its authority to immunize "private houses" from the quartering of "soldiers" altogether, even if high-ranking officers in the British Army had demanded such billeting.

Then, in 1781 Rhode Island's General Assembly observed that > it frequently happens that troops are quartered upon the inhabitants of the town of Providence in undue proportions, which is incident to all populous towns;—

>
> It is therefore * * * resolved, that, upon any complaint being made thereof, the members of the General Assembly * * * living in the said town, * * * be * * * empowered and directed to inquire into the circumstances * * * ; and if it shall appear reasonable, to remove the persons quartered, and to provide quarters for them in such other families as can receive them with less inconvenience[.]{EN-2058}

Self-evidently, the General Assembly recognized that "the inhabitants" of the State's Towns had a justifiable "complaint" against the State for having "troops * * * quartered upon the[m] * * * in undue proportions", and therefore assumed the task of investigating and correcting the "inconvenience[s]" occasioned thereby—in effect, imposing on its own members the personal duty of fulfilling what became the terms of the Third Amendment.

So, today, to suggest that applying that Amendment to the States would amount to an unheard-of and burdensome imposition flies in the face of history as well as common sense. Rather, the Amendment must protect "the Owner" of every "house" from any "inconvenience" associated with the quartering of "Soldier[s]" in every eventuality, by applying to both the General Government and the States.

•The Fourth Amendment provides that "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized".

> This provision of the Constitution was largely due to the great awakening caused by the resort of the colonial authorities of Massachusetts Bay to "writs of assistance," as certain general search-warrants were called. * * * James Otis * * * took up the popular side, making in that behalf the most memorable speech of the times. * * * "The child Independence was born on that occasion," said John Adams.[3301]

Plainly, Americans would never have acquiesced in future violations at the hands of obnoxious functionaries of either the General Government or the States of a "right" previous violations of which by British officials had been a root-cause of the Colonies' fighting a long and sanguinary war in order to "dissolve the political bands which ha[d] connection them with" the Mother Country.[3302] So, unless compelling evidence can be adduced that "the people" in 1791 were content to be less "secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures" by thugish State officials than by equally brutish minions of the General Government, the Fourth Amendment must apply to both.

Any honest evaluation of the legal principles involved must support that conclusion. If no one is "to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures", then anyone can be deprived of the right to "liberty"—through "seizures" of "persons", of the right to "property"—through "searches and seizures" of "houses, papers, and effects", and even of the right to "life" itself—which may all too easily be threatened by trigger-happy SWAT teams in the course of "unreasonable searches and seizures". And, overall, no one can claim any right to "the pursuit of Happiness" if his rights to liberty, property, and even life itself can be abridged "unreasonabl[y]" at any time.

[3301] J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1901, at 647-648 note (c).

[3302] Declaration of Independence.

Yet the Declaration of Independence attests that "to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed".[3303] So, under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", no such "Government" can claim a power to conduct "unreasonable searches and seizures"—for any such purported power must be manifestly "[un]just", and therefore beyond the authority of "the governed" to delegate to their "Government".

• The Fifth Amendment provides that "[n]o person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation". Nowhere does this Amendment even suggest that it applies solely to the General Government. To the contrary: It refers broadly to "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime", not specifically to "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, under the Laws of the United States"—to "the same offence", not to "the same offence under the Laws of the United States"—to "any criminal case", not to "any criminal case prosecuted under the Laws of the United States"—and to "private property * * * taken for public use", not to "private property * * * taken for public use by the United States".

Indeed, it is apparently impossible for the Fifth Amendment to refer, even implicitly, to "private property * * * taken for public use by the United States", because the authority of the United States to exercise a power of "eminent domain" is anything but patent on the face of the original Constitution. WE THE PEOPLE delegated no such power in those specific terms. The only way in which the Constitution indicates that the United States can acquire territory from within the States, over which Congress can then act as a proprietor by "exercis[ing] exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever", is by "purchas[ing]" "all" such "Places" "by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be".[3304] This provision radically circumscribes Congress's authority—for it is not limited by its terms to "Places" the States themselves own, but encompasses "all Places" whatsoever, including those owned by private parties. Obviously, the Constitution would not bother to spell out a specific procedure that limits Congress to "purchas[ing]" "all Places" only with "the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be", if Congress could simply expropriate those "Places" directly from private parties under color of "eminent domain" without anyone's "Consent".

[3303] Emphasis supplied.

[3304] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17.

To be sure, as part of an arrangement for "purchas[ing]" such "Places", "the States in which the [Places] shall be" might employ their own powers of "eminent domain" to obtain public ownership of those "Places", and then sell them to the United States. In that case, though, the injunction that "private property [shall not] be taken for public use without just compensation" could apply only to the States which actually took the properties in the first instance, not to the United States which subsequently "purchased" them.

The manner in which the Fifth Amendment deals with "cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger" provides further proof that the Amendment must apply to both the General Government and the States. First, and most obviously, the phrase "the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger" does not by its own terms apply solely to "such Part of th[e Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States" "when called into the actual Service of the United States".[3305] For the Militia (in "Part" or in whole) "may be employed in the Service of the United States" for three reasons only: "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3306] It very well may be that "Invasions" would occur "in time of War", and that "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union" and "suppress[ing] Insurrections" would occur "in time of * * * public danger". But a "time of War" could arise before the Militia were "call[ed] forth" for "the Service of the United States"—as when a State "engage[d] in War" if she were "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as w[ould] not admit of delay".[3307] And a "time of * * * public danger" could arise solely within a State from some cause wholly unrelated to any of the three purposes for which the Militia may be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States". When the Militia are "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States", they are subject to such rules as Congress may "provide * * * for governing * * * them".[3308] No one doubts that the Fifth Amendment recognizes as much, but also guarantees that in all other circumstances the General Government will not hold any Militiaman (which amounts to every able-bodied adult) "to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury". When the Militia are not "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States", they remain instrumentalities of the several States, where "in time of War or other public danger" their members may be subject to specific Militia discipline when on active duty. So, by a parity of reasoning, the Fifth Amendment must recognize that, too, and guarantee that in all other circumstances for which the Militia might be activated the [3305] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

---

[3306] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3307] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3308] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

States will not hold any Militiaman (which amounts to every able-bodied adult) "to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury".

Second, the general terms "land or naval forces", without qualification, encompass both "the Army and Navy of the United States" ("the land and naval Forces" as to which Congress may "make Rules for the[ir] Government and Regulation") and the "Troops, or Ships of War" that the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" or may raise even without such "Consent" in time of "War" or when "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3309] The word "Militia" refers to "the Militia of the several States". A "person" in the "land or naval forces" of the United States at any time,[3310] or in the "Part of the[Militia] * * * employed in the Service of the United States" when "call[ed] forth" "in time of War or public danger" "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections or repel Invasions", is subject to the plenary "military" jurisdiction of the United States.[3311] So the Amendment's denial to him of a right to "a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury" when he is "held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime * * * in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in [that Part of] the Militia", simply confirms the exclusive nature of that jurisdiction with respect to such "cases". Otherwise, the Amendment emphasizes that the General Government cannot invoke procedures of so-called "martial law" against the average "person" (whether an American citizen or not) "held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime". This, of course, means that no one, citizen or alien, whose "case[ ]" does not in fact "aris[e] in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger", may be tried before some "military commission" or other junta if he is "held to answer for [the] capital, or otherwise infamous crime" of "engag[ing] in" or "purposefully and materially support[ing] hostilities against the United States"—and, therefore, that one of the statutory cornerstones of the present-day "war on terrorism" being waged by rogue and deluded officials of the General Government is undeniably unconstitutional.[3312] And rightly so. For one of the charges the Declaration of Independence hurled at [3309] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12, 13, and 14; and art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

---

[3310] See Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U.S. 109, 114 (1895). Contrast O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258, 268-273 (1969), with Relford v. Commandant, 401 U.S. 355, 362-369 (1971).

[3311] Compare U.S. Const. amend. V with art. I, § 8, cls. 14, 15, and 16.

[3312] See An Act To authorize the trial by military commissions for violations of the law of war, and for other purposes ("Military Commissions Act of 2006"), Act of 17 October 2006, Pub. L. 109-366, § 3 [§ 948a(1)(A)(i) and 948c], 120 Stat. 2600, 2601, 2602; superseded by An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2010 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes ("National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2010"), Act of 28 October 2009, Pub. L. 111-84, TITLE XVIII—MILITARY COMMISSIONS ("Military Commissions Act of 2009"), § 1802 [§§ 948a(7) and 948c], 123 Stat. 2190, 2575, 2576; now codified at 10 U.S.C. § 948a(7) and 948c.

King George III was that "[h]e has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil Power".

A "person" in the "land or naval forces" (that is, the "Troops, or Ships of War") of a State, or in that "Part of the[Militia]" not "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" but instead "in actual service [for the State] in time of War or public danger" is within the State's exclusive "military" jurisdiction. So, applied to the States, the Fifth Amendment simply confirms the exclusive nature of their jurisdiction with respect to "cases" involving "capital, or otherwise infamous crime[s]" that "aris[e] in the [States'] land or naval forces, or in the[ir] Militia" when deployed in their service. If, however, the Amendment does not apply to the States, then all "person[s]" in every State, under all circumstances, may "be held to answer for * * * infamous crime[s]"—which could be defined as any "crime" the punishment for which fickle "public opinion" happens to consider "infamous"[3313]—by whatever procedures a State chooses to adopt, including "military commissions" or other like bodies that "render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power".[3314] This follows apodictically according to the schema of the Tenth Amendment: Because the Fifth Amendment undoubtedly applies to the General Government, the power to "h[o]ld [any person] to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia" has "not [been] delegated to the United States by the Constitution". If (hypothetically) the Amendment does not apply to the States, then that power has not been "prohibited * * * to the States", because it is not arguably proscribed anywhere else in the original Constitution or its Amendments. Therefore, that power must be "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". Being a power with respect to procedures for criminal prosecutions, however, it is not capable of being exercised by the people directly (at least not in the normal course of events). So it must be "reserved to the States" alone. Thus, if the Fifth Amendment does not apply to the States, they may engage in precisely the type of behavior that the Declaration of Independence singled out as one of the "injuries and usurpations * * * having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over the[ ] States". The self-contradictory absurdity of this result compels the conclusion that the Amendment does apply to them.

Thus, because the clause "[n]o person shall be held to answer..." in the Fifth Amendment applies to both the General Government and the States, the subsequent clauses that protect "any person" and "private property" (which is necessarily owned by some "person") must also apply to both the General [3313] Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 427 (1885).

---

[3314] Declaration of Independence (emphasis supplied).

Government and the States, there being no differentiation within the Amendment among any of those clauses on that score.

• The Sixth Amendment provides that, "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining Witnesses in his favor; and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence". Here, once again, an Amendment is couched in general terms: "[i]n all criminal prosecutions", without exception, not "[i]n all criminal prosecutions by the United States" alone. Indeed, such a limitation would hardly make sense—for, where "the judicial Power of the United States" is concerned, the original Constitution provided that "[t]he Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury",[3315] and thus rendered the Sixth Amendment unnecessary for that purpose.

Although the guarantee of "a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury" did not appear in the original Constitution, why that should have been of concern to Americans in 1791 only with respect to the General Government, but not the States, remains a mystery. Could any Americans of that time have considered it unexceptionable for the States to delay trials indefinitely, to conduct trials in camera, to seat biased juries—or, worst of all, to deny trial by jury entirely? As just explained for the Fifth Amendment, on the hypothesis that the Sixth Amendment does not apply to the States, the Tenth Amendment would compel the conclusion that the States could do all of that. Yet no one in 1791 would have accepted that result, knowing as all Americans did that the Declaration of Independence had castigated King George III specifically "[f]or depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury". For if each of the States could have denied trial by jury, it would have affected most, not just "many" cases, as most criminal prosecutions in those days took place in the States' courts.

That the Sixth Amendment secures "an impartial jury of the State and district" does not imply its exclusive applicability to the General Government, either. Indeed, this part of the Amendment, too, is largely superfluous as far as that government is concerned, because the original Constitution provided, with respect to "[t]he Trial of all Crimes" under "[t]he judicial Power of the United States", that "such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed".[3316] So if this part of the Amendment relating to "jur[ies] of the State[s]" is to have any independent effect, it must be with respect to "criminal prosecutions" by the States. The addition of the term "district" in the Amendment does not exclude its application to the States, because someone charged with the commission of a crime in a "district" of his home State—which could be a county, a city, a borough, a township, or a village—would normally not want to be tried in a different "district", let alone a different State, whether in a court of a State or of the General Government. Certainly in 1791 Americans did not need to be paranoid to foresee the possibility that rogue public officials in various States, with the "Consent" of a rogue Congress, might "enter into * * * Agreement[s] or Compact[s]"[3317] that would enable them to convict popular dissidents of supposed "crimes" by shunting their trials to distant venues in which sympathetic juries could not be had, or hostile ones always would be. After all, misbehavior of exactly that sort had been at the heart of the Declaration of Independence's indictment of the King "[f]or transporting us beyond the seas to be tried for pretended offences". For the most notorious example, the patriots' anger at the King's determination to "transport[ ]" suspects and witnesses in the Gaspée affair "beyond the seas" for trial in England had sparked the formation of the Committees of Correspondence, which perhaps more than anything else had served to unify the Colonists in their opposition to British oppression.[3318]

---

[3315] U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 and § 2, cl. 3.

[3316] U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 and § 2, cl. 3.

Finally, it is impossible to imagine that Americans who would have objected to even the possibility of a blanket denial of trial by jury throughout the States in 1791 would have acquiesced in the States' denial to any criminal defendant of the most familiar incidents of a fair trial before any trier of fact: namely, "be[ing] informed of the nature and cause of the accusation", being able to "confront[ ] * * * witnesses against him", "hav[ing] compulsory process for obtaining Witnesses in his favor", and "hav[ing] the assistance of counsel for his defence". Yet, if the Sixth Amendment secures these safeguards against the General Government alone, by the logic of the Tenth Amendment the States can deny any or all of them. The consequence of such a construction being intolerable, that construction must be inadmissible.

• The Seventh Amendment provides that, "[i]n Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law". As with the Fifth Amendment, the Seventh speaks in the most general terms of "Suits at common law", without exception, not "Suits at common law arising in the Courts of the United States". In 1791, Americans knew that next to no "common law of the United States" (as opposed to "common law of the States") existed; and perhaps little would have developed for a long time[3319]—which meant that most "Suits at common law" were to be litigated in the States' courts. To be sure, Americans certainly expected that some "Suits at common law" would eventually be tried in "such inferior Courts [of the General Government] as the Congress may from time to time establish",[3320] because the original Constitution provided that "[t]he judicial Power [of the United States] shall extend * * * to Controversies * * * between Citizens of different States",[3321] which would have been expected often to arise under the States' "common law". But surely not all such suits, or even a large proportion of them, would have been anticipated to arise in the General Government's courts—and certainly not in the earliest days of the Republic, when Congress was just beginning to "establish" those "inferior Courts". So Americans must have understood that, if the Seventh Amendment were to have any significant practical utility, it would have to apply to the States. Thus, although it is possible to read the Amendment as providing that, "[i]n Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury [in Courts of the United States] shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law", it is far more plausible to read it as providing that, "[i]n Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury [in the Courts both of the United States and of the several States] shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law". The latter reading enjoys the added advantage of making the most of the qualification that "no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States"—because Americans in 1791 were surely more concerned that "Court[s] of the United States" might wantonly disturb the verdicts of juries from the State courts than that a State's own higher courts would improperly interfere with verdicts of juries rendered in that State's lower courts. The only other alternative reading—"[i]n suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury [in the Courts of the United States] shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury [in the Courts of the United States or of the several States], shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law"—is too disjointed to be credible. Why should "fact[s] tried by a jury" in both Courts not be "reexamined in any Court of the United States", but "the right of trial by jury" itself, upon which would depend the "fact[s]" that were found, be preserved only in the Courts of the United States?

---

[3317] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3318] See ante, at 88-93.

[3319] See W. Crosskey, Politics and the Constitution, ante note 206, Volume 2, Chapter XXIV.

[3320] U.S. Const. art. III, § 1. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9.

[3321] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1.

Finally, once again returning to the logic of the Tenth Amendment, if the Seventh Amendment applied exclusively to the General Government, then the States would have no duty under the Constitution to "preserve[ ]" "trial by jury" at all. In that case, though, there would be "no fact[s] tried by a jury" in State courts to be "reexamined in any Court of the United States" (or anywhere else, for that matter)—and therefore that part of the Amendment would be rendered nugatory. No American in 1791, however, would have believed that the Seventh and Tenth Amendments affirmatively endorsed the proposition that the States could simply dispense altogether with trial by jury "[i]n Suits at common law". True, the State's governments were lawful governments, all operating under some constitution or charter. But the British government had been the Colonists' lawful government in the 1770s, also operating under what both Britons and Americans had called a "constitution"—yet everyone in 1791 remembered how the Declaration of Independence had attacked King George III "[f]or depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury". Was such oppression more tolerable coming from rogue officials in the States than it was from the King?

•The Eighth Amendment provides that "[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted". Suffice it to point out that, applying the logic of the Tenth Amendment, if the Eighth Amendment constrains only the General Government, then the Constitution licenses the States to exercise some "reserved" power to inflict "cruel and unusual punishments" on their citizens. But even to suggest this verges on the cusp of madness, because in all of its denunciations the Declaration of Independence never once charged George III with such barbarism. The Declaration did calumniate the King for "transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to compleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty & perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation"; and for "excit[ing] domestic insurrections amongst us, and * * * endeavour[ing] to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions". But even he perpetrated those excesses only as expedients in the course of waging a brutal civil war, not as a regular policy during times of peace.

•The Ninth Amendment provides that "[t]he enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people". Now, logically, the Ninth Amendment must apply to the States as well as to the General Government—or else how could "the people" fully "retain[ ]" the "other[ ]" "rights" (whatever they may be) to which the Amendment refers? If "the people" "retained" those "other[ ]" "rights" merely as against the General Government but not as against the States, or merely as against the States but not as against the General Government, their retention in both cases would be imperfect and impermanent, because either the General Government or the States could deprive them of those "rights" to any degree at any time.

More specifically, "[t]he enumeration, in the Constitution, of certain rights" is not limited by its terms only to "certain rights" that run exclusively against the General Government.[3322] So, because "[t]he enumeration * * * of [those] rights" which plainly run against the States in the original Constitution "shall not be construed to deny or disparage other[rights of a like nature] retained by the people", "the people" can assert the Ninth Amendment against the States, as well as against the General Government, in favor of whatever "[un]enumerat[ed]" rights American legal history supports.

• The Tenth Amendment provides that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". This Amendment explicitly limits the States, as well as the General Government—or else how could "the people" have fully "reserved" to themselves the "powers" (whatever they may be), to which the Amendment refers? The "powers" "reserved to the people" cannot be exercised by either the United States or the States. As to those powers, "the people" have corresponding rights as against both the General Government and the States.

• In the foregoing context, it should hardy be surprising that the Second Amendment applies to both the General Government and the States.

First, the necessary application of the Second Amendment to the States derives from the constitutional position of the Militia as permanent parts of the federal system, and the nature of the Militia as "the Militia of the several States", composed of "the people" themselves. If a Congress controlled by rogue politicians attempted to violate the Second Amendment, State officials loyal to the Constitution would not be compelled to aid and abet Congress or to acquiesce in its actions, because the Militia are their own States' Militia, not "the Militia of the United States". If one or more States controlled by rogue politicians attempted to violate the Amendment, Members of Congress loyal to the Constitution could intervene in order to secure Congress's ability "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3323] In either of those cases, although they were the real parties in interest, "the people" themselves would not need to invoke the Second Amendment, because either their States or Congress would do so on their behalf. But what if rogue politicians, concerting their misdeeds in tandem in both Congress

---

[3322] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cls. 3 and 8 with art. I, § 10, cl. 1. "The enumeration, in the Constitution" must refer to both the original Constitution and the first eight Amendments in the Bill of Rights, because from the perspective of the Ninth Amendment those Amendments are part and parcel of the Constitution.

[3323] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 and art. VI, cl. 2.

and the States, attempted to violate the Amendment? In that case, for the Amendment to provide "the people" with a claim against rogue officials in the General Government alone would not suffice; a parallel claim against rogue officials in the States would also be needed. Such a conjunction of misbehavior might not have existed in 1791. But Americans of that day surely did not deny the possibility that it might occur in the future—as it has occurred, in the flood of "gun controls" which has inundated this country at every level of the federal system. They knew that, just as "the legality of [any governmental] power must be estimated not by what it will do but by what it can do",[3324] so too must the reach of an Amendment limiting public officials' powers be gauged not solely by the forms of public officials' misbehavior familiar in the present but as well by the novel forms of usurpation and tyranny which might assault "the people" in the future.

Second, the Second Amendment itself explains why a right of "the people" as against the States is imperative. The Amendment declares that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". But the Constitution provides for no "well regulated"—or even any—"Militia of the United States", only "the Militia of the several States". (Although the Constitution allows "the Militia of the several States" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" in certain circumstances,[3325] it does not deprive them of their status as State institutions through such temporary "Service".) So the set of "free State[s]" for which "well regulated Militia" are "necessary" must include each and every one of "the several States"—as well, of course, as the Union composed of them all. Now, inasmuch as "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is operationally essential to "[a] well regulated Militia", and inasmuch as "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State", and inasmuch as every one of "the several States" is "a free State", therefore "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" must be "necessary to the security of" each of the several States. And inasmuch as no "free State" may undermine her own "security"—especially by "infring[ing]" "the right of [her own] people" which her own "supreme Law" declares to be "necessary to th[at] "security"—that "right" must be enforceable against each of the States, as well as against the Union.

Third, every "free State" in the United States must have "a Republican Form of Government".[3326] The Second Amendment declares that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State"—which means that such a Militia is an inseparable, integral component of "a Republican Form of Government". "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed", because the actual exercise of that right is the most important

---

[3324] Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, 162 (1921) (McKenna, J., dissenting).

[3325] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3326] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

characteristic of "[a] well regulated Militia". Therefore, inasmuch as each State must maintain "a Republican Form of Government", or be compelled to comply with that requirement by the United States, each State must guarantee "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" both within her own jurisdiction through her own laws, and within the jurisdiction of every other State through her participation in the General Government. That is, the Second Amendment applies not just to each State individually but even to all of the States collectively.

Of course, the Second Amendment does not preclude the enactment of laws that protect and promote "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". For example, without offending the Amendment, Congress could prohibit the States from disarming "the people", or from denying them the opportunity to arm themselves. And the States could enact laws prohibiting the enforcement within their territories of any purported Congressional statute that attempted to disarm "the people", to prevent the States from arming "the people" for service in their Militia, or to prohibit "the people" from arming themselves.

If, however, the Militia of the several States were revitalized along proper constitutional lines, the issue of whether the Second Amendment applies to the States of its own force or through some clause in the Fourteenth Amendment, along with all of the attendant problems of "gun control" created by rogue officials in both the General Government and the States, would disappear. For in "[a] well regulated Militia", every eligible individual (other than conscientious objectors and those permissibly exempted for different reasons) must be fully armed and accoutred at all times—and therefore must enjoy an absolute "right * * * to keep and bear Arms" as against all public officials.

c. The effect of the Second Amendment on private parties. The nature of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" demands that the Second Amendment be applied to private parties as well as to public officials. This is not such an odd requirement as it might first appear. Section 1 of the Thirteenth Amendment prohibits "slavery [ ]or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duty convicted"—yet throughout history, both "slavery" and "involuntary servitude" usually involved the purported ownership as private property of one man by another for life or for a term of years—and therefore the Thirteenth Amendment can still be applied to private individuals today, whenever some private arrangement imposes any of "the badges and incidents" of slavery.[3327] To be sure, in these situations there will always lurk some involvement of rogue public officials in the background; for in the final analysis any claim of "private property" in another human being will always depend for its efficacy upon governmental enforcement of the putative owner's rights, either by commission or omission. With this caveat, the only question in the case of the Second Amendment is whether a sound basis exists for applying it to private parties.

---

[3327] See, e.g., Jones v. Alfred H. Mayer Company, 392 U.S. 409 (1968).

(1) Certain ostensibly legitimate claims should come immediately to mind. For example, executions of civil judgments should never be allowed to deprive judgment-debtors of firearms, ammunition, or related accoutrements.[3328] And lawsuits attempting to shut down or curtail the activities of firing ranges and gun clubs for reasons other than the actual physical endangerment of persons or things on neighboring properties should be required to be dismissed as "frivolous", and the parties and attorneys responsible for them required to pay the opposing parties' attorneys' fees and costs. In such cases, so-called "governmental action" through the courts effectuates the plaintiffs' attempts to deprive persons of "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms".[3329]

(2) Of more long-term consequence are actions that should be taken against aggressive proponents of "gun control". "A well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is the most important condition precedent for "[a] well regulated Militia". Therefore, "th[at] right" is "necessary to the security of a free State". "[T]he right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is also necessary to enable "the People" to exercise their "Right * * * to alter or to abolish" "any Form of Government that becomes destructive of th[eir unalienable Rights]", and especially "their right" and "their duty, to throw off [an abusive] Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security".[3330] "Gun control" is antithetical to "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", and therefore to "[a] well regulated Militia", and therefore to "the security of a free State"—and therefore to "a free State" altogether. Any "Form of Government" that attempts to impose thoroughgoing "gun control" on Americans will have proven to be, by that malign endeavor alone, "destructive" of all of WE THE PEOPLE'S rights, because it will threaten to deny THE PEOPLE their ultimate remedy against oppression under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". Thus, because "gun control" is inevitably the primary instrument of usurpation and tyranny, it is inherently antagonistic to both the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. And those who even propose it, let alone work for its implementation, are WE THE PEOPLE'S implacable enemies.

The nature of "gun control" is so notorious that no one burdened with even the lowest level of literacy in the modern political history of Western civilization can credibly claim to be unaware of its evil consequences in one society after another. Certainly no one in public office in America can plead ignorance. For officials of

---

[3328] See ante, at 295-296 (Rhode Island); 460-463 and 715-717 (Virginia).

[3329] See Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948).

[3330] Declaration of Independence.

both the General Government and the States "shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution".[3331] If they are aware that they do not understand in detail and in historical context what they solemnly promise "to support" with respect to the Militia Clauses of the original Constitution and the Second Amendment, or if they take their "Oath[s] or Affirmation[s]" with willful blindness to or in reckless disregard of those matters, they are guilty of perjury or false swearing, no less than if they do understand but secretly intend not "to support" "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" (and all it entails), or if, with such understanding, they fail, neglect, or refuse "to support" that "right" later on. In short, everyone in public office who promotes "gun control" must be presumed to be no less than an aspiring usurper or tyrant—the only defense in mitigation for such an individual (other than a claim of insanity) being the admission that he knew so little about the subject when he took his "Oath or Affirmation" that he perjured himself or swore falsely, and subsequently made no attempt to correct his ignorance.

Moreover, everyone in private life who promotes candidates for public office with the goal of enacting "gun control" into law through their efforts, or who lobbies for "gun control" among legislators, or who importunes judges to rule in favor of "gun control", or who propagandizes the populace on behalf of "gun control" is no less than an accessory to whatever usurpation and tyranny "gun control" might foster. Indeed, these individuals quite often are decidedly more culpable than rogue public officials, because they may be the actual directors of the plot, the officials being mere marionettes who dance on the strings of campaign-contributions, blackmail, or any other forms of political favors, corruption, or coercion.

The machinations of these factious cabals can be thwarted in numerous relatively simple ways. For example: First, patriots should demand "zero tolerance" within their communities for groups that advocate "zero tolerance" for firearms, especially among America's youth. Second, places of public accommodation should be prohibited from banning the legitimate possession of firearms by their patrons. Third, neither the General Government nor any State should grant tax exemptions or other special benefits to groups that promote "gun control" through propaganda, agitation, or lobbying. Fourth, public law-enforcement agencies should terminate all contacts with groups that are active in "gun control", and certainly never engage, consult, or acknowledge any of their personnel as "advisors" or "experts". Fifth, officers, members, agents, and especially financial supporters of groups that promote "gun control" should be publicly exposed and then shunned whenever they have the temerity to appear among honest citizens. Apologists for "gun control" should be condemned as no less pariahs than apologists for antebellum chattel slavery—because, in effect, the two are identical.

[3331] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

Even more potent remedies are available for the most malignant manifestations of this kind of organized aggression against "the security of a free State". For instance, whether in public office or private station, "gun controllers" who conspire "under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom" "to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person * * * in the free exercise * * * of any right * * * secured to him by the Constitution"—including in particular "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" secured by the Second Amendment—can be prosecuted by the General Government.[3332] This, however, is a problematic approach at the present time, because some of the worst offenders against the Second Amendment are to be found in or allied with the United States Department of Justice.

Going further, if they do their work circumspectly and carefully, Congress and the States' legislatures can constitutionally suppress subversive private organizations that agitate and propagandize on behalf of "gun control" and conspire with candidates for public office and rogue public officials to impose "gun control" on WE THE PEOPLE. Not so long ago, the Constitution was held to allow prosecution of certain activities of the Communist Party of the United States that were aimed at overthrowing the governments of the United States and of the several States by force and violence and installing in their places a centralized "dictatorship of the proletariat".[3333] Although no statute or judicial decision during that era dealt directly with propaganda and agitation, electioneering, lobbying, and other related political activism synchronized for the purpose of establishing a communist régime under color of law through what deceptively appeared to be "constitutional" and "democratic" electoral and legislative procedures, the same principle should have applied. For any statute that aimed at transmogrifying a State or the Union as whole into a communist dictatorship would have been illegal from the beginning, under both the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, and once enacted could have commanded the obedience of common Americans only through the most savage forms of oppression, just as Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and other Red despots have always imposed communism everywhere else.[3334] Therefore, no matter [3332] See 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242, and, e.g., In re Quarles, 158 U.S. 532 (1895); Logan v. United States, 144 U.S. 263, 293-295 (1892); United States v. Waddell, 112 U.S. 76, 77-81 (1884); and Ex parte Yarborough, 110 U.S. 651 (1884).

---

[3333] See, e.g., Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494 (1951); Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298 (1957); Communist Party USA v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 367 U.S. 1 (1961); Scales v. United States, 367 U.S. 203 (1961); Noto v. United States, 367 U.S. 290 (1961). Subsequent disclosures established that the concern with the criminal character of the Communist Party and its hangers-on as agents of an aggressive foreign power was actually minimized during the period of the Cold War. See, e.g., Harvey Klehr, John E. Haynes, and Fridrikh I. Firsov, The Secret World of American Communism (New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, 1995).

[3334] See, e.g., Stéphane Courtois, Nicholas Werth, Jean-Louis Panné, Andrzej Paczkowski, Karel Bartošek, and Jean-Louis Margolin, The Black Book of Communism: Crimes, Terror, Repression, Jonathan Murphy and Mark Kramer, Translators (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1999).

how open and notorious it might have been, lobbying for, enacting, and attempting to enforce such a statute would have constituted a conspiracy the activists directed against every man, woman, and child outside the circle of their adherents throughout the United States.

The contemporary promotion of "gun control" is no better. Were the comprehensive program over which "gun controllers" salivate ever enacted into law, every State in the Union, and the Union as a whole, would lose the ability to function as "a free State". The General Government would become the center, the States the radii, and the Localities the circumference of a National para-military police state, in comparison to which General Gage's military governance of Massachusetts and occupation of Boston would appear as delightful examples of enlightened administration. This being its inexorable and inevitable effect, and therefore presumably the intention of its proponents, such a comprehensive program would be illegal from the beginning as a contradiction of everything for which the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence stand.

Once enacted, comprehensive "gun control" would initially meet with the passive resistance of simple mass noncompliance. For example, in 1933 when Franklin D. Roosevelt's "New Deal" Administration ordered common Americans to surrender their holdings of gold coin to the Treasury, the public turned in only some twenty-two percent of the coin believed to be in circulation.[3335] Although many Americans may have viewed personal retention of their gold as necessary to the maintenance of their long-term economic welfare, few would have assumed that their lives would have been immediately in jeopardy had they surrendered it. Yet most of the gold remained, "illegally", in private hands. Were firearms the subjects of confiscation, though, common Americans would be fully justified in presuming that the loss of their arms represented a distinct danger to their physical survival. So were an equivalent of "the gold seizure" decreed for firearms, the level of compliance could be expected to be very low. "Gun controllers" would then turn to typical police-state measures, such as cordoning off large areas and conducting house-to-house searches, probably with the maximum application of brutal force by psychopathic SWAT teams in full view of the public, so as to terrorize the population into submission. At that point, active resistance by the targets of oppression would begin. The level of aggressive violence employed by the "gun controllers" would escalate, in response to which the level, tempo, and extent of defensive violence would increase as well. As the point of "gun control" would be to deny WE THE PEOPLE the instruments necessary to secure for themselves "a free State", and as the proponents of "gun control" would attempt to enforce it through the methods of a police state, this situation would differ only in insignificant details from what would confront THE PEOPLE under the attempted imposition of a candidly communistic "dictatorship of the proletariat".

[3335] See James Turk, "The Confiscation Threat", Freemarket Gold & Money Report, No. 335 (1 December 2003).

A statute proscribing subversive activities conducted on behalf of "gun control" would not "abridg[e] * * * the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances",[3336] because the promotion of "gun control" cannot qualify as a constitutional "redress of grievances". "Gun control" is itself perhaps the most serious of all possible "grievances". For its proponents are attempting to legislate the "grievance[ ]" of disarmament into permanent existence, so that future petitions seeking "redress of [that and other] grievances" can be suppressed by police-state tactics without fear of popular resistance.

To argue that lobbying for "gun control" should be tolerated because it would not succeed is naive. Particularly in light of the extensive list of "gun controls" that rogue officials have already enacted or imposed at every level of the federal system, who can insure that it would fail?

Furthermore, to contend that legislators enjoy some vested "right" to try to pass statutes providing for "gun control" is worse than mere nonsense. No legislator in America has any "right" to vote for the enactment of a statute that will render constitutional government in "a free State" no longer possible. After all, the Constitution provides that "[a]ll legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States".[3337] The Constitution delegates to Congress (or to anyone else, for that matter) no "anti-legislative Powers"—that is, powers to enact purported "legislation" which is not and cannot be "legislation" at all, because it violates the Constitution. A supposed "statute" that violates the Constitution is no "law".[3338] It never was a "law". It never could have become a "law". It was a nullity at every stage of the legislative process. Even the very attempt to enact it must have been unconstitutional. And if one piece of faux "legislation" which violates one provision of the Constitution is a total nullity, and therefore beyond the power of Congress even to attempt to enact no matter how many rogue Members concert themselves for that purpose, how much more obnoxious is an attempt to enact, either at one fell swoop or incrementally, a comprehensive scheme of "gun control"—which is not just unconstitutional under the Militia Clauses and the Second Amendment, but attacks the continued existence of all constitutional government, by rendering the entire Constitution indefensible and denying the fundamental premiss of the Declaration of Independence?!

[3336] U.S. Const. amend. I.

[3337] U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3338] See Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886); Huntington v. Worthen, 120 U.S. 97, 101-102 (1887); Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 376-377 (1880); Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 408 (1963).

To be sure, the Constitution provides that, "for any Speech or Debate in either House" of Congress, Senators and Representatives "shall not be questioned in any other Place".[3339] But, as is evidenced by its derivation from the Articles of Confederation—"[f]reedom of speech and debate in Congress shall not be impeached or questioned in any Court, or place out of Congress"[3340]—this immunity extends to "any Speech or Debate", and nothing more. Nonetheless, always eager to assist officials of the General Government to evade constitutional limitations on their actions, the Supreme Court has opined that "[i]t would be a narrow view of the constitutional provision to limit it to words spoken in debate", because "[t]he reason of the rule is as forcible in its application * * * to the act of voting" and to all other "things generally done in a session of [Congress] by one of its members in relation to the business before it".[3341] Here as elsewhere, the Justices employed their old trick of going outside of the Constitution's actual verbiage to the supposed "reason of the rule"—that is, the Justices' "reason" (usually cobbled together in their own words for the purposes of the case at hand), not the Constitution's, inasmuch as the Constitution's "reason" must be found in its own words alone. Surely, one must conclude from the words "Speech or Debate" that their "reason" is to allow Members of Congress to engage in untrammeled deliberation and discussion in which inaccurate, defamatory, criminal, and other unconstitutional arguments are licensed and tolerated—but not, after talk has finally cleared the air, to permit unconstitutional, let alone criminal, actions to be taken without fear of sanction. This is the distinction, familiar in modern First-Amendment jurisprudence, between mere abstract advocacy (which is always protected) and actual illegal action albeit predicated on speech or association (which is usually punishable).[3342]

As a perceptive Justice pointed out, "[i]t is one thing to give great leeway to the legislative right of speech, debate, and investigation. But when a committee perverts its power, brings down on an individual the whole weight of government

---

[3339] U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1.

[3340] Arts. of Confed'n art. V, ¶ 5.

[3341] Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 204 (1881). In support of this conclusion, the Court cited no pre-constitutional authorities that involved "the act of voting", but instead relied on a post-ratification Massachusetts decision, which it described as "the most authoritative case in this country on the construction of the provision in regard to freedom of debate in legislative bodies". Id. at 203-204, citing Coffin v. Coffin, 4 Mass. 1 (1808). Coffin, however, involved nothing but speech: an alleged slander. Only in dicta did the Chief Justice of the Massachusetts court "not confine [the immunity] to delivering an opinion, uttering a speech, or haranguing in debate, but * * * extend[ed] it to the giving of a vote * * * and to every other act resulting from the nature, and in the execution, of the office". 4 Mass. at 27, quoted in 103 U.S. at 203. And this construction plainly expanded on the words of the Massachusetts constitution, that "[t]he freedom of deliberation, speech, and debate in either House of the legislature * * * cannot be the foundation of any accusation or prosecution, action, or complaint, in any other court or place whatsoever". Quoted in 103 U.S. at 203. See also Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 372-375 (1951), again relying on Coffin; and Eastland v. United States Servicemen's Fund, 421 U.S. 491, 501-506 (1975), also reading the Speech and Debate Clause "broadly".

[3342] Compare, e.g., Noto v. United States, 367 U.S. 290 (1961), with Scales v. United States, 367 U.S. 203 (1961); and see Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447-449 (1969).

for an illegal or corrupt purpose, the reason for the immunity ends."[3343] Against this insight, the best the Court could offer was to worry that > [i]n times of political passion, dishonest or vindictive motives are readily attributed to legislative conduct and as readily believed. Courts are not the place for such controversies. Self-discipline and the voters must be the ultimate reliance for discouraging or correcting such abuses.[3344]

When, however, legislators are called on the carpet, not just for talking about, but for casting their votes in favor of, some unconstitutional statute, they are being punished, not for their motives—which must be left to God to sort out—but for their actions, which they knew or should have known violated the supreme law of the land whatever their motives may have been. Throughout American history, legislators' "[s]elf-discipline" has proven to be an exceptionally weak reed on which to lean—as the Constitution presumes it always will be, in the limitations it imposes on the legislative authority of both the General Government and the States. And, as far as the General Government is concerned (and most of the States as well), "the voters" can intervene only every two, four, or six years, before which times the enforcement of an unconstitutional statute can wreak havoc throughout society. For example, a faux "statute" providing for comprehensive "gun control" which mandated the confiscation and destruction of all firearms and ammunition in private hands could be enacted at the beginning of a session of Congress, and then enforced for about two years with impunity from retaliation on the part of voters, until a new House of Representatives could be elected.[3345] The new House, of course, could not change the situation without the concurrence of the Senate and likely of the President, too. So two years would probably constitute a minimum period in which the "statute" were operative. Were the "statute's" enforcement successful, the foundation for "a free State" everywhere within the United States would be demolished—with what consequences it would be frightful to contemplate. For surely a rogue Congress that enacted comprehensive "gun control" would not shrink from employing other police-state measures to achieve its ends. And even if the "statute" were eventually repealed, the subsequent rearmament of America—which would necessitate producing and distributing tens if not hundreds of millions of new firearms—would be extremely expensive in terms of time, money, resources, and human effort.

The only quasi-legitimate avenue for bringing about "gun control" in America would be: (i) an Amendment "ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths [3343] Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 383 (1951) (Douglas, J., dissenting).

---

[3344] Id. at 378 (footnote omitted).

[3345] See U.S. Const. amend. XX, §§ 1 and 2.

of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof",[3346] expunging the Militia Clauses and the Second Amendment from the Constitution; together with (ii) the States' unanimous repeal or repudiation of at least the part of the Declaration of Independence which asserts WE THE PEOPLE'S "right" and "duty" to "throw off [an abusive] Government" by main force whenever necessary. In the course of the national debate on these combined proposals, the proponents of "gun control" could try to convince Americans that "[a] well regulated Militia" is not "necessary to the security of a free State". They could try to explain how "a free State" could be maintained in some other manner. Or why "a free State" were no longer desirable—and exactly what should replace it. Of course, this candid national conversation will never take place. For "gun controllers" know that an open attack on the Constitution and the Declaration along these lines would earn them nothing but ridicule and opprobrium.

On the other hand, at the present time WE THE PEOPLE need legislation that will enable them to bring private civil actions for declaratory and injunctive relief and for damages against every "gun controller", in public office or private station, who seeks to prevent common Americans eligible for the Militia from acquiring firearms suitable for Militia purposes, or to expropriate the firearms they already possess. Congress has the power, in aid of enforcing its authority under the Militia Clauses of the Constitution, to define such interference with "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" as a "constitutional tort".[3347] And the States enjoy an equivalent power within their own jurisdictions, too. True enough, the Supreme Court has held that a State statute which proscribed knowing advocacy of the violent overthrow of the government of the United States was preëmpted by a similar law of the United States.[3348] If correctly invoked in that case (which is doubtful), the principle of preëmption nonetheless would not apply in the case of "gun control", because "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" aims at their participation in "the Militia of the several States", which first and foremost are establishments the Constitution requires the States to maintain. If Congress did enact a law punishing subversion aimed at "gun control" specifically with respect to provisions that it may have made for "arming * * * the Militia" and for "calling forth" the Militia to "be employed in the Service of the United States", presumably an equivalent statute emanating from a State legislature might properly be preëmpted. But those provisions would not, because they could not, deal with the multifarious duties of "homeland security" the Militia might be required to fulfill in their own States and Localities when they were not "in the Service of the United States". With respect to those duties, the Constitution has delegated to Congress no constitutional authority at all. So, because Congress could not enact a statute on that subject in the first place, no State law could be "to the Contrary"; and therefore no State law on that subject could possibly be preëmpted.[3349]

[3346] U.S. Const. art. V.

[3347] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15, 16, and 18, enforceable through, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

[3348] Pennsylvania v. Nelson, 350 U.S. 497 (1956).

Of course, the whole problem of "gun control" would be solved were the Militia fully revitalized. For then most of the members of subversive private special-interest groups would be enrolled in the Militia, and subject to Militia scrutiny and discipline. Any attempt on their part to plump for "gun control" would soon be discovered, and would trigger fines within the Militia for undermining the Militia's readiness and morale, as well as such social sanctions as ostracism by other members of the community in all facets of life outside of the Militia. Strictly enforced, ostracism would likely be far more punishing to most individuals than the payment of fines.

[3349] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 with art. VI, cl. 2.

Part Four

FOREBODINGS

In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist.

We must never let the weight of this combination endanger our liberties or democratic processes. We should take nothing for granted. Only an alert and knowledgeable citizenry can compel the proper meshing of the huge industrial and military machinery of defense with our peaceful methods and goals, so that security and liberty may prosper together.

Dwight D. Eisenhower

The quotation on the preceding page is taken from the Farewell Radio and Television Address to the American People, 17 January 1961, in Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States, Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1960-61 (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1961), at 1038.

CHAPTER FORTY-SEVEN

Unless "the Militia of the several States" are revitalized in the immediate future, America will devolve into a National para-military police state dominated by a "standing army" and a "military-industrial complex".

The Declaration of Independence provides both an admonition and a prescription which have proven valid throughout "the Course of human events": namely, that "any Form of Government" is capable of "becom[ing] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which all "Governments" should be "instituted among Men"; and that WE THE PEOPLE must rely upon themselves to expose, deter, and if necessary resist and overcome those "injuries and usurpations" which "hav[e] in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny" over their country. Perhaps the most insidious of these "injuries and usurpations"—because it disguises itself under the flag of "national defense" and the yellow ribbons of "patriotism"—and surely among the most likely to prove fatal in the long run is the elaboration of a permanent professional "standing army" within a vast "military-industrial complex".

A. American history and common sense allied against a "standing army". There was a time when all Americans understood the danger of a "standing army".

1. The pre-constitutional view. During the pre-constitutional era, not only Americans looked upon a "standing army" with jaundiced eyes.

a. Panegyrist of the British monarchical system though he was, no less a figure of the Establishment than Blackstone himself recognized that > [I]N a land of liberty it is extremely dangerous to make a different order of the profession of arms. In absolute monarchies this is necessary for the safety of the prince, and arises from the main principle of their constitutions, which is that of governing by fear: but in free states the profession of a soldier, taken singly and merely as a profession, is justly an object of jealousy. In these no man should take up arms, but with a view to defend his country and it's laws: he puts not off the citizen when he enters the camp; but it is because he is a citizen, and would wish to continue so, that he makes himself for a while a soldier. The laws therefore and constitution of these kingdoms [that is, England, Scotland, and Ireland] know no such state as that of a perpetual standing soldier, bred up to no other possession than that of war * * * .

* * * * *

> WHEN the nation [that is, Great Britain] was engaged in war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline were esteemed to be necessary, than could be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times more rigorous methods were put in use for the raising of armies and the due regulation and discipline of the soldiery: which are to be looked upon only as temporary excrescences bred out of the distemper of the state, and not as any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of the kingdom. For martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions, is * * * in truth and reality no law, but something indulged, rather than allowed as a law: the necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land. * * *
>
> BUT, as the fashion of keeping standard armies * * * has of late years universally prevailed over Europe * * * it has also for many years past been annually judged necessary by our legislature, for the safety of the kingdom, the defence of the possessions of the crown of Great Britain, and the preservation of the balance of power in Europe, to maintain even in time of peace a standing body of troops under the command of the crown; who are however ipso facto disbanded at the expiration of every year, unless continued by parliament. * * *
>
> TO prevent the executive power from being able to oppress, * * * it is requisite that the armies with which it is entrusted should consist of the people, and have the same spirit with the people * * * . Nothing then, according to these principles, ought to be more guarded against in a free state, than making the military power, when such a one is necessary to be kept on foot, a body too distinct from the people.[3350]

Noteworthy is how Blackstone contrasted "a free state" with one that is "govern[ed] by fear", and therefore treated suspicion of, and effective "checks and balances" against, a "standing army" as natural and necessary in such a "state".

b. Americans of that era shared these concerns and concurred in these conclusions. Influential political philosophers of the time had taught them that "arms * * * are the only true badges of liberty; and ought never, but in times of utmost necessity be put into the hands of mercenaries or slaves"[3351]—which was hardly political or legal hyperbole, as even Blackstone likened a professional "standing army" to "the only state of servitude in the nation".[3352] Americans were

---

[3350] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 407, 412-414 (footnotes omitted).

[3351] A. Fletcher, A DISCOURSE OF GOVERNMENT, ante note 31, at 43.

[3352] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 415-416.

also justifiably suspicious of the ever-ready pretense in favor of a "standing army", that their country was "in hazard of being invaded by a powerful enemy". So, with the philosophers of liberty, they were willing to ask whether "we [shall] therefore destroy our government? What is it then that we would defend? * * * Whether our enemies shall conquer us is uncertain; but whether standing armies will enslave us, neither reason nor experience will suffer us to doubt."[3353] Americans knew as well that a "standing army" need not actually wage war against the people, but can often "conquer by looking on * * * . For there is no debating or disputing against Legions."[3354] And in a few short years in the late 1700s Americans witnessed the British Army—which, as members of the Empire, they had long accepted as their own Army—transmogrify itself from a defender into an aggressor, to the extent that the Declaration of Independence assailed King George III because > [h]e has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies, without the Consent of our legislatures.—He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.—He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:—For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us * * * [and f]or protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States: * * * —He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us. * * * —He is * * * transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to compleat the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

For all of these reasons, America's Founders were philosophically, politically, and legally committed to the proposition that "the Constitution must either break the Army, or the Army will destroy the Constitution: for it is universally true, that where-ever the [military power] is, there is or will be the Government in a short time".[3355]

Thus it was inevitable that, following hard upon their independence, Americans would embody these precepts and principles in their own fundamental laws. The constitutions of several of the independent States addressed the issue in precisely those terms, including:

[3353] A. Fletcher, A DISCOURSE OF GOVERNMENT, ante note 31, at 36.

[3354] THE SECOND PART OF AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a STANDING ARMY Is inconsistent with a Free Government, ante note 1519, at 13-14.

[3355] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a STANDING ARMY Is inconsistent with a Free Government, ante note 27, at 4.

DELAWARE. "SEC[TION] 17. No standing army shall be kept up without the consent of the legislature; and the military shall, in all cases and at all times, be in strict subordination to the civil power."[3356]

MARYLAND. "[Article] XXVI. That standing armies are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be raised or kept up, without consent of the Legislature.

"XXVII. That in all cases, and at all times, the military ought to be under strict subordination to and control of the civil power."[3357]

MASSACHUSETTS. "Art[icle] XVII. * * * [A]s, in time of peace, armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without the consent of the legislature; and the military power shall always be held in an exact subordination to the civil authority, and be governed by it."[3358]

NEW HAMPSHIRE. "[Article] XXV. Standing armies are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be raised or kept up without the consent of the legislature.

"XXVI. In all cases, and at all times, the military ought to be under strict subordination to, and governed by the civil power."[3359]

NORTH CAROLINA. "[Article] XVII. * * * [A]s standing armies, in time of peace, are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be kept up; and that the military should be kept under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power."[3360]

PENNSYLVANIA. "[Article] XIII. * * * [A]s standing armies in time of peace are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be kept up; And that the military should be kept under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power."[3361]

SOUTH CAROLINA. "[Article] XLII. That the military be subordinate to the civil power of the State."[3362]

[3356] CONSTITUTION OF DELAWARE (1792), in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART I, at 279.

[3357] A DECLARATION OF RIGHTS, and the CONSTITUTION and FORM of GOVERNMENT, agreed to by the Delegates of Maryland, in free Convention Assembled (1776), A DECLARATION OF RIGHTS, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART I, at 819.

[3358] CONSTITUTION OF MASSACHUSETTS (1780), PART THE FIRST, A DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS OF THE INHABITANTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART I, at 959.

[3359] CONSTITUTION OF NEW HAMPSHIRE (1784), PART I.—THE BILL OF RIGHTS, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART II, at 1282.

[3360] CONSTITUTION OF NORTH CAROLINA (1776), A DECLARATION OF RIGHTS, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART II, at 1410.

[3361] CONSTITUTION OF PENNSYLVANIA (1776), A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the State of Pennsylvania, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART II, at 1542.

[3362] CONSTITUTION OF SOUTH CAROLINA (1778), An act for establishing the constitution of the State of South Carolina, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART II, at 1627.

> VIRGINIA. "Sec[tion] 13. * * * [T]hat standing armies, in time of peace, should be avoided, as dangerous to liberty; and that, in all cases, the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power."[3363]

Other States made declarations to the same effect upon their ratifications of the Constitution of the United States:

> NEW YORK. "That standing Armies in time of Peace are dangerous to Liberty, and ought not to be kept up, except in Cases of necessity; and that at all times, the Military should be under strict Subordination to the civil Power."[3364]

> RHODE ISLAND. "[Article] 17th * * * [T]hat standing armies in time of peace, are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be kept up, except in cases of necessity; and that at all times the military should be under strict subordination to the civil power[.]"[3365]

Indeed, in that era, no patriot dissented from the admonition that "standing armies in time of peace are dangerous to liberty". No less than George Washington himself, America's first "Commander in Chief", advised his countrymen to "avoid the necessity of those overgrown Military establishments, which under any form of Government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican Liberty".[3366] Thus it was only natural in later years for Justice Joseph Story to treat as an indubitable axiom of constitutional jurisprudence that "[i]t is against sound policy for a free people to keep up large military establishments and standing armies in time of peace, both from the enormous expenses with which they are attended and the facile means which they afford to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people".[3367]

2. Good reasons at any point in "the Course of human events" for suspicion of a "standing army". Washington and Story no doubt derived their admonitions from their familiarity with *pre-*constitutional history, rather than from any formal scientific study of the psychopathology of political power. Yet their

---

[3363] VIRGINIA BILL OF RIGHTS (1776), in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART II, at 1909.

[3364] Convention (1787), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1035.

[3365] Convention (1790), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1055.

[3366] Farewell Address (19 September 1796), in Victor H. Paltsits, Washington's Farewell Address: In Facsimile, with Transliterations of all the Drafts of Washington, Madison, & Hamilton, Together with their Correspondence and Other Supporting Documents; Edited, with a History of its Origin, Reception by the Nation, Rise of the Controversy Respecting its Authorship, and a Bibliography (New York, New York: The New York Public Library, 1935), at facsimile page 9.

[3367] Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646.

admonitions rest on firm grounds there, too.[3368] "Standing armies"—whether of the traditional type, or composed of ostensibly "civilian" but para-militarized "police departments" and other "law-enforcement agencies"—cannot be trusted, because they tend to attract to, mold within, and advance through their ranks the very types of men and women who can be expected to side with and even egg on "ambitious and unprincipled rulers" against "the rights of the people"—to attempt to become such "rulers" themselves—and to exclude and weed out all other individuals who exhibit contrary inclinations. This, for a number of obvious reasons:

a. True "standing armies" are usually composed effectively of mercenaries, particularly within the corps of officers. During their careers, such professional soldiers are primarily concerned with continuing their employment and enhancing their ranks, medals and other awards, incomes, political influence, social standing, retirement-benefits, and other perquisites. As with operatives in any extensive bureaucracy largely unaccountable to the people, they are indifferent to whether they serve "a free State"[3369] or "a[n un]free State", or even to whether their supposed "service" transforms "a free State" into "a[n un]free State", as long as they can continually advance their institutional, professional, and personal self-interests. Unlike most bureaucracies, however, which although often pernicious are not necessarily inherently destructive and deadly, "standing armies" are mainly preoccupied in preparing for, and often actually engaging in, armed conflicts—and therefore concerned with convincing the ruling classes in the societies in which they exist that such activities are necessary and worth their exorbitant cost in blood and treasure. For the greater the danger and the extent of such conflicts, the greater the resources, power, and prestige "standing armies" can demand that public officials should turn over to them. So, because too long a period of tranquility draws into question the necessity for the very existence of "standing armies", peace is never their goal. Because the demands of modern warfare lay claim to next to everything society can produce, frugality is never their goal. And because, after truth, liberty is the first casualty in any society routinely engaged in warfare, "a free state" based upon individuals' unalienable rights and limited government is never their goal.

b. The archetypal complex of military command is inherently: (i) despotic, because it depends upon and therefore inculcates implicit and immediate obedience to orders "from the top down"; (ii) totalitarian, because it seeks to regiment not only the activities, but even the thoughts, of those subject to its control; and (iii) absolute, because it can demand that any member of the "standing army" lay down his very life, without asking precisely for what or specifically for whom that sacrifice must be made. Being antagonistic to the mental and moral faculties of free men, the military apparatus always attempts to attenuate, if it cannot eradicate, those faculties. If it cannot reduce the behavior of its rank and file to the purely physical level of "action and reaction", it will seek to degrade their behavior to the essentially mindless animalistic level of "stimulus and response", rather than rely to any significant degree upon a distinctly human appeal to intellectual, let alone moral, suasion of an elevated character. So, inevitably and ineluctably, most men who rise to positions of higher authority in that apparatus, as well necessarily as all those others who remain subject to them, will strongly tend to exhibit personalities that at least accommodate to, if not enthusiastically embrace, the principle of unquestioning obedience in a rigid "chain of command".[3370]

---

[3368] See, e.g., Andrew M. Łobaczewski, Political Ponerology: A Science on the Nature of Evil Adjusted for Political Purposes (Grande Prairie, Alberta, Canada: Red Pill Press, Second Edition, 2006).

[3369] See U.S. Const. amend. II.

c. An hierarchical scheme imbued with an ethic of unquestioning obedience from inferiors to superiors tends to instill in its less psychologically balanced practitioners delusions—perverse, to be sure, but nonetheless intoxicating—of personal power and irresponsibility verging on the absolute. In light of Lord Acton's dictum that "absolute power corrupts absolutely", that "superior officers" and "higher authorities" will inevitably inculcate into soldiers of lesser rank the supposed duty mechanically and unquestioningly to "follow orders"—howsoever repugnant to law, morality, simple human decency, and common sense those orders may be—should hardly surprise anyone.[3371]

d. Institutionalized and highly organized military "peer pressure" will promote and excuse, and when necessary whitewash and cover up, the exercise of excessive, abusive, and even criminal power in "obedience to orders", as a requirement of "loyalty" to "the Service" as a whole, to a soldier's particular unit, to his commanders, or even to just his closest comrades. As immediate concerns of every soldier in the field, each of these will predictably exert more influence than an apparently abstract responsibility to obey his country's fundamental laws (as embodied in the Constitution), let alone the higher moral, philosophical, and religious principles on which all true "laws" must rest (as invoked by the Declaration of Independence). The idea that one can be loyal to "the Service" only by first and foremost being loyal to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution "the Service" is intended to serve—and without which "the Service" would have neither legitimacy, nor authority, nor purpose, nor even existence—will cross the minds of all too few, and direct the conduct of even fewer.

[3370] The few exceptions are the "Napoléonic" figures who, relying upon the robotic responses of their subordinates in the "chain of command", break free of the apparatus and impose themselves as dictators whose own wills become "military law". Individuals of this type, though, can become dangerous only where "standing armies" exist. Or, perhaps, where the political equivalents of "standing armies"—such as the Nazi Party under Hitler or the Communist Party under Stalin—have seized control of some country, including its actual "standing army".

[3371] In addition to endless anecdotal examples of "war crimes" and other military atrocities available in any library and throughout the Internet, see the controlled experiments by Stanley Milgram, Obedience to Authority: An Experimental View (New York, New York: Harper & Row, 1974). See also Philip Zimbardo, The Lucifer Effect: Understanding How Good People Turn Evil (New York, New York: Random House Trade Paperbacks, 2008).

e. Soldiers' baser self-interests will always rationalize rote "obedience to orders". After all, personal success in the typical military system depends upon step-by-step promotion through the ranks and grades, which demands steadfast adherence to the principle "don't rock the boat", and above all avoidance of any appearance of a penchant for challenging (or even being insufficiently deferential to) "superior authority". This process unavoidably engenders in its participants a studied careerism that focuses on awards for robotic behavior, serial advancements in rank, and through them arrival at a comfortable retirement—and therefore that tends to exclude or at least minimize and even discredit every critical thought that might endanger achievement of those goals.

f. Whenever political wordsmiths affix the label "war" to some deployment of soldiers—even in self-evidently inapplicable cases, such as "the war on terrorism", "the war on crime", or "the war on drugs"—mindless "obedience to orders" can and will be rationalized in such menticidal slogans as "standing tall", "staying the course", and "achieving victory". This, naturally, without defining exactly what "the course" is, why it should be "stayed", or exactly how "victory" is to be defined and won, and at what cost—because all too often what passes for "victory" advantages common soldiers precious little (except through the termination of hostilities), whereas it always serves the vastly disproportionate, if not exclusive, gain of "ambitious and unprincipled rulers" and their controllers and clients among selfish special-interest groups, the only ones who can be assured of being left "standing tall" after the smoke over the battlefields clears away. In such situations, "victory" is the elusive artificial rabbit after which the greyhounds futilely run, so that astute betters in the grandstands can collect exorbitant winnings.[3372]

g. Applying the stratagem that "to kill a dog you must first call him mad", propagandists serving "ambitious and unprincipled rulers" will encourage robotic "obedience to orders" that leads soldiers to commit "war crimes" and other illegal or immoral acts, by thoroughly dehumanizing and demonizing their ostensible "enemies"—whether these unfortunate victims be labeled "gooks", "wogs", "fuzzy wuzzies", or "towel-heads" overseas (who are denounced on the basis of their race, culture, or religion); "extremists" at home (who are often patriots, traduced on the basis of their political ideals); or "terrorists" anywhere (who may actually be freedom-fighters, defamed on the basis of the desperate tactics they are compelled to employ in order to resist their oppressors).

h. The inevitable result of the inculcation of such mindless obedience will be that a "standing army" can be employed for essentially any purpose, no matter how barbaric and vile, which those in control of it deem expedient—that is, military menticide is designed to promote mass homicide, which all too easily can lead to genocide, almost always of wholly innocent victims. Perhaps the starkest example of this occurred in the old Soviet Union. While Stalin reigned, the extensive para-military police-state apparatus set into motion by Lenin and the Old Bolsheviks—from the Cheka, through the OGPU, to the NKVD, MVD, and KGB—with the relentlessness of a machine arrested, imprisoned, tortured, worked or starved to death, assassinated, or otherwise wantonly murdered tens of millions of people in a genocidal reign of terror.[3373] Upon Stalin's death, although the apparatus subsisted, the very worst excesses of Stalinist mass repression abruptly attenuated. The members of the surviving cabal at the top—including Vyacheslav Molotov, Nikita Krushchev, and Lazar Kaganovich—were as guilty of past criminal acts as Stalin, whose enthusiastic henchmen they all had been; and, to a man, they doubtlessly had proven themselves fully capable of committing equally horrendous atrocities in the future. But it was in their collective and personal interests to eschew Stalin's most brutal methods, especially in dealing with each other. To that end, they turned off the killing machine: And the same apparatus which had been arresting, torturing, and murdering mostly innocent people suddenly stopped arresting, torturing, and murdering (at least to the same degree) when and simply because it was ordered to do so.[3374] Proving that the police-state operatives, although indispensable to the implementation of Stalin's reign of terror, were never the moving and controlling parties in its adoption, its employment, its continuation, or its termination. Rather, they were no more than gears in an essentially automatic transmission that imposed the leader's will—to whatever degree of malignancy—on the masses. And proving as well that, if the apparatus could have been turned off at the flick of a political switch, it could also have been turned on again with no less ease. Which should lead anyone of other than a Stalinist bent of mind to conclude that such an apparatus should never be suffered to come into existence in the first place, for any reason.

---

[3372] See, e.g., Smedley D. Butler, War Is a Racket (Costa Mesa, California: The Noontide Press, 1988).

i. Illusory is the hope that "large military establishments and standing armies" can be debarred, deterred, or detoured from wrongdoing simply by nominally subordinating them to civilian authority—as embodied in the catch-phrase "civilian control of the military". For not just titular "civilian control" according to some organizational chart, but constitutional control in fact as well as in law, is requisite. For example, what good can come of nominal "civilian control" in America when, as a practical matter, "the military-industrial complex" has grown so large and absorbed so much economic and political power that it can simply overawe Congress and the President—so that a proposal from the Pentagon all too often will be intended, treated, and acquiesced in as a command? As this country's Founders well appreciated, "standing armies" can "conquer [simply] by looking on * * * . For there is no debating or disputing against Legions."[3375]

---

[3373] See, e.g., Norman M. Naimark, Stalin's Genocides (Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 2010).

[3374] For decades thereafter, though, the apparatus and its apologists resisted the rehabilitation of Stalin's victims, even while they sought to rehabilitate Stalin. See Anton Antonov-Ovseyenko, The Time of Stalin: Portrait of a Tyranny (New York, New York: Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc., 1981), at 313-346.

Much worse, what good is nominal "civilian control of the military" when America's leaders no longer adhere, not only to the directives of the Constitution, but also to the precepts of the Declaration of Independence which animate it? When this country is nothing better than a plutocracy—wherein public officials purposefully misconstrue the Constitution and misuse the governmental apparatus in order to advance the fortunes of high finance, big business, or some other parochial domestic or foreign special interests? Or a kleptocracy—wherein the governmental apparatus has degenerated into a den of insatiable political plunderers? Or even a kakistocracy—wherein the very worst elements within society have seized control of all the important levers of political and economic leadership? And especially when such a plutocracy, kleptocracy, or kakistocracy is administered according to das Führerprinzip ("the Leader Principle") by some latter-day Duce, Vozhd', "Decider", or other false political Messiah whose grotesque misunderstanding of his constitutional powers as "Commander in Chief"[3376] fuels dangerous pretensions to, if not hallucinations of, personal grandeur on an hyper-Napoléonic scale, but who is unable to draw upon Bonaparte's talents?

B. A civilian para-military police-state apparatus no different in principle from, and perhaps more dangerous in practice than, a "standing army". America's Founding Fathers, who opposed even the relatively limited "standing armies" of their own day, would surely recoil in horror and disgust from the sight of this country's contemporary "military-industrial complex". The Founders had no opportunity, however, to become familiar with the type of modern para-military police state that employs heavily armed but ostensibly "civilian" law-enforcement, intelligence, and allied "security" agencies—at the apex of the system a secret-police apparatus headquartered in a "ministry of the interior"—to oppress a disarmed, disorganized, disoriented, and demoralized population. Their experience was limited to the lukewarm oppression of the British Army, particularly General Thomas Gage's rather circumspect military rule in Boston—although that proved quite sufficient to arouse their ire, leading as it did to the confrontation at Lexington and Concord in 1775.[3377] Yet, had the Founders suffered under a thoroughgoing para-military police state of the modern ilk, they would certainly have recognized and

---

[3375] THE SECOND PART OF AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a STANDING ARMY Is inconsistent with a Free Government, ante note 1519, at 13-14.

[3376] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3377] See, e.g., E. Forbes, Paul Revere, ante note 127, Chapters VI and VII.

denounced such an engine of repression as no less, perhaps far more, dangerous to liberty and self-government than any "standing army". They would have realized as well that such a police state would be more likely to arise out of or in conjunction with a "standing army" than to come into existence independently—and once in operation it would outstrip a "standing army" in the ability and willingness to oppress society.

1. In modern times, usurpers and tyrants have almost always begun their criminal activities through a carefully measured employment of a network of informers, agents provocateurs, civilian intelligence and investigatory agencies, and para-militarized police departments against selected victims, rather than through massive deployments of regular armed forces against citizens in general. Long before indiscriminate sweeps by storm troopers through entire cities, come arrests of particular rebels and dissenters by the secret police at three or four o'clock in the morning. Indeed, if carried out thoroughly and ruthlessly enough, such targeted repression can render promiscuous attacks by regular armed forces unnecessary, by imprisoning or even entirely "disappearing" vocal dissidents, tearing apart resistance-networks, and cowing the general populace first into passivity and then into collaboration.

2. Yet one need not posit some conspiracy among aspiring usurpers and tyrants as the exclusive, or even most likely, means by which an extensive internal-security apparatus, organized along centralized bureaucratic lines, can devolve into a nominally "civilian" but para-militarized police state little different in its potential for oppression from a blatant military dictatorship that "govern[s] by fear".[3378] Even in the absence of actual criminal personalities haunting the upper echelons of its leadership, any establishment of that type can be expected so to degenerate over time.

After all, perfect "bureaucratic security" inevitably aims at foreseeing, forestalling, frustrating, and at last fending off every imaginable danger to the régime. This requires "intelligence" and "counterintelligence" as extensive and comprehensive as possible. As far as human beings are concerned, therefore, perfect "bureaucratic security" needs to subject all manifestations of individual freedom to surveillance, interdiction, control, and wherever expedient suppression. In such a society, no one may do anything of any social, economic, or political significance without the "security forces'" knowledge. In principle, every aspect of personal privacy is prohibited, except what might be permitted—and even that residuum is always exposed to new restrictions from day to day.

Not surprisingly, then, the very model of perfect "bureaucratic security" is a maximum-security prison:

[3378] See W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 407.

- centrally controlled "from the top down";
- completely "planned", in that both the guards and the inmates always know what they are supposed to do, and almost never do—or at least are never allowed to do—anything else;
- easy and efficient to administer, because most of the participants have no say whatsoever in the process;
- effective at eliminating all privacy for both individuals and groups, thereby precluding conspiracies that can lead to serious threats posed by refractory inmates;
- ready, willing, and able to apply the maximum coercion required, to the level of outright homicidal sadism, to maintain order, subordination, and especially chronic fear among the inmates, with no legal recourse on their part; and thus
- capable of providing maximum "protection" to, in the sense of predictable control over, inmates, guards, and the outside world alike.

Of course, because an entire society cannot be incarcerated in actual prisons or labor camps at a reasonable cost, even the most fanatic proponents of "bureaucratic security" must settle for a form of effective "community house arrest" characterized by:

- the requirement that everyone must carry official identification always available for scrutiny by "the authorities" on demand;
- pervasive surveillance that sets neighbor to informing against neighbor, and pits technology (from cameras and wiretaps to microchips and GPS locators) against everyone;
- "zero tolerance" of any suspected, let alone actual, deviant behavior, along with arbitrary expansions of the definition of "deviance", so that everyone is always afraid of being charged with actions outside the boundaries of "political correctness", and therefore is always anxious to avoid attracting "the authorities'" least attention;
- the demand that individuals obey the commands of the police and other "law-enforcement authorities" instantly and completely, with the slightest resistance, remonstrance, or request for reasons being ranked as a serious offense, whether the original commands were legal or not; and
- punishments the severity of which wildly exceed the seriousness of the infractions, in order to maximize deterrence, and thereby make what Blackstone denounced as "governing by fear"—or, even more bluntly put, systematically institutionalized official terrorism—that much easier.

Because the "internal-security forces" in such a system will inevitably imagine that the most dangerous of all potential threats arise from somewhere amongst the people, they will oppose as counterproductive and even subversive whatever might give the people direct participation in providing or overseeing "security". Then, as an unavoidable consequence of not "consist[ing] of the people", these forces will not share "the same spirit with the people".[3379] Soon enough, they will accredit themselves as not only separate from but also superior to the people, and therefore will affix their loyalties not to the people but instead to the governmental apparatus, the executive administration in power, their own agency, or even simply their agency's leaders for the time being. Then only a short step remains for them to become outright antagonists of the people.

3. Inasmuch as in the final analysis "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'",[3380] no originally "civilian" *para-*military police state could ever come into existence, let alone achieve dominance over society, in the face of determined opposition from a strong "standing army". Yet a "standing army" might not complain while a powerful civilian "internal-security apparatus" were methodically built up alongside it—it might look the other way even as that apparatus increasingly engaged in illegal activities aimed at repressing the populace—and it might even lend its support to those activities[3381]—because the army's leaders might imagine that they could coöpt "the internal-security apparatus" and thereby themselves exercise indirect control over society through the front of an ostensibly "civilian" police state. Should the leaders of "the standing army" prove correct, "the internal-security apparatus" would effectively become an adjunct of the army. Should events prove them wrong, however, and should the army itself somehow come under the supervision or control of "the internal-security apparatus"—as

---

[3379] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 413.

[3380] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[3381] For example, by means of some arrangement such as An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1982 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes, Act of 1 December 1981, Pub. L. 97-86, TITLE IX—GENERAL PROVISIONS, AUTHORIZATION OF MILITARY COOPERATION WITH CIVILIAN LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS, § 905(a)(1), 95 Stat. 1099, 1114; now codified as amended at 10 U.S.C. §§ 371 through 382.

See, e.g., An Act To provide for Fiscal Year 2008, with certain modifications to address the foreign sovereign immunities provisions of title 28, United States Code, with respect to the attachment of property in certain judgments against Iraq, the lapse of statutory authorities for the payment of bonuses, special pays, and similar benefits to members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes ("National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2008"), Act of 28 January 2008, Pub. L. 110-181, TITLE XVIII—NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU MATTERS AND RELATED MATTERS ("National Guard Empowerment Act of 2007"), Subtitle A—National Guard Bureau, §§ 1814 and 1815, 122 Stat. 3, 495, 498-500; and see 10 U.S.C. § 113(g)(2). See also, e.g., United States Northern Command, Joint Task Force Civil Support Command Brief (14 March 2008); Air Land Sea Application Center, CIVIL SUPPORT, MULTI-SERVICE TACTICS, TECHNIQUES, AND PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL SUPPORT (CS) OPERATIONS, FM 3-28.1, NTTP 3-57.2, AFTTP 3-2.67 (December 2007); Department of Defense DIRECTIVE, NUMBER 3025.12 (4 February 1994), "Military Assistance for Civil Disturbances (MACDIS)".

occurred in both Stalin's Russia and Hitler's Germany[3382]—then the army would effectively become an adjunct of the apparatus, perhaps thereafter incapable of reasserting its independence;[3383] and the apparatus would become, for all intents and purposes, the effective "standing army". In either event, though, the people would be subjected to systematic oppression. So the worst of all possible situations for any society is to be beset by both a "standing army" and an ostensibly "civilian" but para-militarized police establishment.

C. America slipping into thralldom to both a "standing army" and a nascent para-military police-state apparatus. Instead of "civilian control of the military" through the Militia (or in any other effective fashion), America now suffers from arrant, rampant, and accelerating "civilian collusion with the military" in an highly articulated, economically and politically entrenched, "military-industrial complex". America's "standing army" is no longer simply an adjunct and agency of the General Government, but is emerging as the power behind and even above that government, a veritable imperium in imperio. Worse yet, it is aligning itself with and assisting an ever-expanding ostensibly civilian para-military police-state apparatus centered in the Department of Homeland Security, which in turn is extending its tentacles into law-enforcement, emergency-services, and related agencies in every State and Local government—so that the entire federal system is being systematically deconstructed "from the top down".

1. "The military-industrial complex" far more extensive and entrenched today than in President Eisenhower's time. If President Eisenhower was accurate in describing this structure as only a "military-industrial complex" in 1960, use of that term today conceals the complex's real scope, strength, influence, and danger in American life.

a. As could have been predicted from analysis of the situation during Eisenhower's tenure,[3384] the complex now includes as active participants, not simply the regular Armed Forces of the United States (the "military" component) and manufacturers of armaments and related products (the "industrial" component), but also

> • a political component, consisting of elected and appointed public officeholders, candidates for public office, and the upper

---

[3382] See, e.g., Robert Conquest, The Great Terror: Stalin's Purge of the Thirties (Ontario, Canada: The Macmillan Company, 1968), Chapter 7 (the Soviet Union); John W. Wheeler-Bennett, The Nemesis of Power: The German Army in Politics 1918-1945 (London, England: Macmillan and Company Limited, 1964), Part III, Chapter 2 (Nazi Germany).

[3383] See, e.g., Ulrich von Hassell, The von Hassell Diaries, 1938-1944 (London, England: Hamish Hamilton, 1948); Hans Bernd Gisevius, Valkyrie: An Insider's Account of the Plot To Kill Hitler (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Da Capo Press, 2009).

[3384] See, e.g., C. Wright Mills, The Power Elite (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 1956).

echelons of the "two" major political parties the platforms, programs, and policies of which promote ever-more-extensive military adventurism abroad and ever-more-intensive militarization of society at home;

• a scientific and technological component, consisting of experts engaged in research and development in public and private universities, institutes, and laboratories;

• an economic component, consisting of oligopolistic factions and other special interests—particularly in the interconnected fields of haute finance, natural resources, and managed global trade—the exclusive territories and profits of which the Armed Forces are expected to protect, and where possible enlarge and enhance;

• an ideological component, consisting of the big domestic media and other outlets, particularly on the Internet, that churn out blatantly chauvinistic and jingoistic propaganda, agitation, and disinformation; and even

• an alien component, consisting of agents of influence, agents provocateurs, specialists in "black operations", and other subversives deployed on behalf of the complex by certain foreign states to intervene in American electoral campaigns, lobby Congress, amplify the party line put out by the big domestic media, and defame opponents of American militaristic imperialism. (Some of these foreign powers are highly questionable fellow-travelers at best, because they are not above widespread espionage and the trading of stolen secrets to America's enemies.)

Moreover, "the military-industrial complex" is anything but narrowly "military" in the traditional sense of that term. Rather, with the emergence of the global "war on drugs" and "war on terrorism" and the paranoiac emphasis on domestic "homeland security", its proponents rationalize its existence and the ever-multiplying burdens it imposes upon America through pretensions to omnicompetence: the supposed ability to provide every type of "security", "military" or "civilian", that might be required in relation to every kind of "crisis" that could possibly beset this country—including aggression from foreign states, "terrorism" of all sorts, traffic in illegal drugs and other forms of organized crime, emergency responses to natural disasters and industrial accidents, and even protection of the environment.

Furthermore, "the military-industrial complex" is not "industrial" in the traditional American sense of that term as denoting production in the free market for consumption largely by private consumers. Indeed, it exhibits characteristics quite the opposite of a free-market economy: First, the consumers of its wares are primarily the General Government and to a lesser degree the States. Second, because the "military-industrial complex" deals in armaments the possession of which is prohibited for almost all private citizens, the producers are effectively the General Government's and the States' alter egos. Third, the complex derives its income from moneys extracted by force from taxpayers. And fourth, domestically at least, the products and the people who use them are increasingly being employed by police-state operatives to cow or actually coerce common Americans into ideological conformity with, or at least acquiescence in, the complex's world view. Essentially, the complex is fascistic in structure: ostensibly private corporations at the economic level, Congress and the President at the highest political level, all interlocked and interacting through the central agency of the Pentagon.[3385] However this establishment came to be erected—whether the General Government originally captured the industries or the industries originally captured the Government, and in what manner the Armed Forces willingly participated in or were dragooned into these developments—the situation now is one of mutual co-dependence: The manufacturers of armaments depend upon the continuation and if possible extension and intensification of an aggressively militaristic foreign policy; and public officials (both civilian and military) depend upon those manufacturers to supply the up-to-date equipment with which to implement such a policy.

b. Ironically, "the military-industrial complex" is a true "complex" in the specifically psychopathological sense, because it is designed or at least operates to instil, and certainly has the effect of instilling, in average Americans paranoia, despondency coupled with dependency, identification with the aggressor, chauvinism and jingoism, historical amnesia, and political stupor. To be sure, some threats against which "the military-industrial complex" claims to be preparing or deploying may be real and even serious. But experience, as well as common sense and an healthy level of political skepticism, counsel that most are exaggerated, hypothetical, conjectural, imaginary—or even utterly fictitious, because they derive from "false-flag" and other "black operations" of various domestic and foreign intelligence and law-enforcement agencies. Unfortunately for most contemporary Americans, fear (howsoever artificially induced) all too readily supplants reason. Exposed to never-ending warnings about impending threats, and even to revelations of supposed plots, against which they are told they are unequipped and unable to protect themselves, all too many Americans have swallowed and become addicted to the official snake oil that they must surrender more and more of their freedoms to a very real, immediate, massive, intrusive, and abusive military-cum-police apparatus as the unavoidable price of waging foreign "wars" (none of them properly declared[3386]) and of providing domestic "homeland security" against retaliation by "terrorists" who threaten to attack the United States for waging those "wars". Overall, average Americans are so shell-shocked by the speed and the brutality with which, in the name of the global "war on terrorism" especially, "the military-industrial complex" has compromised and even suppressed their fundamental liberties at home—and are so riddled with guilt and loss of self-respect for not having stood up against these developments when standing up would have cost relatively little—that they are temporarily incapable of bringing to mind their country's birth in WE THE PEOPLE'S self-government through self-defense, let alone of actually acting in their own self-defense through self-government.

---

[3385] What should be a familiar parallel is the Federal Reserve System: ostensibly private banks at the economic level, Congress and the Treasury at the highest political level, all interlocked and interacting through the central agency of the Board of Governors. See, e.g., E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 799-866.

2. A para-military police state the permanent domestic capstone to "the military-industrial complex". In this politically catatonic state of induced imbecility and inactivity, all too many Americans are demonstrating a lap-dog willingness to roll over for a top-heavy, ever-expanding para-military police-state apparatus being erected at the apex of the "the military-industrial complex".

a. The police-state apparatus already in operation. The danger from a National para-military police-state apparatus is not simply a matter of conjecture or prediction. For just such an apparatus, becoming more extensive every day, is now operating throughout America.

(1) The apparatus consists of myriads of "intelligence" and "internal-security" bureaucrats, law-enforcement personnel, and professional soldiers—all basically mercenaries—most of whom demonstrate little personal or institutional interest in maintaining "a free State" (as the Second Amendment understands that term) anywhere in America.[3387]

(2) The apparatus is becoming truly ubiquitous—casting a net of "top-down" control or influence from its headquarters in the Department of Homeland Security in the District of Columbia into every State and Locality, through such outposts as "fusion centers".[3388]

[3386] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[3387] For example, as of this writing, "[f]unds are * * * authorized to be appropriated * * * for the conduct of the intelligence and intelligence-related activities" of some eighteen different "elements of the United States Government", from the Central Intelligence Agency to the Departments of the Treasury, Justice, and Energy. An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2012 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, Act of 3 January 2012, Pub. L. 112-87, TITLE I—INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES, § 101, 125 Stat. 1876, 1877-1878.

[3388] Compare and contrast, e.g., U.S. Department of Homeland Security, State and Major Urban Area Fusion Centers, at <www.dhs.gov/files/programs/gc_1156877184684.shtm> with Federal Support for Involvement in State and Local Fusion Centers, Majority and Minority Staff Report, United States Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations (3 October 2012), and with Michael German and Jay Stanley, What's Wrong with Fusion Centers? (New York, New York: American Civil Liberties Union, 2007).

(3) Drawing upon enormous financial and material resources, the apparatus is attempting to raise law-enforcement and allied agencies at every level of the federal system to the highest technological state of readiness—so as to be able to overcome the quantity of Americans the apparatus foresees it may have to repress, through the quality of the equipment and tactics its relatively few myrmidons employ. That this process has been going on since well before 11 September 2001 indicates that it is not the product of the initiation of "the war on terrorism", but instead that both it and "the war on terrorism" are products of an overarching plan conceived much earlier.[3389] These arrangements could be called "the para-militarization of the police throughout America", or "the absorption of the police into the regular Armed Forces as para-military auxiliaries", or "the deployment throughout America of a standing army of occupation with ancillary police functions"—but, howsoever described, they have raised serious constitutional concerns even in "mainstream" legal publications.[3390]

(4) Its touts advertise the police-state apparatus as indispensable in order to fight "the war on terrorism". Any thinking observer, however, can recognize that, rather than a "war on terrorism" directed at foreign foes, the apparatus is actually preparing for, and even starting to wage, a "war of terrorism", step by step, against the American people at home. This is what anyone should expect, inasmuch as the first dictionary definition of "terrorism" is "a mode of government by terror or intimidation".[3391] And anti-"terrorism" legislation defines "domestic terrorism" as "activities that * * * involve acts dangerous to human life that are a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State" and "appear to be intended * * * to intimidate or coerce a civilian population"[3392]—which definition would clearly

---

[3389] See, e.g., An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1982 for the Armed Forces for procurement, for research, development, test, and evaluation, and for operation and maintenance, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces and for civilian employees of the Department of Defense, to authorize appropriations for such fiscal year for civil defense, and for other purposes, Act of 1 December 1981, Pub. L. 97-86, TITLE IX—GENERAL PROVISIONS, AUTHORIZATION OF MILITARY COOPERATION WITH CIVILIAN LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS, § 905(a)(1), 95 Stat. 1099, 1114; now codified as amended at 10 U.S.C. §§ 371 through 382.

[3390] See generally, e.g., Karen R. Singh, "Treading the Thin Blue Line: Military Special-Operations Trained Police SWAT Teams and the Constitution", 9 William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal 673 (2001).

[3391] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 1489. Accord, The Compact Edition of the Oxford English Dictionary, ante note 11, Volume 2, at 3268; Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 2608, definition b.

[3392] An Act To deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes ("Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism (USA PATRIOT ACT) Act of 2001"), Act of 26 October 2001, Pub. L. 107-56, TITLE VIII—STRENGTHENING THE CRIMINAL LAWS AGAINST TERRORISM, § 802(a)(5)(A) and (B)(i), 115 Stat. 272, 376; now codified at 18 U.S.C. § 2331(5)(A) and (B)(i). This Act was subsequently reauthorized in An Act To extend and modify authorities needed to combat terrorism, and for other purposes, Act of 9 March 2006, Pub. L. 109-177, 120 Stat. 192; and An Act To provide for an additional temporary extension of programs under the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes ("PATRIOT Sunset Extension Act of 2011"), Act of 26 May 2011, Pub. L. 112-14, § 2(a), 125 Stat. 216, 216.

embrace many acts of rogue public officials aimed at depriving Americans of constitutional and other civil rights.[3393] Moreover, today's "war of terrorism" is not the first one rogue officials and the special interests behind them have relentlessly waged against whole peoples within America.[3394]

b. Specious "exceptions" to WE THE PEOPLE'S constitutional rights the initial source of expansive powers for the police-state apparatus. Cleverly, the contractors constructing the apparatus did not set out through an open frontal attack on the Constitution to amass all at once a set of totalitarian powers rivaling those of the old communist East German Ministerium für Staatssicherheit (the notorious "Stasi"). Instead, well versed in the political tactic of "salami slicing", rogue officials of the General Government have employed the tried-and-true subterfuge of "the living Constitution" to jury rig ersatz "exceptions" to the Bill of Rights that step by step have expanded their apparent authority, without arousing opposition from the great mass of Americans unable to understand or unwilling to admit to themselves what was going on before their very eyes. For a particularly egregious example, as of this writing the United States Border Patrol—with the approbation of the Supreme Court—claims the authority to conduct random searches of all vehicles at "check-points" up to one hundred miles inside this country's borders, without "Warrants * * * issue[d] * * * upon probable cause, supported by Oath or Affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized".[3395] This judicially created "exception" to what by its literal terms is a prohibition in the Fourth Amendment of all "unreasonable searches and seizures" without exception, rests upon the preposterous notion that "maintenance of a traffic-checking program in the interior is necessary because the flow of illegal aliens cannot be controlled effectively at the border".[3396] That is, because some public officials have proven themselves incompetent to perform their constitutional functions where those functions should be performed, they may violate the Constitution in order to attempt to perform, presumably with equal incompetence, the very same functions in places where they have no authority to perform them! On this ridiculous reasoning, the worse these officials' failures to fulfill their duties become, the greater their discretion expands to establish "check-points" farther and farther within "the interior"—until finally the entire "interior" will be excised from the Fourth Amendment. Yet, some thirty-six years (as of this writing) after the Supreme [3395] U.S. Const. amend. IV. Actually, such searches would be unconstitutional even with "Warrants", because they would amount to the type of dragnets licensed during pre-constitutional times by the infamous "writs of assistance". Contrast Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 616 (1886), and Gouled v. United States, 255 U.S. 298 (1921), with Warden v. Hayden, 387 U.S. 294 (1967), especially 387 U.S. at 312 (Fortas, J., concurring). See, e.g., Maurice H. Smith, The Writs of Assistance Case (Berkeley, California: University of California Press, 1978).

---

[3393] See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242.

[3394] Compare Thomas Powers, The Killing of Crazy Horse (New York, New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 2010) with Peter Matthiessen, In the Spirit of Crazy Horse (New York, New York: Viking, 1991).

[3396] United States v. Martinez-Fuerte, 428 U.S. 543, 556 (1976) (Powell, J., for the Court).

Court first enunciated that puerile absurdity, the unconstitutional activity still continues unabated.

One need not suffer from even incipient paranoia to suspect, though, that something other than childish illogic was at work in this matter—that, instead, a plan was being put into operation to use securing this Nation's borders as an excuse to extend throughout the country police-state controls that would be arguably legitimate only at the borders (and, in some instances, not even there). So, one can anticipate that the United States Transportation Safety Administration will soon endeavor to enforce this type of "exception" to the Fourth Amendment on all American citizens throughout the country. After all, if the TSA can subject every passenger in the process of boarding an airplane to a degrading and possibly dangerous search without a shred of probable cause of any conceivable violation of any law, why can it not accost people boarding or riding trains, busses, automobiles, or bicycles—or merely walking from place to place? All of these are modes of "transportation"; any traveler might turn out to be an illegal alien; any illegal alien, or for that matter any legal alien or even citizen, might be a domestic "terrorist"; and the TSA would be the first to claim that "the flow of [domestic 'terrorists' along the terrestrial arteries of commerce] cannot be controlled effectively" unless everyone using any and every means of transportation is subject to search at all times.

Actually, this would be but one small step farther along the dark path down which the Supreme Court has dragged the Fourth Amendment towards effective extermination. For if the Court's recent decision licensing police to strip-search anyone arrested for any reason whatsoever, no matter how conjectural or contrived, which eviscerates the Amendment's guarantee of "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons",[3397] is combined with the Court's earlier ruling that an arrest without a warrant but on the basis of alleged probable cause of the violation of any law, no matter how minor, does not constitute an "unreasonable * * * seizure[ ]" under the Fourth Amendment,[3398] rogue police may henceforth detain, intimidate, and even personally humiliate essentially any American against whom they can dummy up any trivial charge. Because the first definition of "terrorism" in the English lexicon is "government by * * * intimidation",[3399] cumulatively these decisions already license the police literally to terrorize every individual they accost for any supposed infraction of any law whatsoever. If TSA agents or other police invested with authority to supervise "travel" may confront individuals who are "traveling" and demand that they submit to interrogation and invasive searches, and any alleged [3397] Florence v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of County of Burlington, No. 10-945, ___ U.S. ___ (2012) (Kennedy, J., for the Court).

---

[3398] Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, 532 U.S. 318 (2001) (Souter, J., for the Court).

[3399] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 1489. Accord, The Compact Edition of the Oxford English Dictionary, ante note 11, Volume 2, at 3268.

resistance on the part of those individuals—whether physical, verbal, or merely attitudinal—can be made out to constitute probable cause to suspect the violation of any law, then every "traveler" who does not cringe in abject submission to the demands of any TSA thug can be subjected to detention and strip-searches.[3400]

c. Fully anti-constitutional powers now being claimed. Not satisfied with powers adventitiously cobbled together one by one through ludicrous ad hoc "exceptions" to the Bill of Rights over the years, the "internal-security" bureaucrats in the District of Columbia have embarked upon a systematic program to arm themselves with a complete set of integrated and comprehensive police-state powers, the breadth and depth of which they rationalize as supposedly necessary to wage "the war on terrorism". These are not merely extra-constitutional powers, in the sense of limited "exceptions" that perhaps amount only to annoying yet not terminally debilitating cracks in the Constitution's walls, but instead are truly anti-constitutional powers, because they will—and are intended to—undermine its very foundations and in short order bring down the entire edifice in a controlled demolition. These powers include—

(1) The purported power to disseminate "official lies". The issue here is not so much the formal legal power of public officials, as it is their practical power in terms of their ability and willingness knowingly to broadcast falsehoods under some governmental imprimatur, to withhold facts, or to deceptively discolor the presentation of information under the invocation of "national security", "state secrets", "executive privilege", or some other question-begging rubric, whenever they choose to do so. For in a constitutional republic no such general legal authority can possibly exist. WE THE PEOPLE cannot supervise the conduct of their "representatives" if the "representatives" can deceive them at will through self-serving acts of commission or omission. If the "representatives" can lie to or withhold information from THE PEOPLE at discretion, then THE PEOPLE cannot determine whether they are being properly "represented". And if THE PEOPLE cannot know whether they are being "represented" properly, then for all meaningful intents and purposes they are not being "represented" at all. No politically sane

---

[3400] Out of an excess of charity, one may assume that the Justices who decided the cases cited in the text did not foresee and intend this unconscionable result, but that instead it arose mechanically out of the so-called "gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion" which has come to be adopted in constitutional cases. See Davidson v. City of New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97, 104 (1878). According to the Court, this process requires the Justices to decide each case on as narrow a basis as possible, without consideration of the possible consequences the aggregation of prior holdings may have in different situations in the future. As the common aphorisms have it, they will "take only one step at a time" and will "cross that bridge only when they come to it". While the Justices wait for some appropriate case trudging the long road of litigation to arrive at that distant bridge, however, rogue "law-enforcement agencies", always eager to expand their powers, will inevitably extrapolate those decisions to their limits (and even beyond), to common Americans' gravest disadvantage. Indeed, a thoroughgoing police-state apparatus aggressively pushing the threat of detention and strip-searches in every possible venue could be expected to cow all too many Americans into sheepish obedience to every policeman's every command, no matter how unlawful it might be found to be at the end of a tedious course of litigation which almost none of the victims would be able to pursue.

people would ever accept supposed "representation" on such deceitful terms. Thus, no "Government[ ] instituted among Men" could ever "deriv[e] * * * [such an un]just power[ ] from the consent of the governed".[3401]

The seriousness of the present-day problem in this country inheres not merely in the emission of falsehoods and the suppression of truth by officialdom in the conduct of public business, but in the peculiarly pervasive and persistent character of this malfeasance. It is not a matter of adventitious, even though widespread, lies, half-truths, and withholding and destruction of evidence by rogue officials intent only upon covering up, whitewashing, or bathing in a false light their own incompetence, negligence, willful misbehavior, or even criminal wrongdoing. Under such circumstances, Americans would suffer simply from a passing climate or culture of political dishonesty and corruption which they could correct, case by case, through exposure, impeachment, defeat at the next election, or prosecution of particular rogue officials—the standard "checks and balances" of representative, republican government. Unfortunately and ominously, the present situation involves not just a few episodes of dishonesty and corruption disconnected with one another, but instead the conscious, systematic, and institutionalized use of falsehoods as components of or means of promoting, implementing, and defending unpopular and even blatantly illegal policies—that is, "official lies"—for the promulgation and consequences of which their purveyors expect never to be called to account in any way, because they control and therefore can fend off or subvert all of those "checks and balances".[3402]

To be sure, the enforcement of secrecy on the one hand and the dissemination of disinformation on the other may be necessary and fully justified in order to deceive real enemies in times of actual war.[3403] But in recent decades "official lies" have increasingly become the debased currency of public discourse in order to hide or misrepresent rogue officials' involvement in such horrendous wrongdoing as goading a foreign nation into launching a "surprise" attack in order to enrage reluctant Americans into waging a war which neither nation ever needed to fight in the first place;[3404] stirring up hysterical racial prejudice and malicious

---

[3401] See Declaration of Independence.

[3402] For example, by using threats of prosecution to deter "whistleblowers" from releasing embarrassing information to the public. In aid of rendering this code of omertá effective, the Supreme Court has ruled that the First Amendment—notwithstanding its guarantees for the freedoms of speech and of the press, and the right to petition the government—does not prohibit rogue officials from retaliating against a public employee who volubly objects to official misconduct in the course of his employment. See Garcetti v. Ceballos, 547 U.S. 410 (2006). Of course, in some situations a few weak statutory protections for "whistleblowers" may be available. See, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b)(8).

[3403] See, e.g., Anthony C. Brown, Bodyguard of Lies (New York, New York: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1975).

[3404] Compare and contrast, e.g., Robert B. Stinnett, Day of Deceit: The Truth About FDR and Pearl Harbor (New York, New York: Touchstone, 2000) (exposes but approves of Roosevelt's deceptions); and Mark E. Willey, Pearl Harbor: Mother of All Conspiracies (Bloomington, Indiana: Xlibris Corporation, 2000) (strongly charges of disloyalty against American citizens and resident aliens of a particular ethnic origin, while suppressing information that established their loyalty, so that they could be rounded up and detained in concentration camps;[3405] generating false "intelligence" ("an old grey mare" in the profession's jargon) in order to rationalize aggression against a foreign nation which posed no threat to the United States;[3406] and even framing and then liquidating a "lone gunman" as the assassin of the President of the United States, when in fact, even if the designated patsy was somehow implicated in the crime, a complex conspiracy was the true collective culprit.[3407]

Perhaps the worst of this genre—because they could trigger international confrontations leading to major wars—are the "false-flag" and other "black operations" which in recent years have been and continue to be mounted in order to foment various military adventures and other acts of aggression in the Balkans, Africa, and the Middle East. These are nothing new. As early as 1962, a study prepared for the Joint Chiefs of Staff outlined how such an operation, code-named "Northwoods", could be conducted.[3408] The proponents described "pretexts which [the Joint Chiefs of Staff] consider would provide justification for US military intervention in Cuba".[3409] The "premise" was > that US military intervention will result from a period of heightened US-Cuban tensions which place the United States in the position of suffering justifiable grievances, World opinion, and the United Nations forum should be favorably affected by developing the international image of the disapproves of Roosevelt's actions).

---

[3405] See Michi Weglyn, Years of Infamy: The Untold Story of America's Concentration Camps (New York, New York: William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1976), Chapter 1.

[3406] See, e.g., Sheldon Rampton and John Stauber, Weapons of Mass Destruction: The Uses of Propaganda in Bush's War on Iraq (New York, New York: Jeremy P. Tarcher / Penguin, 2003). Revealingly, the propaganda and agitation put out to manufacture mass hysteria over Iraq fit the standard rhetorical pattern of "gun control": namely, that disarming Iraq of "weapons of mass destruction" would make the American people safe. Generalized internationally, the notion is that disarming all nations of "weapons of mass destruction" will make the population of the entire world safe—except, of course, from the nation or supra-national institution which proves powerful enough (presumably, through its own permanent possession of "weapons of mass destruction") to impose such disarmament on every other nation or institution.

[3407] See, e.g., James W. Douglass, JFK and the Unspeakable: Why He Died and Why It Matters (New York, New York: Touchstone, 2008); Stewart Galanor, Cover-Up (New York, New York: Kestrel Books, 1998); Harrison E. Livingstone and Robert J. Groden, High Treason: The Assassination of JFK & the Case for Conspiracy (New York, New York: Carroll & Graf Publishers, Inc., 1998); Assassination Science: Experts Speak Out on the Death of JFK, James H. Fetzer, Editor (Peru, Illinois: Catfeet Press, 1997); Noel Twyman, Bloody Treason. On Solving History's Greatest Murder Mystery: The Assassination of John F. Kennedy (Rancho Santa Fe, California: Laurel Publishing, 1997).

[3408] See <http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/news/20010430/doc1.pdf>.

[3409] REPORT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AND JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF REPRESENTATIVE ON THE CARIBBEAN SURVEY GROUP to the JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF on CUBA PROJECT (13 March 1962), at 2.

> Cuban government as rash and irresponsible, and as an alarming and unpredictable threat to the peace of the Western Hemisphere.[3410]

"Such a plan would enable a logical build-up of incidents to be combined with other seemingly unrelated events to camouflage the ultimate objective".[3411] Among the steps calculated to rationalize military intervention were: (i) "legitimate provocation" by "[h]arassment plus deceptive actions to convince the Cubans of imminent invasion"; (ii) "[s]tart rumors (many)"; (iii) "[a] 'Remember the Maine' incident could be arranged" by "blow[ing] up a drone (unmanned) vessel anywhere in the Cuban waters", with faked "[c]asualty lists in US newspapers" to "cause a helpful wave of national indignation"; (iv) "develop a Communist Cuban terror campaign in the Miami area, in other Florida cities and even in Washington", by "[e]xploding a few plastic bombs in carefully chosen spots, the arrest of Cuban agents and the release of prepared documents substantiating Cuban involvement"; (v) "[h]ijacking attempts against civil air and surface craft"; (vi) "[a] 'Cuban-based, Castro-supported' filibuster could be simulated against a neighboring Caribbean nation"; and (vii) "create an incident which will demonstrate convincingly that a Cuban aircraft has * * * shot down a chartered civil airliner".[3412] The last of these is particularly revealing, in that it adumbrated how someone at a high level in "the military-industrial complex" could have imagined using drone aircraft to stage the incident that triggered "the war on terrorism".

Although the "Northwoods" conspiracy was apparently never carried to its ultimate conclusion, the tactics it proposed have been employed so repetitively since 1962, and in so many different venues, that they have become, as the wag remarked, "just déjà vue all over again". One need only substitute for "Cuba" some other foreign country—such as Iraq, Libya, Syria, or Iran—in the foregoing passages to recognize that most of the modern imperialistic foreign policy concocted in the District of Columbia has closely adhered to this formula. (With, of course, some additions to the litany of excuses for intervention, such as that the régime in the targeted country has, or is developing, "weapons of mass destruction"; is terrorizing its own citizens; or is engaged in a civil war with synthetic "freedom fighters" who somehow deserve massive armed support from "the international community".)

In all of this, the exquisitely Orwellian nature of "pretexts which * * * would provide justification" appears not to have bothered the Joint Chiefs of Staff, or anyone else in a high-level position in the General Government, either then or thereafter. Yet, by their own choice of words, they condemned the very principle of the "Northwoods" operation and its many progeny and imitators as illogical, unjust,

---

[3410] Id.

[3411] Id. at 5.

[3412] Id. at 7-10.

illegal, and amoral. For a "justification" is "a showing or proving to be just or conformable to law, justice, right, or duty"—whereas a "pretext" is an "[o]stensible reason or motive assigned as a color or cover for the real reason or motive; pretense; disguise".[3413] So, if an action's conformity "to law, justice, right, or duty" is intentionally nothing more than a "disguise", then "the real reason or motive" for that action, and the action itself, must not exhibit such conformity at all, but the very opposite. Doubtlessly, had Cuba then, or any other country thereafter, employed the same tactics against the United States as the rogue operatives of the United States plotted to employ against Cuba (and have used against other countries thereafter), the then-Joint Chiefs of Staff and other officials of the General Government would have excoriated the perpetrators in no uncertain terms as international criminals. To be sure, this would have constituted crass hypocrisy—but, far worse, it would have exhibited what the German historian Friedrich Meinecke denounced as the gross chauvinistic antinomianism that characterized Adolf Hitler as a person and National Socialism as an ideology.[3414]

The eventual revelation of some of the details of the "Northwoods" conspiracy is, of course, not unique. Indeed, so many other grotesque "official lies" have finally been exposed (albeit usually too late to do much of anything about them),[3415] and as a result so many Americans now expect that rogue public officials will attempt to gull them as a matter of course, that no pronouncement from governmental sources at any level of the federal system can or should be taken at face value. From these experiences, Americans can finally appreciate the cynical wisdom in the wry sayings in the old Soviet Union with respect to Pravda (Truth, the official "organ" of the Communist Party) and Izvestia (News, the official "organ" of the Soviet government), that "in Pravda there is no truth and in Izvestia there is no news" and "in Pravda there is no news and in Izvestia there is no truth". Yet Americans should hardly be surprised to find those adages just as applicable, deplorable, and disgraceful under the Stars and Stripes as they were under the Hammer and Sickle. For, when complainants sought "to secure * * * a ruling * * * that there exists a[n] * * * individual constitutional right under the Ninth Amendment 'to trust the federal government and to rely on the integrity of its pronouncements'", judges at the very highest levels supposedly could "find no basis in constitutional history, judicial interpretation, political history, legal scholarship, or persuasive argument to conclude that such a right exists under the Ninth [3413] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 807, 1135.

---

[3414] The German Catastrophe: Reflections and Recollections (Boston, Massachusetts: Beacon Press, 1963), at 23-24. Of course, the selfsame antinomianism pervaded Leninism, Stalinism, Maoism, and other totalitarian systems of modern times.

[3415] See, e.g., David Hoffman, The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror (Port Townsend, Washington: Feral House, 1998).

Amendment, or any other provision of the Constitution of the United States".[3416] Inasmuch as the Ninth Amendment provides that "[t]he enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people", these decisions afford rogue public officials a truly limitless "license to lie". For if no American may claim any right "'to trust the federal government and to rely on the integrity of its pronouncements'", then officials must labor under no duty whatsoever to be trustworthy and truthful; and, as a consequence, they must enjoy a perfect privilege to be *un*trustworthy and *un*truthful, and a perfect immunity from any punishment for such misconduct.[3417]

To be sure, as Americans increasingly realize that they cannot "'trust the federal government and * * * rely on the integrity of its pronouncements'", they will become decreasingly willing to believe anything official spokesmen tell them—which will be all to the good. Nonetheless, disbelieving public officials is not equivalent to knowing the truth of the matter, particularly when most of the relevant facts about which those officials are lying, or the existence of which they are simply denying, remain sequestered within the rabbit-warrens of governmental bureaucracies to which common citizens cannot gain access. Americans' mounting disbelief—and the political disgust it fosters—can, however, encourage them to search out the truth on their own, leaving rogue officials talking to themselves. This possibility has not been lost on those officials, either. They know that "the truth will make [the people] free".[3418] Therefore they must suppress the truth. But that becomes increasingly difficult with each passing day of technological innovation in the collection, dissemination, analysis, and retention of information. So they must employ *un*truths to render the people *un*free, before too much of the truth becomes apparent to too many Americans, and enough of them begin to act upon it. Thus, the main purpose of the present régime of "official lies"under the aegis of "the war on terrorism" is to flood the channels of mass communications with propaganda, agitation, and disinformation designed to achieve three interlocking goals:

> (i) Mass paranoia fueled by the bogey of international "terrorism"—to inculcate the belief that erection of a National para-military police-state apparatus is desperately necessary to provide for Americans' safety.[3419] This will camouflage the intrusions of the

---

[3416] Mapco Inc. v. Jimmy Carter, President, 573 F.2d 1268, 1277-1278 (Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals 1978) (Becker, J., for the Court), certiorari denied, 437 U.S. 904 (1978); discussed in detail in E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1644-1650.

[3417] See A. Corbin, "Legal Analysis and Terminology", ante note 23, at 167-168, 170.

[3418] See John 8:32.

[3419] Amazingly, this campaign aimed at exaggerating the danger from international "terrorists" proceeds apace even while the Armed Forces falsely tout the success of their military incursions against the "terrorists'" supposed bases in such places as Afghanistan. See, e.g., the exposé by Lt. Colonel Daniel L. Davis, Dereliction of Duty II: Senior Military Leaders' Loss of Integrity Wounds Afghan War Effort (27 January 2012). Apparently, apparatus into Americans' daily lives and facilitate their acceptance of its impositions. Then, with the apparatus firmly in place,

(ii) Mass acquiescence in the ever-present reality of domestic repression—to instill a sense of futility and resignation, by convincing Americans that just about anyone can and will be browbeaten, physically assaulted, tasered, and arrested for the least manifestation of defiance, disobedience, or even disrespect to a "law-enforcement officer", and that no meaningful (and certainly no timely) judicial remedy will be afforded to the victims of such police brutality. Justifiable fear of the apparatus will cause the average citizen to conform his behavior to the slogan, "Know your place! Do what you are told! Keep your mouth shut!" This will deter those who might dare to engage in public criticism, opposition, and resistance. And to maintain this state of affairs,

(iii) Mass confusion, controversy, and ultimately intellectual chaos—to infuse and intensify within society every possible form of political, economic, cultural, racial, and religious suspicion, division, animosity, and antagonism, so as to prevent individuals and groups from coalescing as WE THE PEOPLE in effective opposition to the highly organized professional politicians, bureaucrats, factions, and other special interests who and which exploit and oppress them. Misunderstanding and confusion lead to suspicion—which foments distrust and division—which prevent people from organizing for their collective self-defense—which results in a discontinuity in popular solidarity, and at length the disappearance of the social conditions necessary for popular sovereignty.

In such wise, "official lies" prove the perverse political truth that in any competent tyranny conformity and obedience on the part of the masses are best rooted in fear and fertilized with ignorance: Today in America, the common people's irrational fear of "terrorists"; tomorrow, their all-too-justifiable fear of the domestic police-state apparatus set up ostensibly to deal with "terrorists"; overall, their fear of their own inability or unwillingness to rein in the tyranny which oppresses them, born of their own ignorance of both their constitutional authority and their capabilities for concerted action.

(2) The purported power to conduct permanent and pervasive surveillance of Americans. This power appears in statutes aimed at squeezing the last drop of information out of Americans' communications and financial the molders of public opinion presume that no significant number of Americans will ever compare one side of the coin of official propaganda with the other.

---

transactions.[3420] Such comprehensive surveillance constitutes "unreasonable searches" which should be disallowed altogether—especially when their targets are denied the protection of "Warrants * * * issue[d] * * * upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the * * * things to be seized".[3421]

That is hardly the worst of the burgeoning "surveillance state", though, because intelligence agencies admit that they are aggressively monitoring Americans' "publicly available online forums, blogs, public websites, and message boards to collect information".[3422] Such eavesdropping may not extract inculpatory information surreptitiously—if one believes the official line that only "publicly available" sources are being scrutinized. Nonetheless, inevitably it will tend to suppress the dissemination of even innocent information and opinion that falls outside of the political and economic "mainstream". For when individuals and groups know or suspect that they are under constant surveillance, their expressions of even legitimate points of view which challenge the prevailing official orthodoxies will be (as lawyers say) "chilled", if not wholly stifled. This, of course, is only the tip of the iceberg that rogue officialdom allows the public to see. If, as seems apparent, various agencies have the technical capabilities to eavesdrop on all electronic communications of every American—and must be presumed to be exercising those capabilities to some significant degree already, under the cloak of "state secrets"—then "official espionage" against this country's own population has reached a point orders of magnitude worse than anything every experienced (or even imagined) by ordinary citizens under the Tsarist Okhrana, Stalin's NKVD, or Hitler's Gestapo.

In addition to rummaging through Americans' personal records and monitoring their interpersonal correspondence, police-state investigators are now seeking the authority to deploy thousands of drone aircraft across this country's skies in order to observe potentially every activity in which any American engages [3420] See, e.g., An Act To deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes ("Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism (USA PATRIOT ACT) Act of 2001"), Act of 26 October 2001, Pub. L. 107-56, TITLE II—ENHANCED SURVEILLANCE PROCEDURES, §§ 201-225, and TITLE III—INTERNATIONAL MONEY LAUNDERING ABATEMENT AND ANTI-TERRORISM FINANCING ACT OF 2001, §§ 301-372, 115 Stat. 272, 278-296, 296-342. Continued by An Act To extend and modify authorities needed to combat terrorism, and for other purposes, Act of 9 March 2006, Pub. L. 109-177, 120 Stat. 192; and An Act To provide for an additional temporary extension of programs under the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, and for other purposes ("PATRIOT Sunset Extension Act of 2011"), Act of 26 May 2011, Pub. L. 112-14, § 2(a), 125 Stat. 216, 216.

---

[3421] See ante, note 3395.

[3422] See U.S. Department of Homeland Security, Privacy Compliance Review of the NOC Media Monitoring Initiative (15 November 2011), at 1. The fineness of the mesh in this philological net can be gauged from Department of Homeland Security, National Operations Center, Media Monitoring Capability, Desktop Reference Binder, Analyst's Desktop Binder (2011), § 2.13 Key Words & Search Terms, at 20-23.

in the open, as well as under the various types of concealment the latest sensors can penetrate.[3423] These spies in the skies have the advantages that, unlike stationary cameras (which already infest at least every urban area in the United States) and GPS-tracking devices (the employment of which without warrants the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional, for whatever that may be worth[3424]), they are highly mobile, can survey extensive areas from distances and heights at which they themselves cannot be easily detected, can scrutinize and transmit information about their targets in exacting detail, can be configured to employ a variety of sensors to perform different missions, and do not require actual attachment to anyone's private property in order to perform their functions. Whether the Judiciary will find the use of drones compatible with the Fourth Amendment remains to be seen, though. On the one hand, certain judicial decisions might appear favorable to that outcome.[3425] On the other hand, these cases involved surveillance of things which were visible to and actually observed and identified by the naked eye, not what could be discerned only by technologically advanced optical and electronic sensors and scanners. Once the deployment of drones becomes commonplace across America, however, the courts may well determine that, because everyone knows that they are crisscrossing the skies, and has at least a rough idea as to their capabilities for observation, no one can claim "a reasonable expectation of privacy" against any such surveillance.[3426]

Moreover, inasmuch as drone aircraft are capable, not only of surveillance, but also of directing or even delivering a wide variety of weaponry to the targets they identify and track, their deployment will expose to destruction, on a twenty-four-hour basis and wherever they may be located, potentially every American whom police-state operatives consider for whatever reason to be "enemy combatants" or "terrorists" (along with whatever other unfortunate individuals happen to be in the vicinity, and end up being tallied as "collateral damage"). In [3423] See An Act To amend title 49, United States Code, to authorize appropriations for the Federal Aviation Administration for fiscal years 2011 through 2014, to streamline programs, create efficiencies, reduce waste, and improve aviation safety and capacity, to provide stable funding for the national aviation system, and for other purposes ("FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012"), Act of 14 February 2012, Pub. L. 112-95, TITLE III—SAFETY, Subtitle B—Unmanned Aircraft Systems, §§ 331 through 336, 126 Stat. 11, 72-78, and TITLE IX—FEDERAL AVIATION RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT, § 903, 126 Stat. at 138-139.

---

[3424] United States v. Jones, No. 10-1259, ___ U.S.___ (2012).

[3425] See Florida v. Riley, 488 U.S. 445 (1989) (surveillance from a helicopter); California v. Ciraolo, 476 U.S. 207 (1986) (surveillance from a fixed-wing aircraft).

[3426] For example, a stationary camera surveying the length of a city street might be able to deploy a wide-angle and a telescopic lens, in addition to a normal lens. The authorities in that city might have publicized this fact, so that everyone was at least on legal notice of it. If the camera did not violate the "reasonable expectation of privacy" of an individual near by on whom it focused through its normal lens, it would arguably not violate the "reasonable expectation of privacy" of someone in the periphery of its vision on whom it focused through its wide-angle lens, or of someone at a great remove on whom it focused through its telescopic lens—because in the face of such technology, notoriously deployed, for those individuals to have any "expectations of privacy" would be "unreasonable" (and surely imprudent).

light of the ever-increasing employment of drones for such purposes and with such effects in overseas venues, against Americans as well as foreigners, once their domestic deployment has become routine they may emerge as the agents of choice to effect "official assassinations" of those Americans considered most dangerous to the régime.[3427] The threat of constant surveillance, let alone "official assassination", will dissuade all but the hardiest dissenters from publicly criticizing the régime, so that the spies in the skies will function as effective aerial political muzzles "from sea to shining sea". Even were these developments not in aid of an expanding police state, they would be deplorable. For, besides making the decisions to assassinate targets easier because no "boots on the ground" need be put at risk, the use of drones will desensitize their operators to the horrific consequences, the illegality, and the moral squalor of such operations. Death and destruction wrought at long distances will be depersonalized and even dehumanized altogether by being reduced to fleeting images flickering on a computer screen, not unlike the highly realistic and obscenely violent video games with which so many Americans are already obsessed. And the cheaper the psychic cost of such aberrant behavior, the more likely it will persist, be promoted, and thus proliferate.

With respect to all of these activities, it should be enough to point out that, in a review of the Nazis' "PURGE OF POLITICAL OPPONENTS AND TERRORIZATION", the prosecutors at Nuremberg charged (and proved) that "[t]he Nazi conspirators created a vast system of espionage into the daily lives of all parts of the population"; "[t]hey destroyed the privacy of postal, telegraphic, and telephonic communications"; and "[t]*hey used the Secret State Police * * * and the Security Service * * * for the purpose of maintaining close surveillance over the daily activities of all people in Germany*".[3428] Those who refuse to learn from this episode will be condemned to live through (or perhaps die as the result of) its repetition.

(3) The purported power to mislabel some activity as "war". This power was concocted in order to rationalize application of the so-called "law of war" to American citizens, and thereby deny them a wide range of constitutional protections. Today, "the war on terrorism" is the primary semantic dodge which serves this devious purpose. At some point in the future, though, the authors of "the war on terrorism" may realize that they can exponentially expand the ambit of their deceit by linking that "war" with "the war on drugs" in particular and even "the war on crime" in general. For, as everyone knows, "terrorists" are often involved with the worldwide traffic in illicit drugs and with the syndicates of "organized crime" which control it. So, with the application of only a dollop of verbal grease, every domestic as well as international criminal enterprise, along with every individual allegedly connected therewith, could be shoe-horned into "the war on terrorism" as targets. In light of the breadth of the concept of "racketeering" under American law,[3429] if anyone alleged to be engaged in crimes that fell within that statutory rubric could be denounced as some species of "terrorist", and thereby automatically stripped of all constitutional protections, the possibilities for a para-military police state to run roughshod over this entire country could become truly breathtaking. This is far more than a far-fetched possibility. For all "racketeering" could just as easily be defined as a species of "terrorism" as "acts of terrorism" have already been defined as "racketeering".[3430] Indeed, inasmuch as common political parlance treats as legitimate discourse the terms "the war on poverty", "the war on overpopulation", "the war on illiteracy", and even "the war on obesity", the so-called "law of war" could invade the entire domain of economic, social, and other "welfare" legislation, rationalizing the erection of a para-military socialistic or communistic police state.

---

[3427] See post, at 1605-1624.

[3428] Office of United States Chief of Counsel For Prosecution of Axis Criminality, NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1946), Volume I, at 244-245 (emphasis in the original).

The obvious problem with its proponents' reliance on the fashionable catch-phrase "the war on terrorism" (let alone other ersatz "wars"), however, is that constitutional questions cannot be settled by the invocation of simplistic labels, any more than a sow's ear can become a silk purse simply because some jackass of a public official says it is.[3431] No thinking person is deceived by attachment of the label "war" to "terrorism". Every astute observer recognizes that the very concept of a "war on terrorism" is basically nonsensical. First, "terrorism" is a set of typically para-military tactics, not a foreign country or even a particular political ideology; and "terrorists" do not constitute one or more independent nations, but are at most mere bands of private criminals (seen from the perspective of their opponents) or perhaps actual freedom-fighters (seen from their own perspective) who are animated by all sorts of motives. Second, the strategies and tactics familiar in true warfare cannot be employed against "terrorists". For "terrorists" supposedly comprise a loosely linked international network, rather than a regular army or other military establishment of some foreign state that can be identified and targeted as such. They are committed to defend no permanently fixed territorial base. And they can strike whenever and wherever they choose, because they recognize and are tied

---

[3429] See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 and 1962.

[3430] See An Act To deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes ("Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism (USA PATRIOT ACT) Act of 2001"), Act of 26 October 2001, Pub. L. 107-56, TITLE VIII—STRENGTHENING THE CRIMINAL LAWS AGAINST TERRORISM, § 813, 115 Stat. 272, 382, incorporating acts listed in 18 U.S.C. § 2332b(g)(5)(B) (defining "Federal crime of terrorism") into 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1) (defining "predicate acts" that constitute "racketeering").

[3431] See, e.g., Craig v. Missouri, 29 U.S. (4 Peters) 410, 433 (1830); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 429 (1963); New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 268-269 & notes 7 through 12 (1964); Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 826 (1975); City of Madison, Joint School District No. 8 v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Commission, 429 U.S. 167, 173-174 & note 5 (1976).

to or excluded from no front lines, rear areas, or neutral territory. Third, the formal conditions of victory usual in a war—whether through an armistice, a surrender, or a treaty of peace—cannot be obtained in "the war on terrorism". For global "terrorism" is not an array of men and machines subject to some central, controlling structure of command, with legal authority, that can negotiate a cessation of hostilities and then impose upon its own fighters the terms of any such arrangement, or that can yield its dominion over specific territory in such a manner as to enable the United States to enforce such an agreement. Fourth, the actual conditions for a final victory against "terrorism" can never be achieved. Nothing can compel the simultaneous surrender of all "terrorists" now at large and the termination of all acts of "terrorism" now directed against the United States, or prevent all future recruitment and deployment of new "terrorists" and their commission of new acts of "terrorism". But the existential impossibility of waging, let alone ever finally winning, "the war on terrorism" is no demerit to its proponents. Quite the contrary: The political value of "the war on terrorism" is precisely that, in the nature of things, it will never end*. And as long as it drags on, a rationalization will subsist for rogue public officials to ignore the Constitution with respect to any and every American to whom they can attach some label which links him, howsoever tenuously, to "terrorism".*

In the Constitution, "War" is a term of art which is employed in more than one way. Most familiarly, "War" connotes a specific set of relations between two or more nations that comes into existence under particular conditions. It may arise with legal formality—as when Congress exercises its power "[t]o declare War".[3432] The self-evident reasons for this requirement are: (i) so that the matter will be debated openly and completely, in the highest legislative forum of the land, before irretrievable actions are taken; and (ii) so that the legislators who choose to embroil their constituents in "War" can be identified and held personally responsible, if only at the next election. The necessity for a formal "declar[ation]", of course, makes it difficult for the United States to go to "War" as a matter of mere "foreign policy" (often simply an euphemism for the benefits to be derived by some domestic special-interest groups, or specially favored foreign countries), rather than only when America's actual self-preservation is at stake. Which is why rogue public officials, carrying water for special interests, have promoted the lunatic notion that the power "[t]o declare War" is "no longer relevant to a modern society" and has become "[i]nappropriate and anachronistic" as a prerequisite to an actual armed invasion of a foreign nation.[3433] The consequence of this kind of aberrant thinking is that the United States are now embroiled throughout the world in all sorts of military imperialism, adventurism, and in many cases naked aggression that have never received—and could never possibly receive—the constitutional imprimatur of a "declare[d] War". The purely legal aspects of this problem are adequately outlined elsewhere.[3434] The practical moral and political consequence—not just in formal international relations but with respect to the relations of the American people simply as human beings to all other peoples everywhere else—is that (in the condemnatory yet prophetic words of one of America's inveterate enemies) "[r]iding roughshod everywhere, U.S. imperialism has made itself the enemy of the people of the world and has increasingly isolated itself"—such that, "[i]f the U.S. monopoly capitalist groups persist in pushing their policies of aggression and war, the day is bound to come when they will be hanged by the people of the whole world. The same fate awaits the accomplices of the United States."[3435] Under present global political and especially economic conditions, Americans neglect at their peril the warning that

---

[3432] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[3433] Authorization for Use of Military Force Against Iraq, Markup Before the Committee on International Relations, House of Representatives, 107th Congress, 2d Session, on H.J. Resolution 114, October 2 and 3, 2002, Serial No. 107-116, at 127, 128 (Representative Henry Hyde, Illinois).

> [t]he United States has set up hundreds of military bases in many countries all over the world. * * * [A]ll military bases of the United States on foreign soil are so many nooses round the necks of U.S. imperialism. The nooses have been fashioned by the Americans themselves and by nobody else, and it is they themselves who have put these nooses round their own necks, handing the ends of the ropes to the Chinese people, the peoples of the Arab countries and all the peoples of the world who love peace and oppose aggression. The longer the U.S. aggressors remain in those places, the tighter the nooses round their necks will become.[3436]

This is a telling commentary on the wages of political sin being death: That, the more rogue public officials have embroiled the United States in ersatz foreign "wars" of aggression without formally "declar[ing] War"—because it was impossible to do so, legally and politically—the more the United States have become internationally isolated, hated, and endangered, caught up not in "a war to end all wars" but in "wars without end" unto their final destruction.

This said, nevertheless a constitutional "War" may sometimes arise with legal informality—as when a State "engage[s] in War" as a matter of fact, but "without the Consent of Congress" as a matter of law, if she is "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3437] Presumably, in such a dire situation a State may act prior to and ultimately without any "declar[ation of] War" by Congress; and the United States, too, may in fact "engage in War" under such circumstances, just as each of the several States which compose the Union may.

[3434] See E. Vieira, Jr., Constitutional "Homeland Security", ante note 3, at 25-33.

[3435] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 78, 79.

[3436] Id. at 76-77.

[3437] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

Events of this nature, though, plainly involve the exigency of community self-defense, which needs no explicit constitutional sanction—for Americans retain "among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them";[3438] and "[s]elf-defence * * * is justly called the primary law of nature, so it is not, neither can it be in fact, taken away by the law of society".[3439]

Whether attended with the trappings of legal formality or not, all of these manifestations of "War" involve at least one other nation as an antagonist. "War" cannot be waged, or even "declare[d]", against private parties (a "war on crime"), against things (a "war on drugs"), against tactics (a "war on terrorism"), against personal habits (a "war on smoking"), against personal characteristics (a "war on obesity"), or even against private parties committing serial crimes by means of "terrorism". Such was the understanding of the term "War" during the pre-constitutional era—and "[w]e are bound to interpret the Constitution in the light of the law as it existed at the time it was adopted".[3440] As Blackstone explained, > it is held by all the writers on the law of nature and nations, that the right of making war, which by nature subsisted in every individual, is given up by all private persons who enter into society, and is vested in the sovereign power: and this right is given up, not only by individuals, but even by the intire body of people, that are under the dominion of a sovereign. It would indeed be extremely improper, that any number of subjects should have the power of binding the supreme magistrate, and putting him against his will in a state of war. Whatever hostilities therefore may be committed by private citizens, the state ought not to be affected thereby: unless that should justify their proceedings, and thereby become partner in the guilt. Such unauthorized voluntiers in violence are not ranked among enemies, but are treated like pirates and robbers[.][3441]

> [And] the crime of piracy, or robbery and depredation upon the high seas, is an offence against the universal law of society * * * [being] among the principal cases, in which the statute law of England interposes, to aid and enforce the law of nations, as a part of the common law; by inflicting an adequate punishment upon offenses against that universal law, committed by private persons.[3442]

[3438] Declaration of Independence.

[3439] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 3, at 4.

[3440] Mattox v. United States, 156 U.S. 237, 243 (1895).

[3441] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 257 (footnote omitted) (emphasis supplied).

[3442] Id., Volume 4, at 71, 73 (emphasis supplied in part).

Rather than just an idiosyncratic notion of English legalists alone, Blackstone's understanding of the international character of "war" had long been a commonplace among expositors of the Law of Nations.[3443]

To be sure, a clandestine or irregular armed force of some rogue nation could employ the tactics of "terrorists" on that nation's behalf against the United States or some State. Under those circumstances, however, any defensive "War" by the United States or a State, although waged in law against the aggressor nation as a whole, could perhaps be waged in fact only against the "terrorists" as individuals. Nothing in the Constitution would preclude Congress, for example, from formally "declar[ing] War" against that nation, but specifying that the "War" would be conducted only in some geographically or operationally limited fashion. But then any of that nation's soldiers, whether regular or irregular, who committed acts of "terrorism" would be, not simply private "pirates and robbers", but "war criminals" subject to the punishments prescribed by Congress for "Offences against the Law of Nations".[3444]

So, not surprisingly, Congress has never attempted actually "[t]o declare War" on either "terrorism" or any alleged perpetrators of "terrorism"—because even contemporary Members of Congress instinctively sense that such a putative "declar[ation]" would be ridiculous in fact as well as impossible in law. To be sure, if Congress could satisfactorily describe with sufficient particularity the characteristics of international "terrorism", it could outlaw such crimes pursuant to its power "[t]o define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations",[3445] or perhaps even its power "[t]o regulate Commerce with foreign Nations".[3446] But those powers are constitutionally separate and distinct from, and independent of, Congress's power "[t]o declare War". So, because "each [provision of the Constitution] must be considered in light of the other[s]",[3447] by its very structure the Constitution makes clear that a "declar[ation of] War" with whatever it might entail in terms of deployment of the Armed Forces is an improper means to deal with private individuals and groups (so-called "non-state actors" and "non-governmental organizations", as the fashionable

---

[3443] See, e.g., Hugo Grotius, The Law of War and Peace [De Jure Belli ac Pacis Libri Tres (1646)] (Indianapolis, Indiana: The Bobbs-Merrill Company; Reprint from The Classics of International Law, by The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 1925), Book III, Chapter III, §§ I and II, at 630-632. The Founding Fathers were well aware of Grotius's work. See, e.g, The Federalist No. 84 note [4].

[3444] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10, applied through 18 U.S.C. § 2441. See generally, e.g., The Charter of the International Military Tribunal (Nuremberg, Germany, 1945); Office of United States Chief of Counsel for Prosecution of Axis Criminality, NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION, Opinion and Judgement (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1947); Joseph E. Persico, Nuremberg: Infamy on Trial (New York, New York: Penguin Books, 1994).

[3445] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10.

[3446] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3, coupled with cl. 18.

[3447] Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corporation, 377 U.S. 324, 332 (1964).

contemporary jargon has it) who or which commit "Piracies and Felonies * * * on the high Seas" or "Offences against the Law of Nations".

Noteworthy in this regard is that Blackstone described > the crime of piracy, or robbery and depredation upon the high seas, [a]s an offence against the universal law of society; a pirate being * * * hostis humani generis.[3448] As therefore he has renounced all the benefits of society and government, and has reduced himself afresh to the savage state of nature, by declaring war against all mankind, all mankind must declare war against him: so that every community hath a right, by the rule of self-defence, to inflict that punishment upon him, which every individual would in a state of nature have been otherwise entitled to, for any invasion of his person or personal property.[3449]

Nonetheless, as familiar with Blackstone as they were, WE THE PEOPLE did not leave authority for the punishment of "piracy, or robbery and depredation upon the high seas" to be somehow interpolated by mere implication into Congress's power "[t]o declare War". Instead, they explicitly delegated to Congress a separate, independent, precise, and sufficient power on that score. This is particularly remarkable, in that Blackstone condemned pirates as having "declar[ed] war against all mankind", so that "all mankind must declare war against [them]".

In addition to a formally "declare[d] War", or "War" brought on suddenly by an invasion or imminent threat thereof, the Constitution envisions that the United States may have "War" "lev[ied]" in fact "against them" by individuals who, because they owe the United States allegiance as their citizens,[3450] through such actions become guilty of "Treason".[3451] Yet Congress cannot "declare War" against such individuals and perforce of such a declaration subject them to military jurisdiction and "the law of war", because the Constitution explicitly requires that "[n]o Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court".[3452] If its specifications with respect to "Treason" are to be meaningful, the Constitution must require that anyone who has committed acts of "levying War" arguably amounting to "Treason" must be tried according to the particular procedure ("in open Court") and strict standards of evidence ("the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or * * * Confession") applicable to "Treason".

[3448] "Enemy of the human race."

[3449] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 71.

[3450] See United States v. Wiltberger, 18 U.S. (5 Wheaton) 76, 97 (1820).

[3451] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[3452] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1. On the strictness of this rule, see Cramer v. United States, 325 U.S. 1, 34-35 (1945).

If an act of "levying War" involved "adhering to the[ ] Enemies of the United States, giving them Aid and Comfort",[3453] and occurred "on the high Seas", an argument might be made that the perpetrator could be tried according to the standards applicable to "Piracies".[3454] For, during *pre-*constitutional times, had "any natural born subject commit[ted] any act of hostility upon the high seas, against others of his majesty's subjects, under colour of a commission from any foreign power; this, though it would only [have] be[en] an act of war in an alien, * * * [would have] be[en] construed piracy in a subject".[3455] Nonetheless, as "offence[s] against the universal law of society",[3456] all "Piracies" are "Crimes", "[t]he Trial of [which] * * * shall be by Jury",[3457] with "the accused * * * [to] enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury".[3458] Yet, if not subsumed within "Treason", such "Piracies" would not necessarily be subject to the evidentiary requirement of "two Witnesses to the same over Act, or * * * Confession".[3459] (Indeed, it was a similar requirement's "proving very inconvenient" when "th[e] Offence [of Piracy and Depredation at Sea] was punished at Common Law as Petit Treason, if committed by a Subject", which caused a change in the *pre-*constitutional English law, "ordaining that * * * it shall have the like Trial and Punishment, as are used for Felony at Common Law".[3460]) Under the Constitution, though, protection of an individual accused of crime must take precedence over the ease of his conviction. So, if a particular act of "Pirac[y]" can fairly be categorized as "Treason", it must be treated as such.

In any event, whether the charge is "Treason" or "Pirac[y]" or an act of "Pirac[y]" that constitutes "Treason", the perpetrator must receive at least the full protections the Constitution guarantees to all individuals who are to be tried "in open Court". This surely entails at least: (i) that such an individual's "right * * * to be secure in [his] person[ ] * * * against [an] unreasonable * * * seizure[ ], shall not be violated, and no Warrant[ ] shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing * * * the person[ ] * * * to be seized";[3461] (ii) that he may not "be held to answer for [such] a capital, or otherwise

---

[3453] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[3454] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10. Presumably, today "the high Seas" would include international air routes, most of which traverse "the high Seas". See 49 U.S.C. § 46504.

[3455] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 72 (emphasis supplied).

[3456] Id., Volume 4, at 71.

[3457] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3458] U.S. Const. amend. VI.

[3459] Congress could, of course, make them so, pursuant to its power "[t]o define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas". U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10. See 18 U.S.C. § 1652.

[3460] W. Hawkins, A Treatise of The Pleas of the Crown, ante note 434, Book I, Chapter XXXVII, §§ 1, 2, and 6, at 98, 99.

[3461] U.S. Const. amend. IV.

infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury"[3462]—thereby excluding charges drawn up under any form of military law; (iii) that he may not "be compelled in [such a] criminal case to be a witness against himself"[3463]—for instance, by torture; and (iv) that he "shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed * * * , and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining Witnesses in his favor; and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence"[3464]—which self-evidently excludes indefinite detention, as well as a trial before a court-martial, a "military commission", "military tribunal", or other such junta, but instead requires a "Trial * * * by Jury" in one of the civilian "inferior Courts", exercising part of "[t]he judicial Power of the United States", "as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish",[3465] pursuant to its power "[t]o constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court".[3466]

Of course, were the United States officially at "War" with some foreign nation, a rogue American citizen might, even while retaining his citizenship, "adher[e] to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort".[3467] In that situation too, however, such an American would be guilty of "Treason", and therefore not subject to "the law of war".

In short, if an American citizen is "levying War against the[United States]*, or * * * adhering to their Enemies", "the law of war"* cannot possibly be applied to him, because the Constitution requires that the law of "Treason" shall control. Or, in such a case, the only applicable "law of war" is the law of "Treason".

Congress cannot evade these constitutional limitations by creating other crimes of a nature substantially equivalent to "Treason", but to which it attaches different names, different procedures for trial, or different standards of proof. For "[i]f it be true that by varying the form the substance may be changed, it is not easy to see that anything would remain of the limitations of the Constitution. * * * But constitutional provisions cannot be thus evaded. It is the substance and not the form which controls[.]"[3468] For example, Congress may not purport to "define" acts of "levying War against the[United States]" as "Piracies and Felonies committed

---

[3462] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3463] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3464] U.S. Const. amend. VI. As to the venues for trial of "Crimes * * * not committed within any State", see U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3465] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 and § 1.

[3466] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9.

[3467] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1. On the strictness of the proof required for such a finding, see Cramer v. United States, 325 U.S. 1, 29-35 (1945).

[3468] Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429, 581 (1895).

on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations" in order to "punish" the commission of those acts in a way different from how it should be punished as "Treason".[3469] Similarly, when under the facts in the case a statute directed towards a crime denominated as other than "Treason" punishes arguably the selfsame behavior that constitutes "Treason", the constitutional requirements for dealing with "Treason" should be interpolated into that statute.[3470] So, in all cases in which American citizens as mere private individuals or groups engage in hostile acts against the United States, they cannot even arguably be subjected to "the law of war", because either: (i) they are not waging "War" in the capacity or on behalf of a foreign nation; or (ii) they are in fact "levying War" themselves against the United States, or "adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort", and therefore the Constitution requires that they must be treated specifically as traitors.

Of course, because "[t]reason is a breach of allegiance, and can be committed by him only who owes allegiance either perpetual or temporary",[3471] if an American citizen "los[t] his nationality by voluntarily * * * with the intention of relinquishing United States nationality * * * entering, or serving in, the armed forces of a foreign state if * * * such armed forces are engaged in hostilities against the United States",[3472] then such an individual, no longer owing allegiance to the United States, could and would not commit "Treason", and therefore possibly could be subjected to "the law of war" for his actions on behalf of that "foreign state". Nonetheless, an American cannot automatically lose his citizenship and be stripped of his duty of allegiance to the United States simply because he "lev[ies] War against them, or * * * adher[es] to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort". For the crime of "Treason" presupposes that an American can "levy[ ] War against the[United States]" and "adher[e] to their Enemies" even while retaining his citizenship and duty of allegiance—otherwise, every such act of "levying" and "adhering" would exclude the perpetrator from the Treason Clause, thus effectively nullifying it. Indeed, because no one can commit "Treason" unless he both owes allegiance to the United States and nonetheless "lev[ies] War against them, or * * * adher[es] to their Enemies", if "levying War" or "adhering to their Enemies" automatically deprives the perpetrator of his citizenship, and with it his duty of allegiance, then the very fact that an American is "levying War" or "adhering to [3469] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10 with art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

---

[3470] Compare and contrast, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 2381 (treason) and 2382 (misprision of treason), with 2383 (rebellion or insurrection), 2384 (seditious conspiracy), 2385 (advocating violent overthrow of the government), 2390 (enlistment to serve in armed hostility against the United States), 2332 (use of weapons of mass destruction), 2332b (acts of terrorism across national boundaries), 2339A (provision of material support to terrorists), and 2339B (provision of material support to terrorist organizations). See, e.g., National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U.S. 1, 30 (1937); Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S. 705, 710-711 (1962); United States v. Thirty-seven (37) Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 369 (1971).

[3471] United States v. Wiltberger, 18 U.S. (5 Wheaton) 76, 97 (1820).

[3472] 8 U.S.C. § 1481(a)(3)(A) (emphasis supplied).

their Enemies" must constitute a defense to a charge of "Treason". That is, fulfilling the constitutional conditions for "Treason" would negate the crime!

The peculiar manner in which Congress is waging "the war on terrorism" raises yet another fatal constitutional objection. The Congressional Joint Resolution generally taken to legitimize that operation provides that > the President is authorized to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons he determines planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored such organizations or persons, in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States by such nations, organizations or persons.[3473]

Notwithstanding its garbled syntax—which confines the reach of this mandate to those particular "nations, organizations, or persons" which or who perpetrated certain specific crimes in the past, thus arming the President with no authority to interdict "future acts of international terrorism" by any other "nations, organizations, or persons"—as of this writing this Joint Resolution is widely assumed to delegate to the President the power effectively "[t]o declare War" by deploying "all necessary and appropriate force" against any foreign nation in order "to prevent any future acts of international terrorism" that he imagines, on whatever evidence or even personal whim, might occur. Inasmuch as prior to September of 2001 the Constitution already empowered the President, as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States",[3474] to employ such of those forces as Congress made available to him to defend this country from an imminent attack, the Joint Resolution's license "to prevent any future acts of international terrorism" must have been intended to go beyond National self-defense to what is called "preëmptive" or "preventive war"—or, more accurately put, aggression.

One would expect that, after the verdicts in the Nuremberg Trials as later codified in the Charter of United Nations,[3475] the black art of "preëmptive" or "preventive war" would find no apologists, let alone practitioners, among high officials of the United States. Surely, the evidence is far more persuasive that Adolf Hitler had sound military and political reasons (though certainly not legal or moral justifications) for launching a "preëmptive" or "preventive war" against Josef Stalin

---

[3473] Joint Resolution To authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against those responsible for the recent attacks launched against the United States ("Authorization for Use of Military Force"), S.J. Resolution 23, 18 September 2001, Pub. L. 107-40, § 2(a), 115 Stat. 224, 224.

[3474] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3475] See Charter of the United Nations, Chapter I, art. 1, § 1, and art. 2, §§ 3 and 4; Chapter VI, art. 33, § 1; Chapter VII, arts. 39 and 42; and Chapter VIII, art. 53.

in 1941 than that any such reason existed or now exists for any ersatz "war" which rogue officials of the General Government have launched since the end of this country's military misadventures in Vietnam in 1973.[3476] Yet Nazi Germany's attack on the Soviet Union was charged at Nuremberg, and is still almost universally catalogued today, as one more example of the Third Reich's unbridled aggression.[3477]

Even more consequential, long before the Nuremberg Trials or the Charter of the United Nations, the Constitution plainly proscribed "preëmptive" or "preventive war". The Preamble—the purposes stated in which must be construed as limitations on, or at least standards for interpretation of, all that follows in the rest of the document[3478]—lists as the goal relevant here, "to * * * provide for the common defence".[3479] Then, in its very first delegation of specific substantive authority to Congress, the Constitution grants the "Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States".[3480] How in the exercise of legal logic Congress could "provide for the common Defence" by "declar[ing a] War" of aggression—or how, in the face of the practical rule that "in warfare everything depends upon logistics", it could even hope to conduct such a "War" when it lacks the authority to "lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises" for such a purpose—passes understanding. Rather, the obvious conclusion must be that "the genius and character of our institutions are peaceful, and the power to declare war was not conferred upon Congress for the purposes of aggression and aggrandizement".[3481] Similarly for Congress's power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia", which may be "employed in the Service of the United States", only "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"[3482], but never to attack foreign nations at all, let alone in violation of the Constitution or [3476] See, e.g., John Mosier, Deathride—Hitler vs. Stalin: The Eastern Front, 1941-1945 (New York, New York: Simon & Schuster, 2010), at 80-81 & the authorities cited in note 49, and at 99-100. Basically, Hitler's attack on Stalin amounted to "a falling out among thieves", as the two dictators were equally guilty for the initial aggression against Poland which precipitated World War II, and for almost two years thereafter coöperated economically while Hitler waged war against France, England, and numerous other countries in Western Europe and the Balkans, and Stalin absorbed Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia into the Soviet Union and seized territory from Finland and Romania. See, e.g., John Kolasky, Partners in Tyranny: The Nazi-Soviet Nonaggression Pact, August 23, 1939 (Toronto, Canada: The Mackenzie Institute for the Study of Terrorism, Revolution and Propaganda, 1990).

---

[3477] See, e.g., NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION, ante note 3428, Volume I, JUDGMENT, Part III, THE COMMON PLAN OF CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSIVE WAR, Section (J), THE AGGRESSIVE WAR AGAINST THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS, at 43-45.

[3478] See, e.g., W. Crosskey, Politics and the Constitution, ante note 206, Volume 1, at 374-379.

[3479] Emphasis supplied.

[3480] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3481] Fleming v. Page, 50 U.S. (9 Howard) 603, 614 (1850).

[3482] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

other "Laws of the Union", including "the Law of Nations".[3483] Just so for the States, too, which the Constitution prohibits from "engag[ing] in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3484]

To be sure, the Constitution does delegate to Congress the more general powers "[t]o raise and support Armies" and "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy".[3485] But these must be construed consistently with the Preamble, which excludes aggression as a purpose for deploying these forces. Moreover, Congress's power "[t]o raise and support Armies" is subject to the specific constraint that "no Appropriation of Money to that use shall be for a longer Term than two Years".[3486] This requirement enables each newly elected House of Representatives, the House of Congress most closely identified with WE THE PEOPLE, to act as a fiscal "check and balance" on a "standing army".[3487] Now, "[n]o Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law".[3488] But no "Money" is to be found in the Treasury, save in consequence of some legislation which provides for raising revenue. "All Bills for raising Revenue", however, "shall originate in the House of Representatives".[3489] And the House of Representatives is limited in its ability to "rais[e] Revenue" through exercise of the "Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises" by the restriction that such revenue can be raised, and once raised expended, only "to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States".[3490] So "Money" already deposited in the Treasury may not be paid out for an "Appropriation to th[e] Use" of "rais[ing] and support[ing] Armies" for a "War [of aggression]"; and no new "Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises" may be imposed or collected for that purpose, either.

Congress, of course, lacks the discretion to delegate to the President even the authority "[t]o declare [a] War [for the common Defence]". Under pre-constitutional Anglo-American imperial law, the King (Britain's chief executive)—not Parliament (Britain's supreme legislature)—enjoyed "the sole prerogative of making war and peace".[3491] By explicitly lodging among the legislative powers of Congress what had long been the exclusive executive power "[t]o declare [3483] The Constitution would not empower Congress "[t]o define and punish * * * Offences against the Law of Nations" if "the Law of Nations" were not part of "the Laws of the Union". See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10.

---

[3484] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3485] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13.

[3486] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

[3487] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 1.

[3488] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 7.

[3489] U.S. Const. art. I, § 7, cl. 1.

[3490] U.S. Const. art. I § 8, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3491] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 257.

War", WE THE PEOPLE not only denied that power to the President outright, but also withheld from Congress any privilege to delegate it back to him in any way, shape, or form. Congress can claim no authority whatsoever to resurrect and impose on Americans the* pre*-constitutional British allocation of authority between the legislative and executive branches of government which WE THE PEOPLE have explicitly rejected in their own fundamental law. A fortiori, because Congress lacks the power "[t]o declare [a] War [of aggression]", it is doubly disabled from purporting to delegate such a nonexistent authority to the President.

(4) The purported power to label Americans "enemy combatants". Folk wisdom has it that "in order to kill a dog you must first call it mad". Similarly, the purpose of labeling American citizens "enemy combatants" is to rationalize exposing them to "the law of war". Again, though, attaching the mere label "enemy combatants" to Americans does not determine the constitutional propriety of subjecting them to some "law of war" that strips them of the Constitution's protections. Moreover, a dog can in fact be mad, and therefore liable to being killed on sight. An America who remains a citizen, however,[3492] cannot be subjected to "the law of war", even if he does engage in "hostilities against the United States".[3493] For if rogue American citizens are in fact "levying War against the[United States" (such as in the course of a domestic insurrection or rebellion), or even are "adhering to the[ ] Enemies [of the United States], giving them Aid and Comfort" (such as during a sudden invasion or a declared international "War")—and even if such Americans are employing the tactics of "terrorists"—although they may colloquially be dubbed "enemy combatants" (or even "mad dogs"), constitutionally they are "traitors", and as such are subject, and exclusively so, to the specific constitutional requirements that appertain to "Treason".[3494] If, on the other hand, these rogue citizens perpetrate acts of "terrorism" unconnected with domestic insurrections, invasions, or a declared "War", they are simply common criminals—perhaps guilty of "Piracies" or "Felonies committed on the high Seas" or of other "Offences against the Law of Nations" where their depredations fit those categories,[3495] or otherwise guilty of some mundane violation of law, but in no case subject to "the law of war".

(5) The purported power to subject Americans to "extraordinary rendition". The Founders were familiar with such abuses. The Declaration of Independence, after all, excoriated King George III "[f]or transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offences"—the most notorious example at the time

---

[3492] See 8 U.S.C. § 1481(a)(3)(A).

[3493] See generally E. Stewart Rhodes, Solving the Puzzle of "Enemy Combatant" Status, Supervised Analytic Writing Paper (Professor Owen Fiss, Advisor), Yale Law School (24 May 2004). If a law student could figure this out, it passes understanding that the highest officials in the General Government are unable to do so.

[3494] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3.

[3495] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10.

being the Gaspée affair.[3496] Thus, not surprisingly, although the specific statutory authority that today purportedly licenses so-called "extraordinary rendition"—more honestly put, kidnapping—of American citizens to remove them to foreign venues "beyond Seas" is conjectural,[3497] the procedure plainly offends the constitutional requirements that: (i) "[n]o person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury";[3498] (ii) "[t]he Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, * * * shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but where not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed";[3499] and (iii) "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law".[3500] For every imaginable case relating to "terrorism" that might supposedly warrant an "extraordinary rendition" will involve a "person * * * held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime". Every "extraordinary rendition" will likely translate a suspect to some location far removed from the place in which an alleged crime was committed—in any event a secret location, which even if specifically "by Law * * * directed" or "previously ascertained by law" nonetheless will remain unknown to WE THE PEOPLE, in order to exclude the victim from contacts with relatives and friends so that he cannot stand upon his right "to have the assistance of counsel for his defense".[3501] And, in this undisclosed location, neither "bail", nor "a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury", nor "a speedy and public trial" will even be available, let alone ever be had—doubtlessly so that the victim can be exposed to indefinite "enhanced interrogation" (that is, torture), in violation of his rights not to be "required" to post even "[e]xcessive bail",[3502] not to "be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself",[3503] and not to have "inflicted" upon him any "cruel and unusual punishments".[3504]

[3496] See ante, at 88-93.

[3497] Presumably it, too, derives implicitly from the Joint Resolution To authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against those responsible for the recent attacks launched against the United States ("Authorization for Use of Military Force"), S.J. Resolution 23, 18 September 2001, Pub. L. 107-40, § 2(a), 115 Stat. 224, 224. See Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507, 516-519 (2004) (O'Connor, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

[3498] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3499] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3500] U.S. Const. amend. VI.

[3501] U.S. Const. amend. VI.

[3502] U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

[3503] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3504] U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

(6) The purported power to detain Americans indefinitely in military custody. Notwithstanding the Supreme Court's callous approbation of this practice[3505]—which parallels its cowardly complicity in the even more blatantly offensive indefinite preventive detention of Japanese-Americans during World War II[3506]—indefinite detention "violate[s]" "the right" of the detainee "to be secure * * * against [an] unreasonable * * * seizure" of his "person".[3507] In cases involving alleged "terrorism" and equally serious offenses, it dispenses with the requirement that "[n]o person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury".[3508] It "deprive[s]" each "person" subject to it of his "liberty * * * without due process of law",[3509] unless the constitutional facts justifying detention are determined de novo and in a timely fashion by a judicial tribunal.[3510] It abridges "the right" of every "accused" "[i]n all criminal prosecutions * * * to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury" in a civilian court.[3511] And, precisely because it is indefinite but depends upon no actual judicial determination of guilt, such detention flies in the face of the prohibitions that "[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, * * * nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted".[3512]

Were all of this not enough, in their review of the Nazis' "PURGE OF POLITICAL OPPONENTS AND TERRORIZATION", the prosecutors at Nuremberg charged (and proved) that "[w]ithout judicial process, the Nazi conspirators imprisoned, held in protective custody and sent to concentration camps opponents and suspected opponents" and "authorized the Gestapo to arrest and detain [3505] See Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507, 516-524 (2004) (O'Connor, J., announcing the judgment of the Court), relying on Joint Resolution To authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against those responsible for the recent attacks launched against the United States ("Authorization for Use of Military Force"), S.J. Resolution 23, 18 September 2001, Pub. L. 107-40, § 2(a), 115 Stat. 224, 224.

[3506] Compare Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944) with Ex parte Endo, 323 U.S. 283 (1944). See Jacobus tenBroek, Edward N. Barnhart, and Floyd Matson, Prejudice, War and the Constitution (Berkeley, California: University of California Press, 1954). To the extent that degrees of putrescence can be assigned to the Court's grotesque violations of the Constitution, Korematsu was more of a stinker than Hamdi, because in Hamdi detention was imposed as a consequence of alleged prior behavior as to which some supposed evidence was available, whereas in Korematsu it was imposed as the result of nothing more than speculation about future behavior as to which, in the nature of things, no evidence could possibly have been assembled.

[3507] U.S. Const. amend. IV.

[3508] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3509] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3510] But contrast, e.g., Crowell v. Benson, 295 U.S. 22, 60 (1932), with Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 554 U.S. 507, 524-535(2004) (O'Connor, J., announcing the judgment of the Court). Surely it passes understanding that, in a case involving a taking of private property (Crowell) "the judicial power of the United States necessarily extends to the independent determination of all questions, both of fact and law", but in a case involving an individual's indefinite incarceration (Hamdi) "[h]earsay * * * may need to be accepted", and "a presumption [indulged] in favor of the Government's evidence", so as not to "impose [burdens] on the military".

[3511] U.S. Const. amend. VI and art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3512] U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

without recourse to any legal proceeding".[3513] "'[T]he fear of such camps was a very effective brake on any possible opposition.'"[3514] Those who will not learn from this history where the contemporary reintroduction of indefinite detention is leading America will be condemned to relive the lesson to its bitter end.

To be sure, the Constitution does provide that "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it",[3515] and to that limited extent tolerates possibly indefinite detention. During the already prolonged course of the "war on terrorism", however, Congress has yet to put forward the preposterous claim that any location within the United States is even exposed to, let alone suffering from, an actual "Rebellion or Invasion" that might justify "suspend[ing]" that "Privilege".[3516]

Notwithstanding the absence of the constitutional facts necessary for a suspension of "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus"—which, of course, neither Congress, nor the President, nor any of their agents can claim conclusively to find in any event[3517]—Congress has made it clear that it approves of the President's use of indefinite detention for American citizens. One section of its most recent statute (as of this writing) provides as follows:

> (a) IN GENERAL.—Congress affirms that the authority of the President to use all necessary and appropriate force pursuant to the Authorization for Use of Military Force * * * includes the authority for the Armed Forces of the United States to detain covered persons * * * pending disposition under the law of war.
>
> (b) COVERED PERSONS.—A covered person under this section is any person as follows:
>
> > (1) A person who planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored those responsible for those attacks.

[3513] NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION, ante note 3428, Volume I, at 245 (emphasis in the original).

[3514] Id., Volume I, at 246, quoting from Affidavit of Raymond H. Geist in id., Volume IV, at 288 (Document 1759-PS).

[3515] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2 (emphasis supplied).

[3516] Even during the period of orchestrated mass hysteria, paranoia, xenophobia, and racism in late 1941 and early 1942, following the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, Congress never pretended that the Japanese-Americans the Roosevelt Administration interned in military custody were themselves engaged in "Rebellion" or were plotting to support an utterly impossible Japanese "Invasion" of the West Coast.

[3517] See, e.g., Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 154 U.S. 362, 397, 399 (1894); Missouri Pacific Railway Company v. Tucker, 230 U.S. 340, 349 (1913); Wadley Southern Railway Company v. Georgia, 235 U.S. 651, 660-661 (1915); Ohio Valley Water Company v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U.S. 287, 289 (1920); Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 60 (1932); Saint Joseph Stock Yards Company v. United States, 298 U.S. 38, 51-51 (1936).

> (2) A person who was a part of or substantially supported al-Qaeda, the Taliban, or associated forces that are engaged in hostilities against the United States or its coalition partners, including any person who has committed a belligerent act or has directly supported such hostilities in aid of such enemy forces.
>
> (c) DISPOSITION UNDER LAW OF WAR.—The disposition of a person under the law of war as described in subsection (a) may include the following
>
> (1) Detention under the law of war without trial until the end of hostilities authorized by the Authorization for Use of Military Force.[3518]

"[A]ny person" can include an American citizen—for nowhere are Americans excluded from that term. Therefore, any American whom someone in the Executive Branch believes (on whatever ground, be it serious, spurious, or the spawn of mere spite) to have "committed a belligerent act or * * * directly supported * * * hostilities in aid of enemy forces" against either "the United States or its coalition partners" can be detained "under the law of war without trial until the end of * * * hostilities"—and not simply in indefinite, but even in indeterminable, detention, because no one knows what conditions will signal "the end of * * * hostilities".

Revealingly, however, in its widest reach this statute extends only to "[a] person who was a part of or substantially supported al-Qaeda, the Taliban, or associated forces". So, in order to avoid it, new "terrorists" need simply eschew membership in or "substantial[ ]" support for "al-Qaeda, the Taliban, or associated forces". This means either that: (i) the draftsmen were incredibly naive or sloppy in defining "covered persons" in "the war on terrorism" in such narrow and therefore easily evaded terms—contrary to the party line from the District of Columbia that any and every disgruntled Muslim from Casablanca to the Celebes is a potential jihadi "terrorist"; or (ii) the wordsmiths were sufficiently astute to realize that a more comprehensive definition was unnecessary, because the whole "war on terrorism" is nothing but an intelligence-agency "black operation" in which "al-Qaeda, the Taliban, or associated forces" collectively play the same rôle for "the United States [and] its coalition partners" as did the individual arch-traitor Emmanuel Goldstein for Oceania in George Orwell's 1984; and therefore everyone whom the "security agencies" decide to denounce as a "terrorist" they can simply claim to be involved with "al-Qaeda, the Taliban, or associated forces", in a process alongside of which [3518] An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2012 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes ("National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2012"), Act of 31 December 2011, Pub. L. 112-81, TITLE X—GENERAL PROVISIONS, Subtitle D—Counterterrorism, § 1021, 125 Stat. 1298, 1562.

---

"guilt by association" appears to be a hard science.[3519] In any event, inasmuch as it is impossible to gauge how "the war on terrorism" can ever end, when no central command capable of surrendering on behalf of all "terrorists" through the world could possibly exist, the statute effectively licenses the President and his minions to impose truly indefinite, even perpetual, detention. And inasmuch as the statute nowhere defines what may constitute "a belligerent act" or "support[ ]" for "hostility in aid of enemy forces"—or what the composition of "enemy forces" may be—or who or what might be deemed to constitute "associated forces" of "al-Qaeda" or "the Taliban"—or even what nations may be deemed to constitute the United States' "coalition partners"—therefore no one can know the precise contours of the behaviors for which such detention may be imposed. Even criticism of "the war on terrorism" which contends that some alleged "terrorists" may have legitimate grievances under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" for which armed resistance offers them the only means of redress might be denounced as prohibited "support[ ]" for "hostility in aid of enemy forces"; or the critics might be traduced as themselves being "associated forces" of "al-Qaeda" or "the Taliban" on the evidence of their criticism.[3520] Of course, the intimidating ambiguity of this statute should surprise no one, as "detention under the law of war" falls within "martial law"—and > martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions is * * * in truth and reality no law, but something indulged, rather than allowed as a law: the necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the * * * courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land.[3521]

But on the count of its linguistic imprecision alone it should be treated as a nullity—because any statute couched "in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law".[3522]

[3519] The historical antecedents for this kind of malicious branding are well documented. For the prime example, Stalin relished linking every major domestic "traitor" and "conspirator" whom his secret police arrested to his erstwhile rival and exiled bête noire, Trotsky, even though most of those unfortunates had no more of an actual conspiratorial connection with Trotsky than they did with the Man in the Moon.

[3520] Those waging "the war on terrorism" would not shrink from refusing to recognize the First Amendment as a bar to prosecution of such critics. See Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. ___ (2010).

[3521] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 412. Accord, Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 2 (1866). See post, Chapter 48.

[3522] Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926). At least one judge has recognized as much. See Hedges v. Obama, Case 1:12-cv-00331-KBF (S.D.N.Y.), Opinion and Order (filed 12 September 2012). Whether this decision will be upheld on appeal remains to be seen.

The next section of the statute does not alleviate any of these problems. It provides that:

> (a) CUSTODY PENDING DISPOSITION UNDER LAW OF WAR.—
>
> (1) IN GENERAL.— * * * the Armed Forces of the United States shall hold a person described in paragraph (2) who is captured in the course of hostilities authorized by the Authorization for Use of Military Force * * * in military custody pending disposition under the law of war.
>
> (2) COVERED PERSONS.—The requirement in paragraph (1) shall apply to any person whose detention is authorized under section 1021 who is determined—
>
> (A) to be a member of, or part of, al-Qaeda or an associated force that acts in coordination with or pursuant to the direction of al-Qaeda; and
>
> (b) to have participated in the course of planning or carrying out an attack or attempted attack against the United States or its coalition partners.
>
> * * * * *
>
> (b) APPLICABILITY TO UNITED STATES CITIZENS AND LAWFUL RESIDENT ALIENS.—
>
> (1) UNITED STATES CITIZENS.—The requirement to detain a person in military custody under this section does not extend to citizens of the United States.[3523]

Although "[t]he requirement to detain a person in military custody under this section does not extend to citizens of the United States", "this section" has no effect on the reach of the preceding section. If an individual can be characterized as a "covered person" under both the first section and the second section of the statute, he must be held "in military custody pending disposition under the law of war"—unless he happens to be an American citizen, in which case "[t]he requirement to detain" does not apply. Nonetheless, such an American can still be indefinitely detained "under the law of war without trial" at the discretion of the President under the first section.

The exact implications of the twists and turns in this statute's labyrinthine language aside, its fatal flaw is that the Constitution absolutely prohibits indefinite detention "under the law of war without trial" for "any person who has committed a belligerent act or has directly supported * * * hostilities [against the United States] in aid of * * * enemy forces" if that "person" is an American citizen or otherwise owes allegiance to the United States. By definition, in committing the acts described in the statute, any such "person" would be "levying War against the[United States], or * * * adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort"—which the Constitution defines as "Treason".[3524] The Constitution explicitly requires, moreover, that "[n]o Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court"[3525]—thus mandating that an actual trial in a civilian court shall be held, and no conviction had (let alone punishment inflicted) except upon certain sufficient evidence.

---

[3523] Act of 31 December 2011, § 1022, 125 Stat. at 1563.

The practical substance of these requirements can be gleaned from Hawkins' discussion of three English statutes that obviously were taken as models, and then appropriately modified, for the Constitution's provision:

> *That no Person or Persons * * * shall be indicted, arraigned, condemned, convicted or attainted, for any * * * Treasons * * * unless the same Offender or Offenders, be thereof accused by two lawful Accusers; which said Accusers * * * shall be brought in Person before the Party so accused, and avow and maintain what they have to say against the said Party, to prove him guilty of the Treasons * * * contained in the Bill of Indictment * * * , unless the said Party shall willingly, without violence, confess the same.*
>
>  * * That all Trials * * * to be had, awarded, or made for any Treason, shall be had and used only according to the due Order and Course of the Common Law.*
>
> * * * * *
>
>  * * That * * * no Person or Persons whatsoever shall be indicted, tried or attainted of High Treason, whereby any Corruption of Blood may, or shall be made to any such Offender, or Offenders, or to any Heir or Heirs of any such Offender or Offenders, * * * but by and upon the Oaths and Testimony of two lawful Witnesses, either both of them to the same Overt-Act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act of the same Treason, unless the Party indicted and arraigned, or tried, shall willingly, without Violence, in open Court confess the same, or shall stand mute, or refuse to plead * * * .*[3526]

[3524] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1. See also 18 U.S.C. § 2381.

[3525] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[3526] A Treatise of The Pleas of the Crown, ante note 434, Book II, Chapter XXV, §§ 131, 132, and 134, at 256-257. The Constitution substituted for the relatively lax English allowance of "the Oaths and Testimony of two lawful Witnesses, either both of them to the same Overt-Act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act" the stricter requirement of "the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act". Similarly, it prohibited "*any Corruption of Blood * * * to any Heir or Heirs of any * * * Offender or Offenders*", by mandating that "[n]o Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted". U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2.

The most important part of this historical derivation for the matter at issue is "*That all Trials * * * to be had, awarded, or made for any Treason, shall be had and used* only according to the due Order and Course of the Common Law", in which corpus juris indefinite detention without trial is unknown (except during periods when "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus" has been lawfully "suspended"[3527]). More generally, "[A] CRIME * * * is an act committed * * * in violation of a public law".[3528] Being "an act committed * * * in violation of [the Constitution]" and subject to 'Punishment",[3529] "Treason"is a "CRIME"—indeed, in Anglo-American legal tradition it "is the highest civil crime, which (considered as a member of the community) any man can possibly commit".[3530] The Constitution requires that "[t]he Trial of all Crimes * * * shall be by Jury".[3531] And "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial",[3532] with the "Trial" and the "Jury" to "be had and used only according to the due Order and Course of the Common Law" (or some constitutional civil statute), not "military law". Thus, the only "law of war" applicable in a case in which any American citizen "has [allegedly] committed a belligerent act or has directly supported * * * hostilities [against the United States] in aid of * * * enemy forces" is the constitutional law of "Treason". And the constitutional law of "Treason" excludes indefinite detention without trial, but instead requires an actual, timely trial "in open Court".

If applying the purported power of indefinite detention to individuals against whom there exists some actual, articulable suspicion of "directly support[ing] * * * hostilities in aid of * * * enemy forces" in "the war on terrorism" were not bad enough, the distemper of these times supports the prediction that rogue public officials will soon claim a power of indefinite preventive detention (along the lines of the Japanese-American concentration camps of World War II) to be used against those unfortunate individuals whom some "homeland-security" bureaucrat trained as a "profiler" imagines might engage in "directly support[ing such] * * * hostilities". Then indefinite detention will be employed to cow into silence vocal dissenters from "the war on terrorism", and to remove from society those who refuse to shut up. Then it will be expanded to license military custodians to hold detainees as hostages against the good behavior of their relatives, friends, and associates—for even a first-class police state will find it far more efficient to seize a few individuals, and through threats of maltreatment aimed at them thereby terrorize many others into

---

[3527] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2.

[3528] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 5.

[3529] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cls. 1 and 2.

[3530] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 75.

[3531] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied).

[3532] U.S. Const. amend. VI (emphasis supplied).

compliance with the régime's dictates, than to round up and incarcerate the lot. Indefinite preventive detention may even be used to take into custody entirely innocent relatives and friends of supposed "terrorists" who cannot be apprehended, so as to hold them as hostages against the suspects' good behavior.[3533] Thus will be proven the prescience of Justice Robert Jackson's ominous warning when the Supreme Court upheld the internment of innocent Japanese-Americans, that > once a judicial opinion rationalizes [a governmental act] to show that it conforms to the Constitution, or rather rationalizes the Constitution to show that the Constitution sanctions such an [act], the Court * * * has validated the principle. * * * The principle then lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need. Every repetition imbeds the principle more deeply in our law and thinking and expands it to new purposes. * * * There it has a generative power of its own, and all that it creates will be in its own image.[3534]

As to how extensively the perverse practice of indefinite detention might be applied in the future, the background of Korematsu provides a chilling possibility.[3535] On 19 February 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt purported to authorize the Secretary of War "to prescribe military areas":

> Whereas the successful prosecution of the war requires every possible protection against espionage and against sabotage to national-defense material, national-defense premises, and national-defense utilities * * * :
>
> NOW, THEREFORE, by virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, I hereby authorize and direct the Secretary of War, and the Military Commanders whom he may from time to time designate, whenever he or any designated Commander deems such action necessary or desirable, to prescribe military areas in such places and of such extent as he or the appropriate Military Commander may determine, from which any or all persons may be excluded, and with respect to which, the right of any person to enter, remain in, or leave shall be subject to whatever restriction the Secretary of War or the appropriate Military Commander may impose in his discretion. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to provide for residents of any such area who are excluded therefrom, such [3533] Once again, historical antecedents are well known. See, e.g., R. Conquest, The Great Terror, ante note 3382, at 86, 142.

---

[3534] Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 246 (1944) (dissenting opinion).

[3535] See generally Michi Weglyn, Years of Infamy: The Untold Story of America's Concentration Camps (New York, New York: William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1976).

> transportation, food, shelter, and other accommodations as may be necessary, in the judgment of the Secretary of War or the said Military Commander, and until other arrangements are made, to accomplish the purpose of this order.[3536]

Then, on 18 March 1942, "in order to provide for the removal from designated areas of persons whose removal is necessary in the interests of national security," Roosevelt "established * * * the War Relocation Authority" and "directed"

> * * * [t]he Director of the War Relocation Authority * * * to formulate and effectuate a program for the removal * * * of the persons * * * designated * * * and for their relocation, maintenance, and supervision.
>
> * * * In effectuating such program the Director shall have authority to—
>
> (a) Accomplish all necessary evacuation * * * , provide for the relocation of such persons in appropriate places, provide for their needs in such manner as may be appropriate, and supervise their activities.
>
> (b) Provide, insofar as feasible and desirable, for the employment of such persons at useful work * * * .
>
> (c) Secure the cooperation, assistance, or services of any governmental agency.[3537]

Shortly thereafter, Congress provided

> [t]hat whoever shall enter, remain in, leave or commit any act in any military area or military zone prescribed, under the authority of an Executive order of the President, * * * contrary to the restrictions applicable to any such area or zone * * * shall, if it appears that he knew or should have known of the existence and extent of the restrictions or other and that his act was in violation thereof, be guilty of a misdemeanor and * * * liable to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, for each offense.[3538]

The effect of these dictates was that anyone who found himself within a "military area[ ] * * * from which any or all persons may be excluded, and with respect to which, the right of any person to enter, remain in, or leave" was: (i)

[3536] Executive Order No. 9066 (19 February 1942), 7 Federal Register 1407, 1407 (25 February 1942).

[3537] Executive Order No. 9102 (18 March 1942), 7 Federal Register 2165, 2165 (20 March 1942).

[3538] AN ACT To provide a penalty for violation of restrictions or orders with respect to persons entering, remaining in, leaving, or committing any act in military areas or zones, Act of 21 March 1942, CHAPTER 191, 56 Stat. 173, 173.

"subject to whatever restriction" some civilian bureaucrat or military officer "may impose in his discretion", and (ii) could neither "remain in[nor] leave" that area "contrary to the restrictions"—which included being transported to some other place where such "food, shelter, and other accommodations as may be necessary" would be provided, and where his "activities" would be "supervise[d]", "until other arrangements [we]re made" at some unspecified time in the future. Thus, the designation of a "military area" exposed the individuals within it to seizure, relocation, and indefinite detention.

In 1944, the Supreme Court in Korematsu upheld the order for exclusion, on the ground that "exclusion of those of Japanese origin was deemed necessary because of the presence of an unascertained number of disloyal members of the group, most of whom we have no doubt were loyal to this country", and the "judgment that exclusion of the whole group was * * * a military imperative".[3539] In a companion case, Endo, the Court observed that "[n]either the Act [of 21 March 1942] nor the [Executive O]rders [Numbers 9066 and 9102] use the language of detention" in so many words; but that, because > the Act and the orders are silent on detention does not, of course, mean that any power to detain is lacking. Some such power might indeed be necessary to the successful operation of the evacuation program. * * * [A]ny such implied power must be narrowly confined to the precise purpose of the evacuation program.[3540]

As the particular Japanese-American before the Court was "concededly loyal" and "admittedly loyal", the Court held that "[t]he authority to detain a citizen * * * as protection against espionage or sabotage is exhausted * * * when his loyalty is conceded"—but it also made clear that "[d]etention which furthered the campaign against espionage and sabotage" would be another matter.[3541]

The result of all this was the insinuation into American law of a trio of bastard "principle[s]" that now "lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need": (i) "[M]ilitary imperative" alone supports an order for evacuation of an extensive geographical area, and deportation of its residents, even though a large number of "loyal" individuals may be swept up along with "an unascertained" but presumably far smaller number of "disloyal" ones. (ii) Detention of all those individuals is justified if it is "necessary to the successful operation of the evacuation program"—which, at the minimum, it always will be if only to insure that everyone

---

[3539] Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 218-219 (1944) (Black, J., for the Court).

[3540] Ex parte Endo, 323 U.S. 283, 300, 301-302 (1944) (Douglas, J., for the Court).

[3541] Id. at 302.

within the area has been discovered, removed, and processed in order to determine whether he falls afoul of any applicable law or regulation. And (iii) only the individuals whom the government "concede[s]" and "admit[s]" to be "loyal" (or worthy of some other exculpatory label) are entitled to unconditional release.

No vivid imagination is necessary to foresee how some future rogue President and his lackeys in Congress, using this material as their model, could substitute for "the war [against Germany and Japan]", "the war on terrorism"—for "protection against espionage and * * * "sabotage", "protection against hostile acts of 'terrorists' and 'enemy combatants'"—and for "the Secretary of War", "the Secretary of Homeland Security". Because of the ubiquitous and unpredictable nature of "terrorism", "military areas in such places and of such extent" as the Secretary of Homeland Security and various "Military Commander[s]" "m[ight] determine" could extend throughout the country. "[A]ny or all persons" could include whoever might be suspected of being a "terrorist", an "enemy combatant", or an individual who "has directly supported * * * hostilities in aid of such enemy forces"—which denunciation, in light of the plasticity of those terms, could be stretched to cover almost any outspoken American dissident, such as someone who vocally opposed imperialism and aggression by rogue civilian and military officials of the General Government, or expressed solidarity with, or even just sympathy for, the foreign nations and peoples being attacked, killed, and otherwise oppressed. The "restrictions the Secretary of [Homeland Security] or the appropriate Military Commander m[ight] impose in his discretion" on "the right of any person to * * * remain in[ ] or leave" the newly designated "military areas" could encompass rounding up everyone for exclusion and deportation from those areas (that is, mass "extraordinary rendition"). Such "transportation, food, shelter, and other accommodations as m[ight] be necessary * * * until other arrangements [we]re made" for the persons excluded could involve removal to and indefinite detention in some remote concentration camp labeled a "relocation center". And only those Americans deemed "concededly loyal" to the régime according to some unspecified procedure would be released from custody.

To be sure, thirty-four years after Roosevelt's first Executive Order, President Gerald Ford announced that "all the authority conferred by [that] Executive Order * * * terminated upon * * * the cessation of the hostilities of World War II on December 31, 1946".[3542] Ford acknowledged that the "evacuation" of Americans of Japanese ancestry which "resulted in the uprooting of loyal Americans" was "wrong" and a "national mistake[ ]", "and resolved that this kind of action shall never again be repeated".[3543] But he did not declare unconstitutional or of otherwise questionable legality the underlying order "to prescribe military areas * * * from which any or all persons may be excluded, and with respect to which, the right of any person to enter, remain in, or leave shall be subject to * * * restriction". Moreover, he emphasized that the supposed "national mistake[ ]" consisted only "in the uprooting of loyal Americans". And ultimately the basis for his action was that Roosevelt's Executive Order had "terminated upon * * * the cessation of the hostilities of World War II". So, as far as the Executive Branch is concerned, with respect to allegedly "[dis]loyal Americans" during a time of supposed "war", "[t]he principle" of such "military areas" still "lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need".[3544]

---

[3542] Proclamation No. 4417 (19 February 1976) ("An American Promise"), 41 Federal Register 7741, 7741 (20 February 1976), 90 Stat. 3078, 3079.

[3543] 41 Federal Register at 7741, 90 Stat. at 3078-3079.

Similarly, some forty-six years after Roosevelt's Executive Order, Congress finally > recognize[d] that * * * a grave injustice was done to both citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry by the evacuation, relocation, and internment of civilians during World War II. * * * [T]hese actions were carried out without adequate security reasons and without any acts of espionage or sabotage documented * * * , and were motivated largely by racial prejudice, wartime hysteria, and a failure of public leadership.[3545]

Although all of this is true, it would hardly preclude the resurrection of the perverse "principle" of deportation and indefinite detention of masses of Americans tomorrow. For the General Government's civilian and military "internal-security" bureaucracies could be expected to put forward as "plausible claim[s] of an urgent need" all sorts of general "security reasons" as well as particular charges or predictions of various "acts" of "terrorism", the evidence for which predictably they would withhold as "state secrets" on the grounds of "national security" or "executive privilege". Moreover, precisely because this country would still be awash in induced "wartime hysteria" over "the war on terrorism"—which in its entirety constitutes a monumental "failure of public leadership"—all too many Americans would go along with these charges or predictions, rather than recognizing them as the "failure[s]" they were.

Moreover, those politically myopic American patriots who might naively imagine that, by becoming expatriates, they could escape "extraordinary rendition" and "indefinite detention" at the hands of a fully fascistic *para-*military police state [3544] Korematsu, 323 U.S. at 246 (Jackson, J., dissenting).

---

[3545] An Act To implement recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Citizens, Act of 10 August 1988, Pub. L. 100-383, § 2(a), 102 Stat. 903, 903-904.

in this country should recall that, in coöperation with or under pressure from the United States, during World War II most of the Central and South American Republics (Argentina and Chile being the only notable exceptions) seized their own residents of Japanese ancestry, detained and interned some at home, and removed others to concentration camps in the United States.[3546]

One might hope that the present state of international law would deter rogue public officials from imagining that they could get away with something akin to the deportation and indefinite detention of Japanese-Americans in World War II. For the International Criminal Court defines "[d]eportation or forcible transfer of population" as "forced displacement of the persons concerned by expulsion or other coercive acts from the area in which they are lawfully present, without grounds permitted under international law",[3547] which surely includes any patent violation of the constitution of the state in which the "forced displacement" occurs. "[W]hen committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population", "[d]eportation or forcible transfer of population" constitutes a crime against humanity.[3548] Nonetheless, mounting evidence indicates that the selfsame agency which put Roosevelt's Executive Orders into effect—the United States Army—has learned nothing from that shameful episode, but instead is preparing to be ready to repeat, and even to expand upon, it whenever the orders to do so are cut.[3549]

[3546] See M. Weglyn, Years of Infamy, ante note 3405, at 56-66.

[3547] Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Part 2, Article 7, § 2(d).

[3548] Part 2, Article 7, § 1(d). An "'[a]ttack against any civilian population' means a course of conduct involving the multiple commission of acts * * * against any civilian population, pursuant to or in furtherance of a State or organizational policy to commit such attack". Part 2, Article 7, § 2(a).

[3549] See, e.g., Headquarters, Department of the Army, Field Manual No. 3-39.40, "Internment and Resettlement Operations" (12 February 2010). A comparison of this Field Manual to Roosevelt's Executive Order No. 9066 exposes the former as potentially far more inclusive and dangerous in nature than the latter.

(1) Just as did the Executive Order, the Field Manual applies within the United States proper. Roosevelt "authorize[d] and direct[ed] all Executive Departments, independent establishments and other Federal Agencies * * * to assist * * * in carrying out th[e] Executive Order". 7 Federal Register at 1407. Similarly, the Field Manual identifies "[s]ome government * * * entities that may be involved in [internment and resettlement] missions" as including the Department of Homeland Security, which by definition does not provide "security" in foreign lands. Chapter 1, § 1-40.

(2) Just as did the Executive Order, the Field Manual asserts the authority of the President to employ the Army in domestic "resettlement operations". Roosevelt "authorize[d] and direct[ed] the Secretary of War and * * * Military Commanders to take such * * * steps as * * * may [be] deem[ed] advisable to enforce compliance with the restrictions applicable to each Military area * * * , including the use of Federal troops and other Federal Agencies, with authority to accept assistance from state or local agencies". 7 Federal Register at 1407. Similarly, the Field Manual describes "[r]esettlement operations [as] typically includ[ing] civilian movement and providing relief to human suffering. * * * The authority to approve resettlement * * * operations within U.S. territories is at the Secretary of Defense level and may require * * * a constitutional authorization (for example the President invoking his executive authority under Article 2 of the Constitution)." Chapter 10, § 10-40.

(3) Roosevelt's Executive Order concerned itself only, and specifically, with securing "every possible protection against espionage and against sabotage to national-defense material, national-defense premises, and national-defense utilities" by "prescrib[ing] military areas * * * from which any and all persons may be excluded". 7 Federal Register at 1407. In contrast, the Field Manual states in broad terms that "[i]nternment and

Finally, if (as a result of what could be styled "the logical evolution of the Korematsu effect") the purported powers to subject individuals to "extraordinary rendition" and "indefinite detention" are "expand[ed] to new purposes" by being exercised in tandem under the conditions of strict "state secrecy" typically imposed in cases of alleged "national security", the effect will be what is now internationally condemned as "enforced disappearances".

The International Criminal Court defines "[e]nforced disappearance of persons" as "the arrest, detention, or abduction of persons by, or with the authorization, support or acquiescence of, a State or a political organization, followed by a refusal to acknowledge that deprivation of freedom or to give information on the fate or whereabouts of those persons, with the intention of removing them from the protection of the law for a prolonged period of time".[3550] "[W]hen committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population", "[e]nforced disappearance of persons" is a crime against humanity.[3551] The ambivalent attitude which officials of the General Government have taken with respect to the International Criminal Court over the years does not augur well for the prosecution of Americans for this particular crime at the present time—although, eventually, as the long-suffering subject of such outrages a thoroughly exasperated humanity is sure to take these matters into its own hands.

---

resettlement operations are conducted by military police to shelter, sustain, guard, protect, and account for populations (detainees * * * or dislocated civilians) as a result of military or civil conflict, natural or man-made disaster, or to facilitate criminal prosecution. Internment involves the detainment of a population or group that pose some level of threat to military operations. Resettlement involves the quartering of a population or group for their protection. These operations inherently control the movement and activities of their specific populations for imperative reasons of security, safety, or intelligence gathering." Chapter 1, § 1-3. Thus the Field Manual foresees the Army's involvement in "internment and resettlement operations" arising out of "military or civil conflict", "natural or man-made disaster", and "criminal prosecution" of all varieties. not just "protection against espionage and against sabotage".

(4) Roosevelt's Executive Order blandly "authrorize[d] the Secretary of War to provide for residents of any * * * [military] area who are excluded * * * such transportation, food, shelter, and other accommodations as may be necessary". 7 Federal Register at 1407. Yet the upshot was the incarceration of Japanese-Americans in concentration camps. The Field Manual provides for a "[psychological operations] officer in charge of supporting [internment and relocation] operations". The "[psychological operations] team * * * [i]dentifies malcontents, trained agitators, and political leaders within the facility who may try to organize resistance or create disturbances", "[d]evelops and executes indoctrination programs to reduce or remove antagonistic attitudes", and "[i]dentifies political activists". In addition, "[t]he [psychological operations] officer often may work in close conjunction with the behavioral science consultation team", which "may develop behavioral management plans". Chapter 3, §§ 3-55 through 3-57. Presumably, the Army expects to find "trained agitators", "political leaders", and "political activists" locked up in the camps precisely because such people would top the lists of those to be rounded up in the type of "emergency" that would trigger a mass internment of Americans. Even more ominously, the Army announces its intention to employ "indoctrination programs" to change the internees' political views through the application of "behavioral science". When performed on Americans held as prisoners in North Korean and Red Chinese camps during the Korean "police action", "behavioral management plans" were colloquially known as "brainwashing".

[3550] Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Part 2, Article 7, § 2(i).

[3551] Part 2, Article 7, § 1(i). An "'[a]ttack against any civilian population' means a course of conduct involving the multiple commission of acts * * * against any civilian population, pursuant to or in furtherance of a State or organizational policy to commit such attack". Part 2, Article 7, § 2(a).

Even more specifically, according to the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance,[3552] "enforced disappearance" includes "the arrest, detention, abduction, or any other form of deprivation of liberty by agents of the State or by persons or groups of persons acting with the authorization, support or acquiescence of the State, followed by a refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty or by concealment of the fate or whereabouts of the disappeared person, which place such a person outside the protection of the law".[3553] The Convention provides that "[t]he widespread or systematic practice of enforced disappearance constitutes a crime against humanity"; that "[n]o one shall be subjected to enforced disappearance"; that "[n]o exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification for enforced disappearance"; and that "[n]o order or instruction from any public authority, civilian, military or other, may be invoked to justify an offense of enforced disappearance".[3554] As of this writing, however, officials of the General Government have refused to sign this Convention—no doubt for the sinister reason of self-protection.

So, in the present climate of orchestrated hysteria, paranoia, militant chauvinism, and other induced political lunacy that grips America, one can expect rumors about los desaparecidos soon to become rife.

(7) The purported power to torture Americans. A good official definition of "torture" is "any act, directed against an individual in the offender's custody or physical control, by which severe pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering arising only from or inherent in, or incidental to, lawful sanctions), whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on that individual for such purposes as obtaining from that individual or a third person information or a confession, punishing that individual for an act that individual or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, intimidating or coercing that individual or a third person, for any reason based on discrimination of any kind".[3555] The employment of "enhanced methods of interrogation"—that is, "official torture" by official definition—should hardly be unexpected in a régime which employs "official lies" as central components of its policy. For torture is often used to elicit information the torturers

---

[3552] Published on 20 December 2006, adopted by United Nations General Assembly Resolution 61/177 on 12 January 2007, and entered into force on 23 December 2010.

[3553] Part I, Article 2.

[3554] Part I, Article 5; Article 1, § 1; Article 1, § 2; and Article 6, § 2.

[3555] An Act To carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by establishing a civil action for recovery of damages from an individual who engages in torture or extrajudicial killing ("Torture Victim Protection Act of 1991"), Act of 12 March 1992, Pub. L. 102-256, § 3(b)(1), 106 Stat. 73, 73. See also, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 2340(1) and (2), and 2441(d)(1)(A).

know perfectly well, or at least suspect, is false—but is useful precisely because of its falsity.[3556]

Presumably, "official torture" would be inflicted upon Americans while in custody in order to elicit testimony, or as a punishment. In the first case, it would violate the prohibition against "any person['s] * * * be[ing] compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself", no matter who that "person" might be.[3557] In the second case, it would constitute "cruel and unusual punishment[ ]", whether the victim were an American citizen or an alien.[3558]

These are not merely theoretical legal considerations, either. Although "national-security" bureaucrats in such outfits as the Central Intelligence Agency have devised and employed so-called "enhanced methods of interrogation" for decades,[3559] and court lawyers have cobbled together legalistic rationalizations for these methods,[3560] no explicit statutory permission for "official torture" of any variety seems to exist. And for good reason: Those rogue public officials, civilian or military, who purport to authorize or apologize for, as well as those who actually commit, torture are playing with fire—because, unless its perpetrators can contrive to hide behind the cloak of "official immunity",[3561] torture is a crime, whether committed within or outside of the United States; and under some circumstances is punishable even by death.[3562] This severity cannot be condemned as excessive, either, because "[t]he willingness of the authorities to use * * * vicious and inhuman methods [of torture] against a substantial number of people, without hesitation, qualms, or regrets, indicates the kind of murderousness that prompts cases of genocide".[3563]

And, "when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population", torture constitutes a crime against humanity.[3564]

The utter hypocrisy of rogue officials in the United States is evidenced by the statute which provides that "[a]ny individual who, under actual or apparent

---

[3556] See, e.g., Robert Conquest, Stalin: Breaker of Nations (New York, New York: Viking, 1991), at 318.

[3557] U.S. Const. amend. V.

[3558] U.S. Const. amend. VIII.

[3559] See KUBARK COUNTERINTELLIGENCE INTERROGATION (July 1963), later sanitized in Human Resources Exploitation Training Manual (1983), both declassified in 1997. These two handbooks have been reproduced in their entirety at <http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/NSAEBB/NSAEBB27/01.01.htm> and at <http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/NSAEBB/NSAEBB27/02.01.htm>, respectively.

[3560] See generally <http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/torturing democracy/documents/theme.html/#olc>.

[3561] See post, at 1624-1629.

[3562] See 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242, and 2340 and 2340A.

[3563] N. Naimark, Stalin's Genocides, ante note 3373, at 114 (quotation reproduced here with the express permission of Princeton University Press).

[3564] Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Part 2, Article 7, §§ 1(f) and 2(a).

authority, or color of law, of any foreign nation * * * subjects an individual to torture shall, in a civil action, be liable for damages to that individual".[3565] Why Congress needed the Charter of the United Nations as the goad for this legislation, and then did not expand it to the limits of the problem by mandating a civil action against any individual whosoever inflicts torture "under actual or apparent authority, or color of law" *of any nation or government whatsoever, including the United States and each of the several States, passes understanding—except that the Members of Congress who voted for such legislation may have realized that they themselves are accessories before the fact in the crimes of this sort that domestic rogue public officials commit.

(8) The purported power to try Americans by "military commissions". The most relevant statute in effect as of this writing "establishes procedures governing the use of military commissions to try alien enemy belligerents for violations of the law of war and other offenses triable by military commission".[3566] For that purpose, it sets out the following definitions:

> * * * ALIEN * * * means an individual who is not a citizen of the United States.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * COALITION PARTNER * * * , with respect to hostilities engaged in by the United States, means any State or armed force directly engaged along with the United States in such hostilities or providing direct operational support to the United States in connection with such hostilities.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * PRIVILEGED BELLIGERENT * * * means an individual belonging to one of the eight categories enumerated in Article 4 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War.
>
> * * * UNPRIVILEGED ENEMY BELLIGERENT * * * means an individual (other than a privileges belligerent) who—
>
> (A) has engaged in hostilities against the United States or its coalition partners;

[3565] An Act To carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by establishing a civil action for recovery of damages from an individual who engages in torture or extrajudicial killing ("Torture Victim Protection Act of 1991"), Act of 12 March 1992, Pub. L. 102-256, § 2(a)(1), 106 Stat. 73, 73 (emphasis supplied).

[3566] Originally An Act To authorize trial by military commission for violations of the law of war, and for other purposes ("Military Commissions Act of 2006"), Act of 17 October 2006, Pub. L. 109-366, § 3 [§ 948b(a)], 120 Stat. 2600, 2602; superseded by An Act To authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2010 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes ("National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2010"), Act of 28 October 2009, Pub. L. 111-84, TITLE XVIII—MILITARY COMMISSIONS ("Military Commissions Act of 2009"), § 1802 [§ 948b(a)], 123 Stat. 2190, 2575; now codified at 10 U.S.C. § 948b(a).

> (B) has purposefully and materially supported hostilities against the United States or its coalition partners; or
>
> (C) was a part of al Qaeda at the time of the alleged offense * * * .
>
> * * *
>
> * * * HOSTILITIES * * * means any conflict subject to the laws of war.[3567]

Based on these definitions, the statute directs that "[a]ny alien unprivileged enemy belligerent is subject to trial by military commission".[3568]

Even as applied solely to aliens in its present form, this statute raises serious constitutional questions. For many of the "offenses * * * triable by a military commission" are quite plainly "capital, or otherwise infamous crimes" for which "[n]o person"—whether citizen or alien—"shall be held to answer * * * , unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia when in actual service in time of War or public danger".[3569] In some extraordinary circumstances, an alien's "case[could] aris[e] in the land or naval forces [of the United States], or in the Militia [of the several States]". But any alien enlisted in "the land or naval forces" or enrolled in "the Militia" would surely upon his engagement have taken an oath or affirmation of allegiance to the United States, or some State, or both—so if thereafter he committed "hostilities" against the United States, he could and should be prosecuted for "Treason". And under those circumstances or otherwise, any prosecution that resulted from "a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury" would necessarily be one in which "the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury" in a civilian court, not by a "military commission".[3570]

Even more obviously, if this statute did apply to American citizens, it would be unconstitutional unless the term "HOSTILITIES" were construed to exclude those actions that fell within the definition of "Treason". For, (i) the term "HOSTILITIES * * * means any conflict subject to the laws of war"; (ii) "any conflict" that comes within the constitutional definition of "Treason" cannot be "subject to the laws of war", because the Constitution prescribes "Trial * * * by Jury" "in open Court" under "[t]he judicial Power of the United States", not trial by "military commission";[3571] therefore, (iii) "HOSTILITIES" should be narrowly construed to [3567] Act of 28 October 2009, § 1802 [§ 948a], 123 Stat. at 1274-1275; now codified at 10 U.S.C. § 948a.

---

[3568] Act of 28 October 2009, § 1802 [§ 948c], 123 Stat. at 2576; now codified at 10 U.S.C. § 948c.

[3569] Compare U.S. Const. amend. V with Act of 28 October 2009, § 1802 [§ 950t], 123 Stat. at 2607-2612; now codified at 10 U.S.C. § 950t.

[3570] U.S. Const. amend. VI. Accord, art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3571] See ante, at 1589-1591.

exclude all actions by an American citizen that could arguably be characterized as "Treason".[3572] This is not a merely theoretical concern, either, for two reasons.

First, the Supreme Court has given its general approval for "subject[ing American citizens] to the laws of war" in such situations—but has refused to apply in such situations the specific (indeed, unique) "law of war" the Constitution defines in relation to "Treason".[3573] To be sure, how any other case of this nature might be decided hereafter is open to conjecture, because: (i) the opinions supporting the Court's most recent judgment are intellectually indefensible; (ii) the composition of the Court has changed since 2004; and (iii) as every student of "judicial review" is aware, the twists and turns of "the living Constitution" depend, not upon the words of the Constitution, objectively defined, but instead upon the subjective attitudes of the jurists who happen to be living and serving on the Bench when the Court hands down its next oracular pronouncement. Nonetheless, the precedent now "lies about like a loaded weapon ready for the hand of any authority that can bring forward a plausible claim of an urgent need".[3574]

Second, as of this writing, hysterical "claim[s] of an urgent need" are being brought forth, with the introduction of bills that call for "a national of the United States whether by birth or naturalization" to "lose his nationality by voluntarily * * * with the intention of relinquishing United States nationality"

> (A) providing material support or resources to a foreign terrorist organization;
>
> (B) engaging in, or purposefully and materially supporting, hostilities against the United States; or
>
> (C) engaging in, or purposefully and materially supporting, hostilities against any country or armed force that is—
>
> (i) directly engaged along with the United States in hostilities engaged in by the United States; or
>
> (ii) providing direct operational support to the United States in hostilities engaged in by the United States[.][3575]

[3572] Compare U.S. Const. art. III, § 1; § 2, cls. 1 and 3; and § 3, cl. 1, with, e.g., National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U.S. 1, 30 (1937); Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S. 705, 710-711 (1962); and United States v. Thirty-seven (37) Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 369 (1971).

[3573] See Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507 (2004) (O'Connor, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

[3574] Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 246 (1944) (Jackson, J., dissenting).

[3575] Compare 8 U.S.C. § 1481(a) with A BILL To add joining a foreign terrorist organization or engaging in or supporting hostilities against the United States or its allies to the list of acts for which United States nationals would lose their nationality ("Terrorist Expatriation Act"), Senate Bill No. 1698, 111th Congress, 2d Session (Mr. LIEBERMAN [Connecticut]). See also A BILL To add engaging in or supporting hostilities against the United States to the list of acts for which United States nationals would lose their nationality ("Enemy Expatriation Act"), House of Representatives Bill No. 3166, 112th Congress, 1st Session (Mr. DENT [Pennsylvania]).

The obvious purpose of such bills is to denounce American citizens as "terrorists" or "enemies", so that they can be stripped of their nationality and then be subjected to "military commissions" under "the law of war". Apparently, rogue Members of Congress imagine that, although most sensible Americans would resist having their fellow citizens hauled before "military commissions", they might be sufficient callous not to object to such treatment of artificially produced aliens—as well as sufficiently stupid not to realize that bills of this type expose potentially any and every American citizen to a condition worse than that of genuine aliens, because an American stripped of his nationality could count on no guarantee that any other country would accept him as a citizen, and therefore could be reduced to a veritable "man without a country" without any of the protections that any country's laws might otherwise afford him.

Provisions such as these trip and fall, however, over the constitutional fact that the behavior they condemn amounts to "Treason", and over the constitutional requirements that "Treason" must be prosecuted in a civilian court under exacting standards of evidence. Those requirements cannot be evaded—as is apparently the intent of such bills' authors—by the simpleminded expedient of stripping of their citizenship the very individuals who are entitled to the Constitution's protection, on the ground that they have engaged in the very behavior the Constitution identifies as "Treason", and as a consequence of that loss of nationality may be subjected to "military commissions" that in effect try "Treason" according to procedures constitutionally inapplicable to "Treason". That an individual has allegedly committed "Treason" cannot form the basis for a denial to him of the constitutional protections applicable to those who allegedly commit "Treason".

(9) The purported power to employ "weapons of mass destruction" against Americans. Over the last two decades or so, in various countries throughout the world America's Armed Forces have expended huge amounts of munitions composed of "depleted uranium" in combat operations. Presumably, in order to suppress any serious resistance by armed Americans against domestic oppression, rogue units of the Armed Forces in support of *para-*military police (and perhaps those police themselves) would employ such munitions—notwithstanding that such munitions have been internationally condemned as "weapons of mass destruction".[3576]

Being both radioactive and a toxic heavy metal, when dispersed in fine particles throughout the environment as the result of its use in pyrophoric ammunition "depleted uranium" poses long-lasting and serious biological hazards to human beings.[3577] That weapons containing this poisonous material have been employed against anyone anywhere is unconscionable. That rogue public officials might cause them to be fired by Americans at Americans in America—leaving the territory in which they are expended contaminated for no one can predict how long—shows that the domestic situation in this country is rapidly deteriorating from a mere "design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism" to a capability and willingness to destroy them utterly.

---

[3576] *See, e.g.,*European Parliament resolution on non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction: A role for the European Parliament, No. 2005/2139(INI), Adopted 17 November 2005, § 84: "[The European Parliament r]eiterates its call for a moratorium—with a view to the introduction of a total ban—on the use of so-called 'depleted uranium munitions.'"

(10) The purported power to assassinate Americans. Of all of the indicia that rogue public officials are waging a "war of terrorism" against WE THE PEOPLE, "official assassinations" of American citizens are obviously the most blatant, because depriving an individual of his life moots all of his rights to liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness in general. "Official assassinations" of foreigners in foreign countries have long been a thinly disguised—and more than merely arguably illegal—tool of rogue foreign policy.[3578] But "official assassinations" of Americans, anywhere and for any reason, have traditionally been held (at least for public consumption) to be off limits. Now the situation has changed. As of this writing, the basic assertion from the Executive Branch of the General Government is that the President, in his capacity as "Commander in Chief" during "the war on terrorism", enjoys the inherent authority, by himself or through his subordinates, to label certain Americans "terrorists" and "enemy combatants", and on that basis to order operatives of the General Government to assassinate them wherever they may be found (thus brutally negating the children's nursery rhyme, that "sticks and stones can break my bones, but names can never hurt me").

Supposedly, the exercise of this purported power to deploy "death squads" (to employ the term that became fashionable when the practice was confined, appropriately, to various banana republics): (i) does not depend upon any prior judicial determination that an individual targeted for execution is guilty, or even suspected, of having actually committed any crime punishable by death; (ii) is not confined solely to individuals who cannot be apprehended and made to stand trial in some court; and (iii) is not subject to any sort of judicial intervention or review before or after the execution takes place. Indeed, because many of the supposed facts which might rationalize characterizing an individual as a putative "terrorist" certainly would be claimed to be "state secrets", meaningful judicial review either ex ante or ex post would routinely be impossible as a matter of practice. Thus, "official assassinations" are forms of "extrajudicial killing": "a deliberated killing not authorized by a previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples".[3579]

---

[3577] See, e.g., Anne Gut & Bruno Vitale, Depleted Uranium: Deadly, Dangerous and Indiscriminate (Nottingham, England: Spokesman, 2003).

[3578] Compare, e.g., J. Douglass, JFK and the Unspeakable, ante note 3407, at 34-35, 60, 143-145, 211-212, 251-252, 375-377 (and authorities there cited), with 18 U.S.C. § 1119.

As of this writing, the Executive Branch has admitted to plotting and perpetrating "official assassinations" of Americans only in foreign countries. But inasmuch as the Constitution does not limit the exercise of the powers of the "Commander in Chief" (whatever they may be) to foreign venues only, no reason can be found why the supposed authority to execute certain Americans outside of any judicial process, if it does exist at all, cannot be exercised within the United States proper—even on the lawn of the White House itself. After all, if an American "terrorist" who might be apprehended in (say) Afghanistan may nonetheless be assassinated there, simply because some bureaucrat in the Executive Branch considers the latter course of action more efficient than the former, then why should not an American "terrorist" operating within the United States also simply be executed out of hand, for the same eminently practical reason? So, in its fullest statement, the contention is that the President enjoys unbridled discretion—acting either by his own hand or by the hands of his minions—to assassinate, anywhere in the world and presumably by whatever means may prove effective, any American whom someone in the Executive Branch, whose identity may never be disclosed, has characterized as a "terrorist" or an "enemy combatant" by some procedure and on the basis of some purported evidence that in their most important particulars may forever remain secret. And according to the apologists for "official assassinations", howsoever the President proceeds constitutes "due process of law".

The unconstitutionality of any such license for official "death squads" should be patent, however. Where "due process of law" is concerned, the fundamental rule of construction is that "[w]e must examine the Constitution itself to see whether th[e] process [at issue] be in conflict with any of its provisions".[3580] Most obviously, the Fifth Amendment provides that "[n]o person shall * * * be deprived of life * * * without due process of law"—and with respect to "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime" directs that "[n]o person shall be held to answer * * * , unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger".[3581] Specifically in the case of "a capital * * * crime", the Amendment imposes these requirements for the best of reasons—namely, because by definition

---

[3579] An Act To carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by establishing a civil action for recovery of damages from an individual who engages in torture or extrajudicial killing ("Torture Victim Protection Act of 1991"), Act of 12 March 1992, Pub. L. 102-256, § 3(a), 106 Stat. 73, 73.

[3580] Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land and Improvement Company, 59 U.S. (18 Howard) 272, 277 (1856).

[3581] Emphases supplied.

the usual punishment for "a capital crime" is death.[3582] The theory of "official assassinations" is not limited, and as of this writing has not been publicly asserted applicable, however, to "cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia". In all other "cases"—and surely in "cases" arising in the course of "the war on terrorism", which presumably would almost always involve alleged "capital, or otherwise infamous crime[s]"—the requirement of "a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury" would necessarily make the "person" targeted for an "official assassination", whoever and whatever he was, the subject of a normal "criminal prosecution[ ]" in which "the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy trial, by an impartial jury"[3583]—not lose all of his rights as the consequence of his own homicide at the hands of an official "death squad" before a jury can even be impaneled. A "person" suspected of having committed "a capital, or otherwise infamous crime" related to "terrorism", and who as the result of such suspicion is subjected to an "official assassination", would self-evidently be "held to answer" in fact for his alleged "crime" in the strictest fashion possible. But he would not be given the benefit in law of a prior "presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury"—let alone a "Trial * * * by Jury".[3584] Therefore, under the terms of the Fifth Amendment alone, such a "person" would "be deprived of life * * * without due process of law".[3585]

Perhaps supererogatory in this regard, the Fourth Amendment provides that "[t]he right of the people"—that is, of all Americans—"to be secure in their persons * * * against unreasonable * * * seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing * * * the persons * * * to be seized". If no "persons" may even be "seized" without judicial "Warrants * * * upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation", how may any "persons" be simply killed out of hand, with no prior judicial involvement at all? Is homicide not the most extreme form of "seizure[ ]" of a "person[ ]" imaginable? Similarly, one could also ask whether an "official homicide" of some individual, with no prior judicial determination of guilt, does not constitute "cruel and unusual punishment", in violation of the Eighth Amendment. For death is certainly a "punishment". And to impose it on the basis of mere suspicion should make that "punishment" both "cruel and unusual" as a matter of law, in light of the many times the Constitution mandates some sort of judicial process before any supposed "Crime" may be investigated, charged, or tried,

---

[3582] See Black's Law Dictionary, ante note 368, at 263.

[3583] U.S. Const. amend. VI. Accord, U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3.

[3584] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3 and amend. VI.

[3585] One must marvel that anyone of sound mind could possibly contest this conclusion, when every student of introductory constitutional law knows that, before welfare benefits may be terminated, or wages garnished, or consumer goods replevied, some sufficient evidentiary showing, ultimately subject to meaningful judicial review, must be had. See Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254 (1970); Sniadach v. Family Finance Corporation, 395 U.S. 337 (1969); and Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67 (1972). Are welfare benefits, wages, and consumer goods of greater consequence than life itself?

let alone actually punished.[3586] Or, one might ask, if "[n]either slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States", how can a régime of "official assassinations" without trials, let alone convictions, be allowed to "exist within the United States"?[3587] Those condemned to "slavery [ ]or involuntary servitude", after all, at least remain alive. But stressing these additional points would merely bring a surfeit of owls to Athens.

The exponents of "official assassinations" do, of course, contend that the President's constitutional status as "Commander in Chief" somehow immunizes him from or overrides these and apparently all other constitutional prohibitions, limitations, and other requirements. That, however, is exceptionally thin hogwash.

First, the question of whether the President, as "Commander in Chief" engaged in fighting a supposed "war on terrorism", may authorize "death squads" to execute alleged American "terrorists" and "enemy combatants" cannot be avoided on the ground that it raises what jurists call a "political question". As everyone knows, the doctrine of "political questions" derives from Chief Justice John Marshall's opinion in Marbury v. Madison, in which he explained that

> [t]he province of the [Supreme C]ourt is, solely, to decide on the rights of individuals, not to enquire how the executive, or executive officers, perform duties in which they have a discretion. Questions in their nature political, or which are, by the constitution and laws, submitted to the executive can never be made in this court.[3588]

Plainly, then, if the Constitution withholds some power from the President, he cannot possibly assert any claim under color of such a nonexistent power to "perform duties in which [he has] a discretion". The President enjoys no "discretion"—legal or political, let alone moral—to violate the Constitution. Therefore, his disputed actions cannot raise a "political question".

Second, "official assassinations" cannot be condoned on the basis of the doctrine of "separation of powers", unless an authority to deploy "death squads" exclusive to the President can be unearthed within "[t]he executive Power".[3589] True enough, the Constitution does designate the President as "Commander in Chief". Yet, as the delegation of this status makes pellucid, the President is not a "Commander in Chief" for any and all conceivable purposes, ruling over every one and every thing imaginable within the United States in the totalitarian manner of [3588] 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 170 (1803).

---

[3586] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 3; amends. IV, V, and VI.

[3587] See U.S. Const. amend XIII, § 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3589] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 1.

a German Führer or an Italian Duce. Neither is he a "Commander in Chief" specifically with respect to "death squads", in the style of a Caudillo of some Central American banana republic. Nor as "Commander in Chief" is he invested with the unlimited powers of a "Decider" (as one past President grandiloquently styled himself); for he can decide to do only what the Constitution permits him to do. Rather, the powers of the President as "Commander in Chief" are narrowly defined, and therefore limited: to wit, "[t]he President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States".[3590] The President is "Commander in Chief" of nothing else, and for no other purposes.

"[T]he Army and Navy of the United States" are entirely the constructs of Congress, which alone exercises the powers "[t]o raise and support Armies" and "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy".[3591] Absent Congressional legislation, no "Army and Navy of the United States" exist as to which the President can function as "Commander in Chief". And, most of time, the States on their own can create no armies or navies upon which the United States could draw, and which the President might become able to command, because "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace".[3592] Furthermore, "the Army and Navy of the United States" that do exist are always subject to—indeed, are uniquely defined in their organization and operations by—the power of Congress "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces".[3593] The President can claim to exercise no control over "the Army and Navy of the United States" that ventures even a solitary Ångstrom Unit beyond the bounds of these "Rules", because "the Army and Navy of the United States" do not exist on the far side of those boundaries. Similarly for "the Militia of the several States"—except that the President's authority is even narrower with respect to them, because he enjoys the status of "Commander in Chief" only when the Militia are "called into the actual Service of the United States".[3594] And that can be for three purposes alone: namely, "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3595] Furthermore, even then the President cannot exercise untrammeled command, but must abide by whatever rules Congress has "provide[d] * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States".[3596] When the Militia have not been "called into the [3590] Article II, Section 2, Clause 1 (emphasis supplied).

---

[3591] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13.

[3592] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3593] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14.

[3594] See ante, at 871-880.

[3595] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3596] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

actual Service of the United States", they remain the States' institutions, governed by the States' "Officers", and are not subject to the orders of the President at all.[3597] So, if as "Commander in Chief" the President dares to claim any license to despatch "death squads" to perform "official assassinations", he must demonstrate how that license derives from some prior exercise of, for the most likely examples, Congress's powers "[t]o declare War", to enact "the Laws of the Union", "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces", or "[t]o provide * * * for governing * * * Part of the[Militia]". Nowhere within the Statutes at Large, however, does any legislation purport explicitly to authorize anyone to order or to commit "official assassinations" of American citizens, even if some public official believes them to be "terrorists" or "enemy combatants".

And suppose such legislation did exist. Would it constitute "due process of law"? Hardly. For, once again, "[w]e must examine the Constitution itself to see whether th[e] process [at issue] be in conflict with any of its provisions".[3598] And the particular "process of law" inevitably involved in the deployment of official "death squads" the Constitution explicitly prohibits. A purported "law", "rule", or "regulation" of Congress, condemning to death a particular individual or the members of a particular group, would be a "Bill of Attainder". As Joseph Story explained, > [b]ills of attainder, as they are technically called, are such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. * * * In such cases, the legislature assumes judicial magistracy, pronouncing upon the guilt of the party without any of the common forms and guards of trial, and satisfying itself with proofs, when such proofs are within its reach, whether they are conformable to the laws of evidence or not. In short, in all such cases, the legislature exercises * * * what may be properly deemed an irresponsible despotic discretion, being governed solely by what it deems political necessity or expediency, and too often under the influence of unreasonable fears or unfounded suspicions. * * * The punishment has often been inflicted without calling upon the party accused to answer, or without even the formality of proof; and sometimes, because the law, in its ordinary course of proceedings, would acquit the offender. The injustice and iniquity of such acts, in general, constitute an irresistible argument against the existence of the power. In a free government it would be intolerable; and in the hands of a reigning faction, it might be, and probably would be, abused to the ruin and death of the most virtuous citizens. Bills of this sort have been most usually passed in England in > times of rebellion, or of gross subserviency to the crown, or of violent political excitements; periods, in which all nations are most liable (as well the free as the enslaved) to forget their duties, and to trample upon the rights and liberties of others.[3599]

---

[3597] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3598] Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land and Improvement Company, 59 U.S. (18 Howard) 272, 277 (1856).

For these reasons, the Constitution explicitly, unequivocally, and without exception outlaws all "Bills of Attainder", both for Congress—"[n]o Bill of Attainder * * * shall be passed"; and for the States—"[n]o State shall * * * pass any Bill of Attainder".[3600] "If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution, bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties."[3601]

These prohibitions condemn all statutes, rules, regulations, or directives, "no matter what their form, that apply either to named individuals or to easily ascertained members of a group in such a way as to inflict punishment on them without a judicial trial".[3602] So Congress constitutionally cannot, in the guise of "declar[ing] War", or enacting "Laws", or promulgating rules or regulations for the governance of the Army, the Navy, or the Militia, authorize an "official assassination" of anyone, whether directly by name or indirectly by reference to membership in some specific group. And if Congress cannot constitutionally promulgate either general declarations, particular laws, or specific rules or regulations for the governance of the Army, the Navy, or the Militia that amount to "Bill[s] of Attainder", then the President cannot constitutionally purport to act under color of or to enforce any such declarations, laws, rules, or regulations perforce of his status as "Commander in Chief".

Neither can Congress delegate a nonexistent power to put out "Bill[s] of Attainder" to the President, for him to employ at his own discretion as the rationalization for "official assassinations". For example, Congress has purported to authorize the President "to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons he determines planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored such organizations or persons, in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States by such nations, organizations or persons".[3603] Presumably, a rogue President could claim that "all necessary and appropriate force against * * * persons" includes their assassinations. Now "[a] bill of attainder is a [3599] Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1344, at 216-217 (footnotes omitted).

---

[3600] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3 and § 10, cl. 1 (emphases supplied).

[3601] Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 277, 323 (1867).

[3602] United States v. Lovett, 328 U.S. 303, 315 (1946).

[3603] Joint Resolution To authorize the use of United States Armed Forces against those responsible for the recent attacks launched against the United States ("Authorization for Use of Military Force"), S.J. Resolution 23, 18 September 2001, Pub. L. 107-40, § 2(a), 115 Stat. 224, 224.

legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial."[3604] That a group described in general terms, rather than any specifically named individual, is the target is immaterial. "It was not uncommon for English acts of attainder to inflict their deprivations upon relatively large groups of people, sometimes by description, rather than name"—indeed, "members of a political group thought to present a threat to the national security * * * were the targets of the overwhelming majority of English and early American bills of attainder".[3605] In addition, a "Bill of Attainder" need not punish absolutely, but may impose death or some other penalty only conditionally.[3606] So, as possibly construed by a rogue President, this Joint Resolution amounts to "a legislative act which [licenses the President to] inflict[ ] punishment"—up to and including death, and "without a judicial trial"—on those "persons he determines", by whatever means he alone may determine to be determinative, to comprise a certain group. Thus, by this misreading, the Joint Resolution amounts to a "Bill of Attainder". By itself, this provides a necessary and sufficient reason to construe the Joint Resolution as not including "official assassinations" within the term "appropriate force".[3607] In America's present disordered political climate, however, little likelihood exists that rogue officials of the General Government will apply such a limiting construction.

It is possible to misread the Joint Resolution as licensing the killing of only those particular "persons" who have supposedly committed certain "terrorist attacks" in the past—in which case it would be a "Bill of Attainder" which aimed at retribution for those acts. It is also possible (actually, far easier) to misread the Joint Resolution as intended to license the President "to use all necessary and appropriate force", including homicide, against any and all "persons" who may attempt to commit "terrorist attacks" in the future—in which case it would be a "Bill of Attainder" which aimed squarely at deterrence of such attacks. Either purpose, though, would constitute "punishment without a judicial trial". For where "Bill[s] of Attainder" are concerned,

> [i]t would be archaic to limit the definition of "punishment" to "retribution." Punishment serves several purposes: retributive, rehabilitative, deterrent—and preventive. * * * A number of English bills of attainder were enacted for preventive purposes—that is, the legislature made a judgment, undoubtedly based largely on past acts and associations

---

[3604] Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 277, 323 (1867).

[3605] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 461, 453 (1965) (footnote omitted). Accord, Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 277, 323-324 (1867).

[3606] See Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 277, 324-325 (1867).

[3607] See, e.g., National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U.S. 1, 30 (1937); Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S. 705, 710-711 (1962); and United States v. Thirty-seven (37) Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 369 (1971).

> * * * , that a given person or group was likely to cause trouble (usually, overthrow the government), and therefore inflicted deprivations upon that person or group in order to keep it from bringing about the feared event.[3608]

Neither may the States license their Militia to enforce "Bill[s] of Attainder", or through their "Officers" command their Militia to obey a rogue President's illegal order to do so. And inasmuch as the substance of the President's authority as "Commander in Chief" depends in the first instance upon Congressional legislation, and ultimately upon the existence of the Militia as permanent State institutions, he cannot possibly even claim, let alone put into practice, such an imaginary power by himself alone.

Moreover, the President cannot invoke any supposed authority as "Commander in Chief" to require or to license various civilian agencies of the General Government—such as the Department of Homeland Security and the Central Intelligence Agency—to perform "official assassinations", because, by constitutional definition, the President is in no conceivable way a "Commander in Chief" with respect to those agencies. Congress alone determines what the civilian agencies it creates are permitted to do—except that even Congress cannot constitutionally subordinate them to the President as "Commander in Chief", because the Constitution itself infuses that status into the Presidency only with respect to the Army, the Navy, and the Militia. And Congress cannot constitutionally enact laws, rules, or regulations for its civilian agencies that amount to, or require or allow them to promulgate or execute, "Bill[s] of Attainder". So, inasmuch as agencies such as the DHS and the CIA constitutionally can have nothing whatsoever to do with "Bills of Attainder" in either origin or operation, neither can the President in the course of his administration of them.

Finally, the President labors under an explicit constitutional duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3609] Other than the Declaration of Independence, the most important of "the[se] Laws" is the Constitution itself. The Constitution prohibits any and every "Bill of Attainder". Therefore, the President can neither take nor authorize any action that purports to create, enforce, or countenance in any way a "Bill of Attainder". Rather, he must bend every effort to stop anything akin to a "Bill of Attainder" from being considered, prepared, enacted, promulgated, or put into operation. In particular, he must prevent everyone in the Army, the Navy, and the Militia, and in civilian "homeland-security" agencies such as the DHS, intelligence agencies such as the CIA, law-enforcement agencies such as the FBI, and all other agencies in the Executive [3608] United States v. Brown, 381 U.S. 437, 458-459 (1965) (footnotes omitted).

---

[3609] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

Branch from even proposing, let alone actually effectuating, plans for "official assassinations". In addition, the President must prevent all of the States' civilian officials from involving themselves in "official assassinations", and must vigorously pursue their punishment if such involvement cannot be prevented. For the highest "Law[ ]" (after the Declaration of Independence) which he "shall take Care * * * be faithfully executed" is the Constitution; and the Constitution mandates both that "[n]o State shall * * * pass any Bill of Attainder" and that "[n]o State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life * * * , without due process of law".[3610] Plainly, in the face of the Constitution's prohibition, no State can "deprive any person of life * * * with[ ] due process of law" through a "Bill of Attainder". Every American's freedom from "Bill[s] of Attainder", whether they emanate from any one of States or from the United States, is among "the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States". And if the President fails, neglects, or refuses to perform his constitutional duty to suppress every manifestation of "Bill[s] of Attainder" at every level of the federal system, he should be impeached, convicted, and removed from office for a "high Crime[ ]" sine die, and then prosecuted to the full extent of the law.[3611]

Finally, the President cannot claim any authority to issue the executive equivalent of "Bill[s] of Attainder"—such as "proscription lists"—under color of "[t]he executive Power",[3612] for two reasons: (i) Nowhere do any of the President's [3610] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1 and amend. XIV, § 1.

---

[3611] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 4 and art. I, § 3, cl. 7. The full extent of the law could be serious indeed. For example, a President dispatching "death squads" would be engaged in "act[s] or threat[s] involving murder", and therefore in "racketeering activity". See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1). Doubtlessly, he would be engaged in "at least two acts of [such] racketeering activity", which would constitute a "pattern of racketeering activity". See 18 U.S.C. § 1961(5). "[T[he Office of President" is "a legal entity", and therefore an "enterprise". Compare U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cls. 4 and 7 with 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). The activities of "the Office of President" affect interstate and foreign commerce in numerous ways. It is "unlawful for any person employed by or associated with an enterprise * * * the activities of which affect[ ] interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity". 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). And anyone adjudicated guilty of such participation "shall be * * * fined or imprisoned not more than 20 years (or for life if the violation is based on a racketeering activity for which the maximum penalty includes life imprisonment)". 18 U.S.C. § 1963(a). For another example, a President who conspired with others in "death squads" "to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in any State * * * in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States"—such as that person's right to life itself—"shall be fined * * * or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and if death results from the acts committed * * * or if such acts include * * * an attempt to kill, * * * shall be fined * * * or imprisoned for any term of years or for life, or both, or may be sentenced to death". 18 U.S.C. § 241. For yet another example, a President who, "under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subject[ed] any person in any State * * * to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution or law of the United States", "and if bodily injury results from the acts committed * * * or if such acts include the use, attempted use, or threatened use of a dangerous weapon, explosives, or fire, shall be fined * * * or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; and if death results from the acts committed * * * or if such acts include * * * an attempt to kill, shall be fined * * * or imprisoned for any term of years or for life, or both, or may be sentenced to death". 18 U.S.C. § 242.

[3612] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 1.

powers mention attainders, proscriptions, or anything of like nature. And (ii) a "Bill of Attainder" in particular is a legislative, not an executive action, and therefore if the Constitution licensed it at all would be found among the powers of Congress, in which body "[a]ll legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested".[3613] This, of course, is the reason why a prohibition of "Bill[s] of Attainder" is found appended specifically to the powers of Congress.[3614]

No appeal to "the law of war"—the mantra chanted by rogue spokesmen for the Executive Branch as their ultimate excuse for every affront to the Constitution in the course of "the war on terrorism"—can overcome these objections where "official assassinations" of Americans are involved. First, even if "the law of war" these people invoke had something to do with the exercise of Congress's power "[t]o declare War",[3615] Congress has not "declare[d] War" on any country since World War II, and could not "declare War" on "terrorism" or "terrorists" in general. Second, even if Congress does "declare War" on some constitutionally permissible basis, "the war power does not remove constitutional limitations safeguarding essential liberties".[3616] So, for one general example, "the exercise of the war power is * * * subject to the Fifth Amendment"[3617]—which, as explained immediately above, bans extra-judicial "official assassinations". Third, also as explained above, any American who, owing allegiance to the United States, "lev[ies] War against them, or * * * adher[es] to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort" is guilty of "Treason", by constitutional definition—but "[n]o Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court".[3618] Inasmuch as "Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted",[3619] that "Punishment" could be death.[3620] But any "Punishment" may be inflicted only after guilt has been established through a proceeding "in open Court", with one or both of the constitutional standards of evidence fully satisfied. Plainly, then, "[n]o Person" who is merely suspected of "levying War against the[United States], or * * * adhering to their Enemies" may simply be killed on the say-so of some official

---

[3613] U.S. Const. art. I, § 1.

[3614] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3.

[3615] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[3616] Home Building & Loan Association v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 426 (1934).

[3617] Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Company, 251 U.S. 146, 155 (1919).

[3618] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3619] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2.

[3620] Which Congress has so provided. 18 U.S.C. § 2381: "Whoever, owing allegiance to the United States, levies war against them or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason and shall suffer death, or shall be imprisoned not less than five years and fined * * * not less than $10,000; and shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States."

of the Executive Branch, whether civilian or military. That is, the only "law of war" which can apply to Americans in such situations is the law of "Treason" explicitly fixed in the Constitution; and that law absolutely excludes summary executions.

So much the Constitution commands on its face, in explicit language unmistakable to anyone who reads it intelligently and in good faith. Apparently, though, next to no one in high office in the United States or the several States today is able or willing to do so—or "death squads" would not be in the works in the Executive Branch of the General Government, with no official outrage and demands for interposition arising from the States. What should give conscientious Americans particular pause, moreover, is how much worse the present situation is than the one which confronted the Founding Fathers at the time of the Declaration of Independence. For although the Declaration rightly indicted King George III as guilty of "usurpations" and intent upon "the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States", and mercilessly castigated him for "waging War against us", it never once accused him of employing "death squads" to assassinate Americans. An usurper and tyrant "unfit to be the ruler of a free people" he may have been—a murderous thug, no.

Perhaps an even starker lesson from more recent history is that, unlike rogue officials at the highest level of the General Government today, no less a mass murderer than Josef Stalin took care never to claim in public a legal "power", "right", or "privilege" to assassinate Soviet citizens out of hand simply because he considered them "enemies". Millions of innocent people were killed, one way or another, on his orders or with his tacit approval after secret-police troikas and other kangaroo tribunals had adjudged them guilty of some trumped-up charge, or in many cases without trials of any sort. But during his long reign of terror Stalin never took personal credit in public for, or even admitted his own complicity in, a single outright assassination—including the murder of Lev Trotsky, and notwithstanding that Trotsky had been repetitively and redundantly inculpated in absentia as a traitor in the course of numerous well-publicized "show trials" involving the most infamous of "the Old Bolsheviks".[3621] Indeed, the Stalinist party line always denied any participation even by the Soviet secret police in Trotsky's death.[3622]

In contrast, from 1934 onwards, Adolf Hitler openly asserted his supposed personal authority as Führer to order executions without trials, licensing himself to preëmpt and overrule the German courts. The day after personally participating in the seizure and ordering the execution of various allegedly disloyal members of the Sturmabteilung ("SA", colloquially known as "the Storm Troopers" or "Brownshirts")

[3621] On Trotsky as la bête noire of Stalin's "show trials", see generally R. Conquest, The Great Terror, ante note 3382, passim. On Stalin's relentless and ultimately successful pursuit of Trotsky, see Robert Payne, The Life and Death of Trotsky (New York, New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1977), Part Eight.

[3622] See, e.g., R. Conquest, The Great Terror, ante note 3382, at 449.

on 30 June through 2 July 1934 (the so-called "Röhm-Putsch" or "Blood Purge" of the Nazi SA),[3623] Hitler as Reichskanzler and two other Ministers signed a bill retroactively legalizing the killings in a single sentence.[3624] Shortly thereafter, Hitler addressed the Reichstag in Berlin, "to enlighten the German People with regard to events that should live on for all time in our history as a memory even as wretched as it is admonitory".[3625] To avert a calamity, he claimed, actions "quick as lightning" had to be taken ["Wenn überhaupt das Unheil noch zu verhindern war, dann mußte blitzschnell gehandelt werden"]. "I gave the order to shoot dead the chief offenders in this treason", he admitted—and "if someone reproaches me with why we did not call upon the ordinary courts for judgment in the matter, then I can say to him only: in that hour, I was responsible for the fate of the German Nation and therefore was the supreme judge of the German People" ["In dieser Stunde war ich verantwortlich für das Schickstal der deutschen Nation und damit des deutschen Volkes oberster Gerichtsherr"]![3626] "When confronted by the opinion that only a judicial proceeding could have produced an accurate weighing of guilt and expiation, against that conception I lodge a solemn protest."[3627] So, he warned, with conviction none of his listeners could have doubted, "everyone should know for the future that, if he raises his hand to strike against the State, certain death will be his fate".[3628] Finally, Hitler predicted, "if destiny were to call me away from my post * * * my successor[s] would not act differently, and * * * would be prepared to protect the security of the German People and Nation with no less determination".[3629]

Shortly thereafter, the German legal theorist, Dr. Carl Schmitt, interpreted these events with the explanation that, as Führer, Hitler exercised > the right and the power to found a new state and a new order.

[3623] See, e.g., John Toland, Adolf Hitler (Garden City, New York: Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1976), Volume I, Chapter 12.

[3624] "Die zur Niederlegung hoch- und ladesverräterischer Angriffe am 30 Juni, 1 und 2 Juli 1934 vollzogenenen Maßnahmen sind als Staatsnotwehr rechtens." ("The measures taken on 30 June and 1 and 2 July 1934 in order to put down attacks of high treason shall be considered to be legitimate State self-defense.") Gesetz über Maßnahmen zur Staatsnotwehr [Law Regarding Measures of State Self-defense] (3 July 1934), 1934 Reichsgesetzblatt, Part I, at 529 (the present author's translation). See Office of United States Chief of Counsel For Prosecution of Axis Criminality, NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION, ante note 3428, Volume I, at 240-242; Volume IV, at 699 (Document 2057-PS).

[3625] Address of 13 July 1934, original audio available at <www.archive.org/Hitler_Speeches>, No. 22, 1934-07-13, Adolf Hitler, Reichstagsrede (the present author's translation). The complete German text is reproduced in, e.g., Max Domarus, HITLER: Reden und Proklamationen 1932-1945, TEIL I, TRIUMPH 1932-1938, Ester Band 1932-1934 (Leonberg, Germany: Pamminger & Partner Verlagsgesellschaft mbH, 1973). The passage to which this footnote refers is quoted in Domarus, ante, at 410. The Reichstag ratified this assumption of power permanently in 1942. See, e.g., J. Wheeler-Bennett, The Nemesis of Power, ante note 3382, at 538 & note 1.

[3626] See M. Domarus, HITLER, ante note 3625, at 420-421.

[3627] See id. at 422.

[3628] See id. at 421.

[3629] See id. at 422-423.

> The Führer protects the law against the most serious abuse when, at the moment of danger, as the supreme judge by virtue of his status as Führer he creates law directly: "In that hour I [that is, Hitler] was responsible for the fate of the German nation and therefore [I was] the supreme judge of the German People." The true Führer is also always a judge. From leadership flows judgeship. * * *
>
> In truth, the Führer's action was authentic jurisdiction. It was not subordinate to the judiciary, but to the contrary was itself the supreme judiciary.[3630]

The German Army's General Staff imprudently supported Hitler in these grandiose and murderous pretensions, because his first "official assassinations" eliminated the dangerously radical and personally corrupt leadership of the Sturmabteilung, which threatened the Army's martial supremacy.[3631]

In line with his prognostication to the Reichstag, and with Schmitt's analysis, Hitler's malign confidence has been vindicated. For his successors in spirit have neither acted differently, nor exhibited any less determination, nor been thwarted by the legitimate Armed Forces or any other center of authority. In parallel with Hitler's régime, the rogue cabal in control (as of this writing) of the Executive Branch of the General Government has contended that the President's license to kill in his capacity as "Commander in Chief" does not depend upon a prior judicial determination of a victim's guilt, presumably can even override a prior judicial determination of a victim's innocence, and per propria vigore must be immune from any subsequent judicial inquiry. For, according to the cabal's slogan, "[t]he Constitution guarantees due process, not judicial process".[3632] That is, "executive due process" is separate from, independent of, and (in light of the absolute finality of an "official assassination") even superior to "judicial due process". Where "official assassinations" are concerned, the President is "the supreme judge of the American People"—and the supreme jury and executioner as well—because he is "responsible for the fate of the * * * Nation". Or, in the classic and more candid formulation of this doctrine, Der Führer befiehlt; wir folgen![3633] On that basis, of course, the Fifth Amendment's injunction—"nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb"—is simply irrelevant, if not impertinent. Because "official assassinations" operate extra-judicially by "executive due

---

[3630] "Der Führer schützt das Recht: Zur Reichstagsrede Adolf Hitlers vom 13. Juli 1934", Deutsche Juristen-Zeitung, Heft 15, 39 Jahrgang, 1 August 1934, at 946-947 (the present author's translation). A reproduction of the original document appears at <www.flechsig.biz/DJZ34_CS.pdf>.

[3631] See, e.g., J. Wheeler-Bennett, The Nemesis of Power, ante note 3382, at 304-332.

[3632] United States Department of Justice, Justice News, "Attorney General Eric Holder Speaks at Northwestern University School of Law", Chicago[, Illinois] ~ Monday, March 5, 2012 (remarks reported "[a]s prepared for delivery").

[3633] "The Leader commands; we follow!"

process"—and therefore are not constrained by such principles as res judicata and collateral estoppel recognized in "judicial due process"—any prior determination in court of a targeted individual's innocence would be beside the point as to whether, for some reason known only to the inner circle of the "homeland-security" bureaucracy, he should be killed anyway. And any attempts at subsequent "judicial due process" would surely be thwarted by the defenses of "official immunity" (so that no charge, whether civil or criminal, could be prosecuted), or "executive privilege" and "state secrets" (so that no evidence could be obtained by which to incriminate anyone).

The excuse the cabal has proffered as to why "executive due process" must displace "judicial due process" is the very same rationalization Hitler put forward: the need for actions "quick as lightning" in National self-defense: "The evaluation of whether an individual presents an 'imminent threat' incorporates considerations of the relevant window of opportunity to act, [and]the possible harm that missing the window would cause to civilians"; "the Constitution does not require the President to delay action until some theoretical end-stage of planning—when the precise time, place, and manner of an attack become clear".[3634] Self-defense, however, is justified only "when the precise time, place, and manner of an attack [have] become clear" to the party being assailed. Before then—that is, when one or more of those variables remains unknown—self-defense is premature, because any evidence, let alone proof, of its necessity is absent.

Moreover, the theory of "official assassinations" is not limited to homicidal attacks on Americans only on account of acts they have actually committed in the past, but instead approves of the liquidation, at whatever time and in whatever circumstances the killers may deem most propitious, of any American who might commit supposedly "hostile" acts in the future. As the cabal has asserted, "[t]he evaluation of whether an individual presents an 'imminent threat' incorporates considerations of * * * the likelihood of heading off future disastrous attacks against the United States".[3635] Self-defense, however, never involves a determination of "the likelihood of heading off future disastrous attacks". Self-defense always arises in the present, being aimed at "heading off [a] disastrous attack[ ]" taking place at that very moment. If "future disastrous attacks" are at issue, the matter is one of "preëmptive homicide" or "preventive homicide", not self-defense. And once the victim of an "official assassination" supposedly carried out in National self-defense is dead, whether those "future * * * attacks" were "likel[y]" or not, or whether if likely they seriously threatened National security, become moot points, as does the victim's actual guilt or innocence. That the victim was assassinated through "executive due process" suffices to establish his presumptive—and, from a practical perspective, conclusive—guilt. Ironically, then, an "official assassination" actually conforms in a perverse way to the Fifth Amendment. For having once been "put in jeopardy" through "executive due process" by being physically eliminated, a victim cannot possibly be "put in jeopardy" a second time through "judicial due process". As Stalin was reputedly wont to say, "No man. No problem."[3636]

---

[3634] Justice News, ante note 3632.

[3635] Id.

To be sure, the cabal has denied that > the Executive Branch has—or should ever have—the ability to target any such individuals without robust oversight. Which is why, in keeping with the law and our constitutional system of checks and balances, the Executive Branch regularly informs the appropriate members of Congress about our counterterrorism activities, including the legal framework, and would of course follow the same procedure where lethal force is used against United States citizens.[3637]

The self-evident fallacy in this assurance, though, is that no "checks and balances" could prove to be of any value to the target of an "official assassination" after his death. To be meaningful, a "check"—in the sense of a mechanism capable of "arrest[ing]" a course of action in a timely manner[3638]—would need to prevent the killing, until some further constitutional process might determine whether it were justified or not. Although Hitler acknowledged it as "the most qualified tribunal of the Nation", what "checks and balances" was the German Reichstag capable of interposing after he had informed it about the "events that should live on for all time in our history as a memory even as wretched as it is admonitory"?[3639] For the victims of the purge, of course, it could do nothing. Worse yet, not a single prospective "check and balance" was ever proposed, let alone imposed on Hitler and his murderous myrmidons. To the contrary: On the very same day that Hitler informed the Reichstag of his status as "supreme judge of the German People", Reichspräsident Hermann Göring congratulated him on the "confidence" that made it "possible for him [that is, Hitler] to do what is necessary for the reconstruction of Germany. This confidence * * * is the platform on which Germany stands today."[3640] Thus, in both principle and practice, the present open and unabashed apology for the employment of "death squads" by rogue officials in the Executive [3636] See the cover of Time (8 February 1933). Sometimes this epigram is quoted (albeit without being attributed to a particular verifiable source) as: "Death is the solution to all problems—no man, no problem." Ma se non è vero è ben trovato.

---

[3637] Justice News, ante note 3632.

[3638] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 244, definition 1. See also Webster's Third New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 381, definition 2a.

[3639] See M. Domarus, HITLER: Reden und Proklamationen, ante note 3625, at 410.

[3640] See id. at 424.

Branch of the General Government situates the exponents and practitioners of "official assassinations" not far behind, if not directly alongside, Hitler at the vicious end of the spectrum of modern totalitarian dictatorships. Disturbingly, in one respect these worthies may actually have forged ahead of Hitler on the scale of moral turpitude. For Hitler was possessed of the sincerity and self-assurance personally to defend his actions in a formal address to the Reichstag, and to receive its sheepish approval; whereas no President has ever dared to appear before Congress even to inform its Members about the policy of "official assassinations", let alone to seek its concurrence.[3641]

To describe the Presidential policy of "official assassinations" as a defining characteristic of a totalitarian dictatorship is hardly hyperbole, either. In particular, the acquiescence of Germany's political leadership, Wehrmacht, and society in Hitler's homicidal pretensions in 1934 was correctly recognized at the time as the critical moment in that country's modern history, after which the thoroughgoing illegality of a demented dictatorship reigned supreme.[3642] More generally, if "[t]he scientific term 'dictatorship' means nothing more nor less than authority untrammeled by any laws, absolutely unrestricted by any rules whatever, and based directly on force",[3643] then a régime which claims for its chief magistrate the power to kill without trial any citizen to whom his minions merely affix some opprobrious label is a "dictatorship", because as to those citizens (and, indeed, as to any and all citizens who might fall into sufficient political disfavor to be described with whatever scurrilous epithet might serve to condemn them) the chief magistrate is "untrammeled by any laws" and his rule is "based directly on force". Furthermore, by definition a "totalitarian state" claims for itself every conceivable power, and denies any obligation to recognize, let alone to guarantee and protect, any rights, privileges, or immunities of individual citizens that it does not create (and therefore can withdraw at will). Self-evidently, then, a "state" which asserts the power of its chief magistrate to kill without trial any of its citizens on some official's own mere unsubstantiated claim that they are somehow "enemies" is quintessentially a "totalitarian state", [3641] In addition, no recent occupant of the White House implicated in "official assassinations" has marshaled the personal grit actually to participate in any way in these incidents in the field. In contrast, personally leading no more than ten followers, Hitler drove to the resort of Bad Wiessee where an SA conference was to be held, burst into SA Chief Ernst Röhm's room in the Pension Handselbauer, and pistol in hand declared him under arrest. When a truck filled with some forty armed members of Röhm's personal guard arrived, Hitler himself ordered them to return to their barracks and surrender—which they did. Then, on its return trip, Hitler's little entourage, although encumbered with prisoners, accosted and arrested various other SA men along the route. See, e.g., J. Toland, Adolf Hitler, ante note 3623, Volume I, at 355-357. One must, of course, recall that, distinguishably from the occupants of the White House during the past several Administrations, Hitler served with exceptional courage in the German Army on the Western Front during World War I, receiving numerous awards for valor. See id., Volume I, at 62-75.

---

[3642] See id., Volume I, at 369-370.

[3643] Vladimir I. Lenin, "A Contribution to the History of the Question of the Dictatorship, A Note" [1920], in Collected Works (Moscow, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Progress Publishers, 4th English Edition, 1966), Volume 31, at 353.

because the state's homicidal power entails the negation of all of its victims' rights by physically eliminating the victims themselves. Not without reason does the Declaration of Independence list "certain unalienable Rights" in the order "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness"—for, without the "Right[ ]" to "Life", all other "Rights" are at best ephemeral, if not illusory. After all, most individuals threatened with extermination will surrender the rest of their rights in exchange for even the gossamer-thin hope of remaining alive. So, should they acquiesce in "official assassinations"—of which it can be truly said, ne plus ultra—Americans would in principle necessarily bend beneath the yoke of totalitarianism in toto.

No matter how large a majority of deluded or cowardly Americans did so, however, the minority could not be bound to follow their lead—morally, politically, or legally. For, as the Declaration of Independence makes clear: (i) Americans are entitled to a "separate and equal station" "among the powers of the earth" only in conformity with "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". (ii) A "totalitarian dictatorship" does not conform to those "Laws", because it refuses to "secure" the "certain unalienable Rights" with which "all men * * * are endowed by their Creator", but is instead wholly "destructive" of those "Rights". (iii) The most characteristic powers of a "totalitarian state" being irremediably "[un]just powers", such a "state" could never arise from "the consent of the governed". And (iv) a "totalitarian state" not merely "evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism", but constitutes such a "Despotism" in full force. Therefore, the employment of "death squads" by rogue officials in the General Government establishes a sufficient ground for patriotic Americans—whether they constitute the majority or only a minority of this country's population—to conclude that at least in its present composition the Executive Branch of the General Government has taken on or been forced to assume the character of a totalitarian dictatorship, and on the basis of that conclusion to set about "to alter or to abolish" that "Form of Government" to the degree necessary to correct the situation, or even "to throw off such Government" entirely, if the problem cannot be solved in any other way.

Against this background, the utter moral imbecility of rogue officials in the United States stands out in stark relief. Congress has enacted a statute which provides that "[a]ny individual who, under actual or apparent authority, or color of law, of any foreign nation * * * subjects an individual to extrajudicial killing shall, in a civil action, be liable for damages to the individual's legal representative for wrongful death".[3644] Why Congress needed a prod by the United Nations in order to establish a civil action for such an egregious crime, and then did not extend liability to any and every individual who participates in an "extrajudicial killing" "under actual or apparent authority, or color of law", of any nation or government whatsoever, including the United States and each of the several States, defies explanation. Except perhaps that rogue Members of Congress then intended, and continue to intend, to leave a very large gap through which such killers can escape even civil penalties. For although that statute defines "extrajudicial killing" as "a deliberated killing not authorized by a previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized people", it also provides that "[s]uch term * * * does not include such killing that, under international law, is lawfully carried out under the authority of a foreign nation".[3645] One wonders, though, what sort of "law" of any nation could dispense with "all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples", or what sort of "international law" could countenance such a dispensation, and still be entitled to the appellation "law". If these "judicial guarantees" are "recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples", then "laws" purportedly setting them aside cannot be "laws" of any sort, and the nations that promulgate and approve of them cannot be taken as "civilized"! Then why should their "laws" be given any credence or deference at all?

---

[3644] An Act To carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by establishing a civil action for recovery of damages from an individual who engages in torture or extrajudicial killing ("Torture Victim Protection Act of 1991"), Act of 12 March 1992, Pub. L. 102-256, § 2(a)(2), 106 Stat. 73, 73 (emphasis supplied).

Moreover, Congress has no constitutional choice but to repudiate any such *un*civilized "laws" of foreign nations, taken either individually as the idiosyncracies of those particular nations or collectively as some international consensus. For WE THE PEOPLE have delegated, and could delegate, to Congress only "just powers" which comport with "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God".[3646] And therefore Congress cannot exercise any of its powers so as in any manner to treat as valid the spurious "laws" of *un*civilized nations that, by definition, must undermine the very foundations of civilization. Congress may "define and punish * * * Offences against the Law of Nations"[3647] when "the Law of Nations" embodies agreement among civilized peoples which reflects "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", but not otherwise. As Blackstone explained, "the Laws of Nature" are > such laws as were founded in those relations of justice, that existed in the nature of things, antecedent to any positive precept. These are the eternal, immutable laws of good and evil, to which the creator himself in all his dispensations conforms; and which he has enabled human reason to discover, so far as they are necessary for the conduct of human actions.

>
> * * * * *
>
> THIS law of nature * * * is of course superior in obligation to any other. It is binding over all the globe, in all countries, and at all times: no

---

[3645] Act of 12 March 1992, § 3(a), 106 Stat. at 73 (emphasis supplied).

[3646] Compare Declaration of Independence with U.S. Const. preamble ("to * * * establish Justice").

[3647] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10.

> human laws are of any validity, if contrary to this; and such of them as are valid derive all their force, and all their authority, mediately, or immediately, from this original.
>
> * * * * *
>
> IF man were to live in a state of nature, unconnected with other individuals, there would be no occasion for any other laws, than the law of nature, and the law of God. * * * But man was formed for society * * * . However, as it is impossible for the whole race of mankind to be united in one great society, they must necessarily be divided into many; and form separate states, commonwealths, and nations, entirely independent of each other, and yet liable to a mutual intercourse. Hence arises a third kind of law to regulate this mutual intercourse, called "the law of nations:" which, as none of these states will acknowledge a superiority in the other, cannot be dictated by either; but depends entirely upon the rules of natural law, or upon mutual compacts, treaties, leagues, and agreements between these several communities: in the construction of also of which compacts, we have no other rule to resort to, but the law of nature; being the only one to which both communities are equally subject: and therefore the civil law very justly observes, that quod naturalis ratio interomnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium.[3648]

Conversely, if the majority of nations should forsake "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", then the putative "law of [those] nations" would no longer qualify as "the law of nations" at all, any more than the "law" of thieves qualifies as the law of property, or the "law" of confidence-men qualifies as the law of contracts.

Nonetheless, here in the United States Americans now witness, on the one hand, the Legislative Branch of the General Government defining "extrajudicial killing" as "a deliberated killing not authorized by a previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples"; and, on the other hand, the Executive Branch declaring that it may perpetrate "extrajudicial killing[s]" at discretion, thereby traducing as outside the community of "civilized peoples" every single American whom it purports to "represent".

(11) Claims of "official immunity" in the exercise of these purported powers. If, for purposes of argument, public officials are properly engaged in a "war on terrorism", those among them who turn out to be rogues should be liable to prosecution and punishment for any "war crimes" they commit in the course of that "war"—or, in light of their repeated, strident, and self-satisfied assertions that "the war on terrorism" is legitimate, they should at least be estopped from denying and evading their exposure in that regard even if "the war on terrorism" is bogus. Among recognized "war crimes" are torture and other cruel or inhuman treatment, murder, deportation, and the taking of hostages.[3649] So, because the purported powers to kidnap Americans through "extraordinary renditions", to detain Americans indefinitely in military custody, to torture Americans, and to assassinate Americans are not conceivably constitutional (but indeed are self-evidently anti-constitutional), each and every official who participates in such acts in the course of "the war on terrorism" should be condemned as a "war criminal".

---

[3648] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 40, 41, 43 (footnote omitted). The Latin epigram translates to: "What natural reason establishes [to be true] among all men is called the law of nations."

One can be sure, however, that if ever called to account for their "war crimes" (or any other crimes, for that matter), rogue public officials would stridently assert a supposedly all-embracing "official immunity" that insulated them from every form of personal liability, no matter where and against whom they might have perpetrated their thuggery, or in what tribunal or under what laws they might be charged. Such a defense would at best be effrontery, because:

First and foremost, it is the classic means that tyrants employ to insulate their myrmidons from legal responsibility for their acts of political and other criminality. For example, describing the Nazis' "PURGE OF POLITICAL OPPONENTS AND TERRORIZATION", the prosecutors at Nuremberg pointed out that, "in direct contrast to the severity of the criminal law as it affected the general population of Germany, the Nazi conspirators adopted and endorsed a large body of unwritten laws exempting the police from criminal liability for illegal acts done under higher authority". The guiding principle was that "'[t]he police never act in a lawless or illegal manner as long as they act according to the rules laid down by their superiors * * * . As long as the police carry out the will of the Government, [they are] acting legally.'" And "[w]here no definite law protected terroristic acts of Nazi conspirators and their accomplices, proceedings against them were in the first instance suppressed or thereafter their acts were pardoned".[3650]

Second, "official immunity" flies in the face of a fundamental principle on which America was founded, that "in a republic * * * every magistrate ought to be personally responsible for his behavior in office".[3651]

Third, the Constitution itself excludes it. The only "official immunities" the Constitution recognizes are that "Senators and Representatives * * * shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to [3649] See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 2441(d)(1)(A), (B), (D), and (I). See also Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Part 2, Article 8, § 2(a)(ii), (iii), (i), (vii), and (viii).

---

[3650] Office of United States Chief of Counsel For Prosecution of Axis Criminality, NAZI CONSPIRACY AND AGGRESSION, ante note 3428, Volume I, at 244, 247 (emphasis in the original).

[3651] The Federalist No. 70 (Alexander Hamilton).

and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place".[3652] Although perhaps no pure "Speech or Debate in either House" could constitute a "war crime" (in contrast to an actual vote in favor of some bill that purported to authorize an unconstitutional "war"), all "war crimes" should fairly fall within the category "Felony"; and some "war crimes" could be prosecuted specifically as "Treason", if they amounted to "levying War against the[United States]", as waging a "war of terrorism" against WE THE PEOPLE certainly would. So the constitutional immunity, by its explicit terms, would not "privilege[ ]" the perpetrators of such acts "from Arrest" even in the very course of their performing their official functions. And the Constitution would hardly bother to allow for the actual "Arrest" of "Senators and Representatives" at those times, unless it presumed that their "Arrest[s]" could be followed by further criminal investigations, presentments or indictments, trials, convictions, and punishments against which no "official immunity" could be interposed.

Moreover, no rogue public official could plausibly claim immunity from prosecution for "war crimes", because the commission of any and every "war crime"—being, in the very nature of such behavior, unconstitutional—necessarily entails a violation of the requirement that "[t]he Senators and Representatives [in Congress] * * * , and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution".[3653] No public official can be "bound by [his] Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution", however, without personal exposure to some serious punishment for refusing "to support" it—particularly when that refusal in the case of a "war crime" has resulted in a simultaneous violation of "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", the Law of Nations, and "the supreme Law of the Land". But any "official immunity" somehow deriving from or appurtenant to public office precludes the imposition of any penalty for such a refusal, thereby rendering the "Oath or Affirmation" taken with respect to that office not simply nugatory but even self-contradictory and absurd. Therefore, no "official immunity" can possibly obtain in such a situation.

Nonetheless, rogue public officials known or suspected to have exercised, or to have ordered the exercise of, any of the abusive powers discussed above are implicitly being afforded such a defense right now. As of this writing—

• No bills of impeachment against such officials have been introduced, or even proposed, in Congress—for the obvious reason that a majority of the Members of Congress has participated in those crimes by purporting to license them in one statute or another.

[3652] U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1.

[3653] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

• No prosecutions of rogue officials are in train—because personnel at the highest levels in the Executive Branch, civilian and military, are promulgating the policies pursuant to which these acts are being committed.[3654]

• No reliance can be placed on the Judiciary. Quite the contrary: The judges themselves fathered the bastard doctrine of "official immunity"[3655]—thereby not simply violating their own "Oath[s] or Affirmation[s], to support th[e] Constitution", but also aiding and abetting all other rogue officials in similar violations. In any proper prosecution for "war crimes" committed in the course of "the war of terrorism", a rogue official's claim of "official immunity" should warrant a further count in his indictment; and any judge who purports to entertain such a claim should himself be indicted as at least an accessory after the fact. Arguably, any such judge should be indicted as a full co-conspirator, because the actual perpetrators of "war crimes" do so with the assurance that judges will exonerate them through a grant of "official immunity"; and judges grant "official immunity" with the full knowledge and expectation that its availability will encourage further acts of the type to which such "immunity" applies.[3656]

Were Congress truly representative of WE THE PEOPLE, and intent upon enforcing the Constitution, that the Supreme Court has handed down numerous decisions creating, applying, protecting, and expanding "official immunity" would pose no problem, but instead would provide a perfect context in which to demonstrate that WE THE PEOPLE, not "we the judges", exercise ultimate control over the Constitution. One need only recall that the Supreme Court upheld the supposed legality of the mass evacuation of Japanese-Americans during World War II on the grounds of the possibility of disloyalty among some of them, but refused to rule on the question of subsequent indefinite detention in concentration camps of [3654] Having received glaring exposure in the media, a few military personnel of low rank have been prosecuted for relatively minor wrongdoing in "the war on terrorism", doubtlessly for the purpose of generating a smokescreen of "plausible denial" with respect to higher-ups. But inasmuch as the President of the United States himself claims the power to order "official assassinations"—to which mere kidnapping or even torture can hardly compare—the unconstitutionality of all such practices should be established once and for all at the very head of the military chain of command, not just case by case at some distant links only when the crimes of disposable flunkies fortuitously finally come to light.

---

[3655] See generally E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1643-1662.

[3656] It might be objected to this line of argument that: (i) most of the "official immunities" cobbled together by the Judiciary have been applied almost always only in civil litigation, to exclude awards of monetary damages against rogue public officials who have violated individuals' civil rights or committed other infractions that did not sink to the level of criminal misbehavior; and (ii) criminal prosecution of such wayward officials, where warranted, might still be had in principle. In practice, however, criminal prosecutions of these miscreants are almost never had, even if plainly warranted, because of the multilayered "good old boy" network within officialdom at every level of the modern federal system. Under these circumstances, the only real "checks and balances" against usurpation and tyranny must be applied by the injured parties themselves, who if given their "day in court" can impose staggering financial penalties on the malefactors. No tyrannous régime can long survive if its enforcers are constantly exposed to the forfeiture of their personal wealth for carrying out the régime's illegal orders. Being fully aware of this danger, the judges do everything possible to derail such lawsuits entirely or at least to minimize awards of monetary damages.

the individuals so evacuated.[3657] Yet, later on, Congress "acknowledge[d] the fundamental injustice of the evacuation, relocation, and internment of United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry during World War II", and determined to "make restitution to those individuals of Japanese ancestry who were interned" and to "discourage the occurrence of similar injustices and violations of civil liberties in the future".[3658] When Congress did so, it necessarily recognized and repudiated the viciously erroneous nature of the Court's actual holding on the evacuation, as well as its evasion of the issue of detention, in Korematsu—which acknowledgment, recognition, and repudiation for all intents and purposes constituted a legislative declaratory judgement reversing that holding and condemning that evasion. Moreover, Congress agreed to "make restitution" to the aggrieved Japanese, in the form of monetary compensation.[3659] Thus, in effect, the victims of the evacuation and internment, having lost in the judicial system, took a political appeal of Korematsu to Congress and at length prevailed with a judgment of law and an award of damages—proving that the General Government actually operates, when public officials properly operate it, on the principle of legislative, not judicial, supremacy. In addition, having denounced "the fundamental injustice" of the behavior of the Justices in the majority in Korematsu, Congress established for the future that any judge who dares to assert the holding in that case with respect to evacuation, or to rely on its evasion of the issue of detention, against anyone else will be perpetrating a "fundamental injustice", too, and therefore will be guilty of "high Crimes and Misdemeanors", warranting "Impeachment", "Conviction", and "remov[al] from Office", and after that other appropriate punishment.[3660] The historical basis for such a conclusion is firm: Under pre-constitutional English law, "disobedience to any act of parliament" was one of several "positive" "MISPRISIONS" "generally denominated contempts or high misdemeanors".[3661] Obviously, this method could (and should) be applied to the judicial rigamarole of "official immunity"—with nothing more complicated than a Congressional determination that no such "immunity" does exist, or ever has existed; that the very notion of "official immunity" constitutes a "fundamental injustice" to every victim of officials' misconduct, as well as an intolerable encouragement to and reward for misbehavior; and that any public official seeking, along with any judge purporting to grant, [3657] Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214 (1944). The Court did rule, however, that a Japanese-American citizen, whose loyalty the government conceded, could not be so detained. Ex parte Endo, 323 U.S. 283 (1944). During the war, however, the government never conceded the loyalty of most detainees—but it never proved their disloyalty, either.

---

[3658] An Act To implement recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Citizens, Act of 10 August 1988, Pub. L. 100-383, § 1(1), (4), and (6), 102 Stat. 903, 903.

[3659] See Act of 10 August 1988, § 105(a)(1), 102 Stat. at 906 ("to each eligible individual the sum of $20,000").

[3660] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 4; and compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 7 with, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242.

[3661] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 121-122.

"official immunity" in the years ahead will be severely sanctioned. Admittedly, however, this reform has little likelihood of being implemented in the foreseeable future.

•No sufficient recourse can be had by the voters' removing rogue officials from office at the next election, either. First, no *un*elected bureaucrat can readily be "bound by [his] Oath or Affirmation" in that manner, because he will never face the electorate. And even an elected official may not be concerned with being reëlected—for, having well served some faction or other special-interest group at WE THE PEOPLE'S expense during his term in office, he may expect to be amply rewarded with some variety of "golden parachute" by his clients when the voters throw him out. Second, electoral defeat is not a true "punishment" in any sense known to the law, inasmuch as it can happen to any official without any wrongdoing on his part. Third, removal of a rogue from office at the next election provides only prospective relief. It cannot undo the damage he has already done during his term. Fourth, the prospect of electoral defeat is largely a paper tiger. The level of public officials' misbehavior would not be as great as it is today if any significant number of them feared popular retaliation at the pools, and the election of true reformers to public office. Apparently most incumbents are convinced—with good reason—that the electoral system and the types of candidates it allows to vie for office are so tightly controlled by the "two" major political parties and their clients and partisans in special-interest groups and the big media that WE THE PEOPLE are powerless to change the situation for the better, even if they succeed in changing the identities of their elected officials. And,

•No faith can be placed in the presumption that a rogue public official tempted to violate his "Oath or Affirmation" will be sufficiently "bound" solely perforce of a religious conviction that he will suffer meet punishment in the next world for the crimes he commits and fails to expiate in this one. Some officials may believe that; but others may not. WE THE PEOPLE, however, cannot mandate a sincere personal belief in an afterlife of rewards and punishments as an universally applicable condition for office, because "no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States", and "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion".[3662]

So, nothing will effectively deter and punish rogue officials for their assumption and exercise of these—and perhaps even more—*anti-*constitutional powers until WE THE PEOPLE themselves, through concerted political action of the most fundamental sort, take their sovereignty into their own hands for their own self-preservation.

[3662] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3 and amend. I. Similarly for the States under U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. See, e.g., Torcaso v. Watkins, 367 U.S. 488 (1961).

Crucial here is to focus on the practical assertions of the foregoing anti-constitutional powers, not on the specific statutory mumbo jumbo in which they have been embodied, or the particular judicial double-talk through which some of them have been approved, to date. For old statutes can be amended and new ones enacted, and judicial opinions written and rewritten, to suit the occasion—and will be, as long as the District of Columbia houses rogue officials eager to exercise such abusive powers. The one certainty is that whatever comes will be rationalized as necessary for "national security". Yet the Constitution contains no "national-security power" that licenses anyone in the General Government to perform these actions, or to approve of their performance by others. And for good reason: True "national security" requires that all constitutional limitations be scrupulously enforced at all times. For "the Nation"—that is, the United States—has no legal existence outside of the Constitution. Therefore, "[i]t would indeed be ironic if, in the name of national defense, we would sanction the subversion of [any] of those liberties * * * which makes the defense of the Nation worthwhile".[3663]

In the final analysis, though, "ironic" is hardly the word for it. "Ridiculous", "appalling", and "frightening" would be more accurate. For, if the assertions of such anti-constitutional powers—linked tightly together both temporally and logically in "a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object [that] evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism"[3664]—do not constitute authentic "state crimes against democracy", then nothing does.[3665] In the United States, of course, the term "state crimes against democracy" is something of a misnomer, because any crimes which rogue public officials commit against WE THE PEOPLE (the demos) are not attributable to "the state", to "the government", or even to the particular "offices" the rogues occupy, but always remain the entirely personal crimes those individuals perpetrate against "the state" and "the government" as well as THE PEOPLE. With that clarification, though, the term can be profitably employed. "State crimes against democracy"—or, more accurately put in the specific context of America's federal system, "state crimes against limited representative government" in general or "state crimes against the Constitution" in particular—involve rogue public officials, almost always closely leagued with private factions or special interests, who abuse legal, and arrogate to themselves illegal, political and economic powers for their own benefit at WE THE PEOPLE'S expense. That is, "state crimes" always involve, as means or ends, usurpation, tyranny, or both. Because of their purposes, such crimes are often covert in nature, planning, and execution; and those who attempt to expose—and even succeed in [3663] United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 264 (1967).

---

[3664] Declaration of Independence.

[3665] For a general introduction to the concept of "state crimes against democracy", see the articles collected in American Behavioral Scientist, Volume 53, Number 6 (February 2010).

exposing—them are typically derided as delusional and dangerous "conspiracy theorists".[3666] Yet the planning and commission of such crimes can also be quite overt, provided that their true effect or their perpetrators' ulterior intent remains well camouflaged.

As is the case here: Every one of the anti-constitutional powers catalogued above is supposedly the product of some statute openly enacted in the normal course of Congressional business, or of some notorious claim of authority from the President or other high-ranking official, in some instances rubber-stamped by some court. The true character and purpose of these powers, and especially the true beneficiaries of their exercise, are concealed, though, (i) by hysterical invocations of "national security", infusions of xenophobia and mass paranoia, and instigation of chauvinism and jingoism throughout society; and (ii) by the general public's inability to parse the complex, specialized, and often impenetrable legalistic jargon in which their authors couch the statutes, executive decrees, or judicial decisions that purportedly grant or approve these powers. Such techniques often succeed, because most people uncritically accept whatever they are told by "authority figures", amplified by the echo-chambers of the big media; and many of those who do investigate the matters independently, and come to contrary conclusions, are loathe to face the truth and especially its consequences: (i) That, by effectively "levying War" on WE THE PEOPLE, their own "representatives" have become traitors according to the Constitution's explicit definition.[3667] And (ii) that, their "Form of Government" having failed to such an extent, WE THE PEOPLE themselves must reassert their sovereignty through their own personal efforts, before they lose it entirely—along with their freedom, their prosperity, and perhaps even their very lives.

D. An anticipated nationwide economic collapse and WE THE PEOPLE'S awakening to and rejection of the criminality of America's oligarchical political and economic systems the specific reasons for the erection of a domestic para-military police state. Although the erection of a National para-military police state may appear to any constitutionalist to be madness, yet undoubtedly method lurks behind it. America is not stumbling blindly, as a somnambulist, down a political dark alley. No, indeed. She is being led to a very definite, if dangerous, destination by the syndicate of factions, domestic and foreign special-interest groups, and their puppets in ostensible "public service" which and who throw the economic switches in New York City and pull the political levers in the District of Columbia. This oligarchy has forged these anti-constitutional powers as weapons for the specific purpose of waging a permanent domestic "war of terrorism"—political, economic, social, cultural, and in the event of forcible resistance even military in nature—against WE THE PEOPLE.[3668]

---

[3666] See, e.g., David Ray Griffin, Cognitive Infiltration: An Obama Appointee's Plan To Undermine The 9/11 Conspiracy Theory (Northhampton, Massachusetts: Olive Branch Press, 2011).

[3667] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

"The global war on terrorism" is little more than a cover-story to disguise this aggression in gossamer-thin legalistic camouflage. No alleged "terrorists" headquartered in foreign venues have ever been proven to have posed a menace to the continental United States that could possibly have warranted even the money Congress has poured down the rat-hole of the Department of Homeland Security, let alone the on-going assaults on the Constitution at every level of the federal system that "the war on terrorism" has rationalized. Moreover, did a serious threat to the oligarchs' domestic interests really exist from the infiltration of dangerous foreign "terrorists" into this country, the present "homeland-security" bureaucracy would immediately seal the borders, especially the border with Mexico. Nonetheless, the oligarchs' actions do reveal their anticipation that a set of catastrophic events of some sort will soon occur within what they call "the homeland" (disingenuously, of course, because if any "homeland" commands their loyalty it is certainly not the United States). They do expect that this calamity will strike everywhere throughout America within a short span of time—that it will have historically unprecedented and extraordinarily serious economic, political, and social consequences—that it will engender an intense conflict between the oligarchy and at least a significant proportion of the people—that in the course of this conflict those people will seek out economic, ideological, and political alternatives to the oligarchs' continued rule—and that in order to preserve their commanding positions during this impending, and perhaps indefinite, period of confrontation and chaos the oligarchs must deploy a nationwide para-military police-state apparatus in order to clamp down on whoever steps too far out of line.

1. The oligarchy's problem of maintaining economic control. To a man, the bankers and financial speculators in New York City and their political Pinocchios in the District of Columbia may be knaves; but they are not all fools. Most of them are well aware that the chronic economic problems which have plagued this country since the second decade of the Twentieth Century have derived from the machinations of the Federal Reserve System—or, more generally, from the inherent and ineradicable instability of a corporative-state banking cartel which transmutes public and private debt into legal-tender paper currency irredeemable in silver, gold, or any other valuable commodity.[3669] The oligarchs realize that the Federal Reserve System will eventually self-destruct—indeed, it has already collapsed once in an utterly catastrophic fashion in 1932 to 1934, when domestic redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in gold was terminated permanently; then it failed again in 1971, when an impending collapse forced an indefinite suspension of international redemption. And they sense that yet a third, and this time finally fatal, débâcle is not very far off.

---

[3668] In its use of the term "oligarchy", this study follows Aristotle's definitions: namely, that "an aristocracy" is so called "either because the government is in the hands of the most worthy citizens, or because it is the best form for the city and its inhabitants"; whereas, as the "corruption[ ]" of "aristocracy", "an oligarchy considers only the rich", "be they few or be they more". Politics, Book III, Chapters VII and VIII, in A TREATISE ON GOVERNMENT OR, THE POLITICS OF ARISTOTLE, ante note 73, at 79 and 80.

[3669] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 746-866.

Under these circumstances, the oligarchy's position is rapidly becoming untenable. The Federal Reserve System has always served as the engine which supplied the oligarchs' economic power, and perforce of their economic power supported their political power as well. Yet, without the Federal Reserve System, it would have been impossible—not simply improbable, or difficult, but impossible—for reckless politicians in the public sector and greedy speculators in the private sector to have amassed the staggering level of unproductive, unpayable, unconstitutional, and unconscionable debt that now bears down inexorably upon this country. It is too late, however, for the oligarchs merely to bemoan the consequences from a century of their and their forebears' financial imprudence. Having erected this monstrous Ponzi pyramid, they cannot allow it to collapse, because its fall will crush America's (and likely the world's) economy in a full-scale depression—and nothing would be more politically destabilizing, inevitably to their detriment. To be sure, the Federal Reserve System's ability to generate an inexhaustible stream of "liquidity" will allow for the debt to be paid off, albeit in strictly nominal terms, through hyperinflation of the currency. Hyperinflation, though, will destroy the free market's structure of prices, render rational economic calculation on any large scale impossible, derange the division of labor, devastate productivity, and drive Americans' standard of living down perhaps to third-world levels. So, whether through depression, hyperinflation, or (the most likely eventuality) hyperinflation followed immediately by depression, a breakdown of America's monetary and banking systems will negatively impact upon every economic relationship and transaction everywhere throughout the United States. And such a nationwide economic collapse will generate social dislocations, civil unrest and disobedience, riots and other mass violence, and political upheavals of immensity and intensity never before seen. Indeed, not unlikely might be a veritable renversement which would entirely displace the oligarchy from its present cat-bird's seat as America's ruling class.

In the face of these imminent perils, the oligarchy cannot afford to abide events. Sudden and sharp as its arrival has been, the crisis may have caught the oligarchs largely off balance and unprepared—so that their main concern at this point must be simply to weather the economic storm by desperately hanging on to as much power as possible. Then again, although they may not have intentionally triggered the crisis, being opportunists they appreciate the possibility of using it as the perfect occasion and excuse to promote new "global" financial institutions under their control[3670]—so that they will end up with more economic and political power than ever before. It is even conceivable that, applying their oft-favored strategy of "ordo ab chao",[3671] they themselves intentionally created the conditions for and triggered the crisis in the first place, in order to impose a new "global" financial régime on an otherwise unwilling world. When one observes how the oligarchs perfectly positioned and prepared themselves to take advantage of the crisis in advance of everyone else—how, after the crisis erupted, they bludgeoned Congress into granting them gargantuan "bail outs", and drew into their accounts staggering amounts of "quantitative easing" from the Federal Reserve System's well of currency and credit—and how otherwise they have shamelessly lined their pockets while protecting themselves from prosecution all along—it is difficult not to suspect that their hidden hands were behind the crisis from the start and have been guiding it ever since to their own favored destination.

No matter what may have been cause and what is effect, though, the oligarchs will now follow the selfsame strategy. To retain, and especially to gain, power they must project and expend power against whatever social forces might dare to challenge them. Sufficiently serious economic disruptions can be expected to goad many desperate Americans into potentially revolutionary political activity. So the oligarchs must be prepared to employ main force, to whatever degree may become necessary, in order to suppress dissent, opposition, social unrest, civil disobedience, and especially armed resistance amongst the masses.

No one can believe that most State and Local police forces will prove adequate—in terms of personnel, equipment, and tactical doctrine—to deal effectively with the degree of turmoil that will erupt within their own jurisdictions during a nationwide economic, political, and social breakdown. The only apparent source for a supply of highly trained cadres, as well as massive reinforcements of new *para-*military "boots on the ground", suitable for the task, will be the General Government—which explains the conception, birth, and growth of the Department of Homeland Security. Moreover, all of the initially disparate forces from different jurisdictions within the federal system will need to be coördinated in conformity with some overall plan, so that an unified effort can be made across the country to stem the crisis, before too many common Americans embrace radical political movements in an effort to return economic stability to their communities. Any such plan will require a central apparatus of command and control to administer it—therefore, the Department of Homeland Security. The Department of Homeland Security is and always has been primarily an anticipatory response, not to anything going on in or coming out of any foreign country, but instead to what the oligarchy expects will occur throughout America as a consequence of its own misguided and malicious policies. The Department of Homeland Security's real, if recondite, mission is and always has been to wage a "war of terrorism" at home.

---

[3670] Perhaps along the grandiose lines of the scheme described in Hans Heymann, Plan for Permanent Peace (New York, New York: Harper & Brothers Publishers, 1941).

[3671] "Order from chaos."

The oligarchy's ability—because there can be no question of its willingness—to crack down with para-military force on the populace everywhere throughout the United States, more or less at once, will be crucial if it is to maintain its hold over this Nation's monetary and banking systems. For people anywhere within the United States at any time could adopt an alternative currency of silver and gold, thereby separating themselves from financial control by the Federal Reserve System. Were this to occur to any significant degree—for instance, if a single State officially adopted such an alternative currency for all of her monetary transactions—the new currency would soon come into open competition with Federal Reserve Notes throughout the country, with the full force of the free market pushing the one up and pulling the other down. No one needs to be told what the outcome of such a competition would be in the midst of an economic crisis the origin of which lay in the inherent instability, exacerbated by decades of gross mismanagement, of the Federal Reserve System. Needless to emphasize, the oligarchy would never tolerate, because it could never survive, such a development—and therefore it would move to stamp out the use of an alternative currency whenever and wherever it occurred. An alternative currency could be employed, however, by any two individuals, as well as by ad hoc groups, business organizations of all types, and myriad Local as well as State governments. So, because potentially tens of millions of economic relationships and transactions would have to be monitored and controlled each and every day—many on "black markets" where even discovering them would pose a significant problem—the oligarchy would have to deploy huge numbers of informers, investigators, analysts, police, prosecutors, and other operatives. The so-called "war on drugs" has failed, even though only a relatively small proportion of America's population uses illicit drugs and a large proportion deems such use pernicious. How could a "war on alternative currency" succeed, when most of the population would take up such a currency as a necessary means of economic survival?

2. The oligarchy's problem of maintaining political control. The oligarchical régime which now misrules this country is a "confidence game", in both senses of that term. Its continuation absolutely demands maintaining a large majority of the people's confidence, albeit confidence firmly rooted in untruths. After all, the successful commission of any crimes—especially "state crimes against limited representative government"—depends upon the suppression of incriminating evidence. This requires cultivating a state of ignorance and credulity in the victims. Yet, precisely because the maintenance of unwarranted confidence in the oligarchy depends upon the persistence of incorrect beliefs among the general population, that confidence is always in jeopardy. For incorrect beliefs can be discarded and correct ones adopted by exposure to facts. Although "you can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time", that is not good enough if some of the people some of the time somehow come into possession of some of the truth, and that "some" proves to be just enough.

The problem confronting the oligarchy today is two-fold: (i) its inability to shore up the Nation's collapsing monetary and banking systems, with attendant economic disruptions which are causing more and more people to lose confidence in the régime's competence; and (ii) its inability to deny common Americans access to reliable information which contradicts "the party line" coming out of the District of Columbia and New York City, and which increasingly exposes this country's political and economic leadership as not simply incompetent, but malevolent (and in some respects even demented) as well. As ever-increasing numbers of Americans obtain access and pay attention to unfiltered information from the Internet, the oligarchs' position progressively worsens—because their position has always depended upon centralized control over information through the oligopoly of the corporate mass media, by dint of which political and economic misinformation, disinformation, defamation, distortions, myths, and outright lies could be broadcast without fear of exposure and effective contradiction. So now, even if this country's faulty economic system does not collapse in the near term, the foundation of falsehoods on which it rests will certainly crumble. Exposure of what has really been going on, and especially for whose benefit and at whose cost, will likely incite extensive political unrest and civil disobedience, even if the economy continues to muddle along as it has in the recent past. But the economy will not just muddle along. The difficulty of imposing central control over an unstable economy will expand exponentially when the people largely disbelieve what officialdom tells them. Traditional "monetary policy" worked through a central bank emitting irredeemable legal-tender paper currency will become increasingly ineffective as more and more people, and perhaps many of the States as well, adopt alternative currencies of silver and gold. New knowledge will encourage people to seek alternatives with respect to matters other than currency, too. "Black markets" will proliferate. The oligarchy's hold on the country will atrophy. And not just with respect to the economy, either. For, as common Americans finally realize exactly who is responsible for the economic mess, and why—and that nothing in the way of real and lasting reform can be accomplished through petitions, elections, or litigation in the kangaroo courts—they will adopt other forms of political activism as the means to correct the situation. The serendipitous combination of an economic implosion with an infusion of reliable information will form an incendiary mixture of truly revolutionary volatility.

The oligarchy is well aware of these dangers. The extent of officialdom's concern can be gauged, for example, by the mission recently assigned to the Federal Bureau of Investigation which, in coöperation with law-enforcement agencies at every level of the federal system, is developing a National Domestic Communications Assistance Center to engage in research and development, and to provide technical assistance and practical advice, in the area of electronic surveillance, aimed at intercepting traffic coursing through the ether.[3672] And, putting theory into practice, the Department of Homeland Security's Office of Operations Coordination and Planning has been assigned the task, "through [Social Networking/Media Capability] analysts, [to] monitor publicly available online forums, blogs, public websites, and message boards [in order] to collect information used in providing situational awareness * * * including in limited instances personally identifiable information".[3673]

Merely monitoring the Internet and other electronic media, and intercepting private communications and other transfers of data, however, will not suffice. To manipulate, discredit, and even shut down the sources of information that might goad a distressed population to massive civil disobedience will be more desirable than merely to predict the geneses, likelihoods, and locations of particular outbreaks of unrest. This is why the oligarchy is feverishly striving to develop within its para-military police-state apparatus a capability for reversing history and forcing the genii of information-technology into a new bottle which will enable rogue officialdom to exercise centralized surveillance, intervention, and ultimately control over the entire electronic "marketplace of ideas". One sinister initiative is the Defense Advanced Research Project Agency's "Social Media in Strategic Communication" program, which intends to use social media to "[d]etect, classify, measure and track the * * * formation, development and spread of ideas and concepts (memes), and * * * purposeful or deceptive messaging and misinformation"; to "[r]ecognize persuasion campaign structures and influence operations across social media sites and communities"; to "[i]dentify participants and intent, and measure effects of persuasion campaigns"; and to engage in "[c]ounter messaging of detected adversary influence operations".[3674] Whether the category "detected adversary influence operations" includes communications among American patriots, the contents of which rogue officials consider politically dangerous and therefore prime targets for detection and suppression, this document does not admit. Once such technology is in place, however, the likelihood is high that it will be unleashed against perceived ideological "domestic terrorists"—that is, any and all Americans who might try to mobilize mass public support on behalf of real political reform.

[3672] H.R. Report No. 112-169, 112th Congress, 1st Session, Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Appropriations Bill (20 July 2011), at 53.

[3673] U.S. Department of Homeland Security, Privacy Compliance Review of the NOC Media Monitoring Initiative (15 November 2011), at 1.

[3674] Broad Agency Announcement, Social Media in Strategic Communication (SMISC), DARPA-BAA-11-64, Amendment 2 (15 August 2011), at 4.

No strenuous mental effort is necessary to predict the chain of perverse reasoning by which rogue public officials would traduce as "domestic terrorists" Americans who protested en masse through exercises of "the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances"[3675] in or around the governmental buildings that housed the officials the demonstrators were trying to influence. For

- political protestors or demonstrators might "knowingly, and with intent to impede or disrupt the orderly conduct of Government business or official functions, engage in disorderly or disruptive conduct in, or within such proximity to, any restricted building or grounds * * * so that such conduct, in fact, impedes or disrupts the orderly conduct of Government business or official functions";[3676] or
- political protestors or demonstrators might "knowingly, and with the intent to impede or disrupt the orderly conduct of Government business or official functions, obstruct[ ] or impede[ ] ingress or egress to or from any restricted building or grounds";[3677] and
- inasmuch as any such "imped[ing] or disrupting" constitutes a crime;[3678] and
- inasmuch as a truly massive demonstration—its size and vehemence proportionate to the depth of, and the demonstrators' disgust with, rogue public officials' wrongdoing—could be claimed to threaten "acts dangerous to human life that [we]re violation[s] of the criminal laws of the United States";[3679] and
- inasmuch as any such demonstration would always, in the nature of things, be aimed at "influenc[ing] the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion"[3680]—because widespread civil unrest is ultimately intended to remind public officials "[t]hat whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of the[true] ends [of Government], it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it";[3681] therefore,
- mass protests could be labeled "domestic terrorism".

[3675] U.S. Const. amend. I.

[3676] 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(2).

[3677] 18 U.S.C. § 1752(a)(3).

[3678] 18 U.S.C. § 1752(b).

[3679] See 18 U.S.C. § 2331(5)(A).

[3680] See 18 U.S.C. § 2331(5)(B)(ii).

[3681] Declaration of Independence.

So it is hardly accidental that the statute which effectively outlaws "sit ins" and other disruptive demonstrations at governmental facilities was recently reënacted.[3682] Obviously, the oligarchy anticipates massive civil unrest and even disobedience, aimed, if not in general at "the Form of Government [which has] become[ ] destructive of the[true] ends [of Government]", then in particular at the rogue officials who have perpetrated "a long train of abuses and usurpations" which "evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism".[3683] To be sure, any prudent government prepares for suppressing civil unrest—the Constitution itself delegates to Congress the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to * * * suppress Insurrections",[3684] and imposes upon the United States the duty to "protect each of the[States] * * * against domestic Violence".[3685] In this case, however, the oligarchy can distinguish between immediate effect and underlying cause. In the long run, the people who will pose the greatest danger will not necessarily be the demonstrators alone. Protest demonstrations and other forms of organized civil disobedience are not spontaneous natural events. They are the products of political ideas. Such ideas are more dangerous even than guns. For a man with a gun, but with no idea of why and how he should use it, will end up doing nothing constructive, because he does not know what he should do. Conversely, a man with the idea that he needs a gun in order to secure his freedom—for example, the idea that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State"[3686]—will inevitably find a way to acquire a gun and will work out a plan for using it effectively. The oligarchy has expended extensive efforts over several generations in pushing "gun control". It is now coming to realize that "gun control" will prove futile without an equally aggressive campaign of "idea control": namely, that individuals who promulgate ideas subversive of the political and economic status quo—in particular, ideas derived from the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution—must be identified, isolated, discredited, demonized, harassed, and ultimately silenced.

On may well wonder, however, whether the oligarchy's schemes will perform as well as their creators expect. In times of crisis, after all, "black markets" can and will supply whatever economic goods consumers desire, through effective surreptitious channels. Particularly during a period of economic crisis, political information that exposes rogue public officials' wrongdoing is an economic good which many people want. Therefore, no matter what the oligarchy does, "black [3682] An Act To correct and simplify the drafting of section 1752 (relating to restricted buildings or grounds) of title 18, United States Code ("Federal Restricted Buildings and Grounds Improvement Act of 2011"), Act of 8 May 2012, Pub. L. 112-98, 126 Stat. 263; now codified at 18 U.S.C. § 1752.

---

[3683] Declaration of Independence.

[3684] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3685] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3686] U.S. Const. amend. II.

markets" for that information—from such clandestine sources as "whistleblowers" and "hackers", and through means of communication that largely avoid monitoring and intervention by civilian and military "intelligence agencies"—will spring up, employing whatever technology is available. The might of the Soviet secret police could not eliminate samizdat when dissident literature was written out in cursive or at best typewritten, and then passed from hand to hand. How powerful would a police apparatus have to be to suppress technologically adept Americans from developing an electronic samizdat, or from employing what appear to be relatively primitive means of communication in new and sophisticated manners which can evade or defeat rogue officials' techniques of electronic surveillance and intervention?

3. The oligarchy's problem of maintaining popular loyalty and legal subordination to the régime. Even if the oligarchy can manage by some show of force to maintain a semblance of economic and political control over this country during the initial stages of the crisis, its doom will nonetheless be sealed in the long run. In order to govern justly—so that WE THE PEOPLE have no reason to exercise their "Right * * * to alter or to abolish" their "Form of Government"[3687]—their leaders must endeavor "to win the people's hearts and minds". "To win the people's minds", one must appeal to their intellects: that it makes practical sense to retain their present leaders (in person or in type) in positions of authority. No such appeal can succeed, however, in the face of the people's understanding that the on-going economic collapse is the inexorable result, and the irrefutable proof, of their leaders' incompetence. Of course, even in some very serious circumstances, the people might forgive mere incompetence. But here, mere incompetence is not the half of it. "To win the people's hearts", one must appeal to their moral sense: that some obligation of loyalty requires that their leaders ought to be retained in positions of authority, notwithstanding their shortcomings. No people owes loyalty, however, to leaders who have been systematically disloyal to them. Once common Americans realize this, the oligarchy's fate will be irretrievably sealed.

And every American should be aware of this principle of reciprocity between the people and their leaders, if not simply by dint of political instinct then through consulting his own country's history. From Blackstone, for one source, the Founders knew that > allegiance is usually, and therefore most easily, considered as the duty of the people, and protection as the duty of the magistrate; and yet they are, reciprocally, the rights as well as the duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people.[3688]

[3687] See Declaration of Independence.

[3688] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 123.

The Declaration of Independence excoriated King George III because "[h]e has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us"—one of the reasons, by itself doubtlessly fully sufficient, why "these United Colonies * * * are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown". Later, this principle was reaffirmed as a foundational precept of constitutional law:

> The very idea of a political community, such as a nation is, implies an association of persons for the promotion of their general welfare. Each one of the persons associated becomes a member of the nation formed by the association. He owes it allegiance and is entitled to its protection. Allegiance and protected are, in this connection, reciprocal obligations. The one is a compensation for the other; allegiance for protection and protection for allegiance.[3689]

So, when adequate protection is not forthcoming—especially when their leaders are actually waging a "war of terrorism" against the people—the ties of allegiance between the people and their leaders unravel, and the legal order of which allegiance is the foundation collapses.

The crisis now besetting America proves that her self-styled, self-promoted, self-appointed, self-perpetuating, and always self-serving political and economic leaders have failed, and will continue to fail, to provide her people with protection. Their chronic reliance on "official lies", in the form of the suppression of truth as well as the promulgation of falsehoods, proves that they have no intention of protecting the people. To the contrary: Their relentless preparations to wage a "war of terrorism" against the people proves their intent to destroy those "certain unalienable Rights" which "Governments are instituted among Men" "to secure"—to take from the people their "Liberty", and with their "Liberty" their ability to engage in "the pursuit of Happiness", and from those who resist even "Life" as well.[3690]

Under such circumstances, one can expect that masses of economically deprived, socially dislocated, and politically disenfranchised, disgruntled, and disgusted Americans—who in the midst of an economic crisis have next to nothing left and therefore almost nothing more to lose—and many of whom have been reduced to a state of moral depravity by the constant assaults of crude cultural bolshevism emanating from the big media and the demi-monde of mass "entertainment"—will feel themselves no longer obliged to the political system under which they happen to live, or to the public officials, political parties, politicians, and bosses of special-interest groups who run that system for their own parochial, selfish benefit. So, when this country tumbles into the free-fall of hyperinflation or depression, these materially and morally impoverished citizens will rebel: Initially, against ever-worsening economic conditions, by demanding that public officials correct the situation. Then, when their petitions, marches, sit-ins, and other public protests accomplish little or nothing, they will retaliate against incumbents at the next elections. Finally, when they discover that the "two" major political parties are really a single criminal enterprise with a pair of duplicitous faces leering at them from opposite sides of an empty cranium, and that changing the political personalities in office does not ameliorate the insufferable conditions which arise out of the hare-brained policies implemented by whichever individuals are elected, they will strike at the façade of "government" the "two" parties have foisted upon this country. At that point, a general disdain and disregard for legality will become the order of the day. After all, if public officials refuse to obey the Constitution, which is the sole source of their authority and which each of them is "bound by Oath or Affirmation[ ] to support",[3691] what obligation has anyone else to obey any purported "law" those officials enact or attempt to enforce?

---

[3689] Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. (21 Wallace) 162, 165-166 (1875).

[3690] See Declaration of Independence.

Now, as many as two hundred to three hundred million firearms, and inestimable supplies of ammunition, are held in private store throughout this country. In the midst of what threatens to become the most severe economic crisis of modern times, if not of all time, will not this profusion of armaments—in the hands of people who have been rudely stripped of their financial security, disabused of their political illusions, and driven to the edge of desperation by unemployment, homelessness, hunger, and loss of hope—be brought into play in the most direct manner possible? Will not these people's natural and fully justified antagonisms against public officials, politicians, and special-interest groups mature into rancor—rancor into hatred—hatred into an urge for revenge—and an urge for revenge into actual violent retaliation in more than a few isolated instances and in less than a short period of time? But these are merely rhetorical questions. For anyone who consults the Internet will be overwhelmed with evidence of the antagonism, rancor, hatred, and demands for vengeance already arising at a fever pitch among common Americans against the political and economic oligarchs whom they quite correctly believe to have intentionally sold them and their country down the river Styx. To what levels of intensity and irreconcilability this anger will mount—and in what eruptions of mass violence it will emerge—in the course of a final, catastrophic collapse of the economy throughout the United States can only be imagined (there being no precedent for today's conditions). But comparisons with the circumstances which provoked previous episodes of widespread civil unrest in contemporary America augur that those events will pale in comparison to what full-blown hyperinflation or depression should be expected to bring about in the near future.

---

[3691] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

During the six days of the so-called "Watts Riots" of 1965 in Los Angeles, California, over thirty thousand adults took to the streets, thirty-four individuals lost their lives, eleven hundred more were injured, and upwards of one hundred million dollars' worth of property, including some one thousand buildings, was destroyed, looted, vandalized, or otherwise damaged. An altercation incident to a routine arrest for alleged drunken driving triggered the disturbances—but their suppression required more National Guardsmen and police than the total of American Armed Forces' personnel whom President Lyndon Johnson deployed to seize control of the entire Dominican Republic in that same year. And suppression of the rioters did not address, let alone alleviate, the riots' chronic underlying causes in the community—including such socio-economic problems as high unemployment, substandard living conditions, and a lack of adequate public education, together with political grievances linked to the racial discrimination which had become institutionalized in the city. Then, in the explosion of the so-called "Los Angeles Riots" of 1992, once again the detonator was a relatively minor event—the questionable acquittals of several Local policemen charged with using excessive force to make an arrest. Within hours of the verdicts of "not guilty", violence broke out, and then continued for three days, with arson, assaults, looting, and vandalism by rioters, and suppression of the disturbances by National Guardsmen and police, the subjects of live television coverage broadcast nationwide. Overall, fifty individuals were killed; more than four thousand were injured; and some one billion dollars' worth of property was destroyed or damaged. These outbursts teach lessons which Americans would be imprudent to the height of folly to imagine do not apply to themselves today:

First, both of the riots in Los Angeles erupted over comparatively minor events—but ones which the people on the spot linked to long-standing, widespread, and serious animosities derived from social, economic, and political grievances that public officials had failed, neglected, or refused to address. Being representative of entire hosts of injustices, these two isolated events became the proverbial "straws that broke the camels' backs". In the course of a major nationwide economic collapse today, such occurrences—and many much more serious—would be quotidian and legion.

Second, the Los Angeles rioters obviously believed that mass violence could and should be employed as a justifiable form of political activism, when and because nothing else worked. In this, they were in rough agreement with the men who wrote the Declaration of Independence. And the timeless wisdom of the Declaration—that "mankind are more disposed to suffer, when evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed", but that "when a long train of abuses and usurpations * * * evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government"—will surely galvanize many more adherents into action as an insufferable economic catastrophe caused by nincompoops, charlatans, and outright criminals in public office and their controllers in greedy special-interest groups sweeps across America.

Third, probably very few of the participants in the Los Angeles riots (other than adventitious semi-professional looters and other criminals) gained, or even expected to gain, any significant personal profit or meaningful social betterment as a consequence of the upheavals themselves. Most of them could never have imagined that the riots would actually bring about any specific political reforms. Instead, they engaged in the mayhem simply as actors in anguished, despairing, and especially defiant political street-theater, with the dialogue communicated to a national audience through unmitigated violence across the footlights of burning buildings. People who find themselves in dire economic straits throughout America tomorrow can also be expected to turn to the red-curtained drama of mass insurgency in order "to send a message". This message, however, will not be sent from a very small part of the country to the rest of it, but from almost the entire country to the very small part that constitutes the corrupt economic and political oligarchy*. So the breadth and the intensity of the violence will be far greater, and its focus far narrower and much sharper.*

Fourth, although the territory in which the Los Angeles riots broke out was limited in area and fairly compact, the disturbances proved so severe that they could not be put down by only the State and Local police forces available, but instead required deployment of the regular Armed Forces, in the form of the National Guard. Tomorrow, major civil unrest throughout the entire length and breadth of the United States will render this country ungovernable in short order, even if the entire National Guard could be mobilized and none of it defected to the popular side.

Fifth, although those in positions of political power in Los Angeles eventually suppressed the rioters with armed force, the cost far exceeded what might have been the bill for nonviolently correcting the worst of the underlying conditions that had spawned the people's grievances, before those grievances finally took shape in destructive rebellion. Today, even worse shortsightedness is evident. For next to nothing is being done by the oligarchy to lift the crushing burden of debt—much of it unconstitutionally incurred in the first place—from Americans' shoulders. Instead, more and more debt is being shoveled into the Nation's wildly overdrawn account—eventually to be collected from common people through taxation, inflation, and "austerity" in their living standards—precisely in order to "bail out" the very institutions and individuals responsible for the present financial mess. The banks, financial houses, and dens of speculators which are supposedly "too big to fail" will have failed; but they will be relieved of the weight of their failures by having that load of moan shifted onto the backs of ordinary Americans.

Sixth, the rioters in Los Angeles in 1965 and 1992 were neither organized nor disciplined; and although some were armed, no concerted and systematic use of firearms and other weapons throughout the disaffected communities occurred. Neither did the insurgents attempt to export their violence into outlying areas, so as to attack the people they considered their oppressors in those people's own persons and homes. This evidenced the absence of any overall strategy guiding the uprising.[3692] Under similar circumstances in the near future, however, such shortsightedness almost certainly will not be repeated. And,

Seventh, in general, the more extensive and severe the underlying socio-economic problems, and the more callous the disregard for their solution exhibited by the political Establishment, the more likely will be the eruption of mass violence, which the perpetrators will rationalize as their only effective means to protest, broadcast, and redress their grievances with petitions written in the readily legible handwriting of blood and destruction. Which augurs ill for the present time, inasmuch as the socio-economic difficulties which underlay the riots in 1965 and 1992 in Los Angeles were essentially local phenomena which an impact almost trivial in comparison to the economic and social dislocations, and ensuing mass civil disobedience, which full-blown hyperinflation, depression, or some combination of the two—or even the approaches to those conditions—will bring about everywhere within America tomorrow.

If, however, this is the worst that one can expect—when people bereft of hope and devoid of comprehension strike out blindly at their oppressors—what is the best? That would be the response of American patriots who do understand the Constitution, and therefore do not hope in vain. They know that, under the federal system, even the grossest betrayal of their trust by rogue public officials does not leave the people deprived of a government and denuded of protection. For, in the final analysis, WE THE PEOPLE are the government; and through "well regulated Militia * * * necessary to the security of a free State" in each of the several States WE THE PEOPLE protect themselves.[3693] So, in the ultimate crisis, when a "Form of Government becomes destructive of the[true] ends [of Government]",[3694] THE PEOPLE'S political allegiance and legal obligations do not disappear in the billowing main of anarchy. Rather, they are transferred without hiatus from faithless officials to THE PEOPLE themselves; to THE PEOPLE'S most important constitutional establishments, "the Militia of the several States"; and to whatever new political and economic institutions THE PEOPLE, having secured for themselves the "'[p]olitical power [that] grows out of the barrel of a gun'", may then create in order to correct the problems confronting them.

[3692] Contrast, e.g., T. Barry, Guerilla Days in Ireland, ante note 2599, Chapters XVI and XVII.

[3693] Compare U.S. Const. preamble with amend. II.

[3694] See Declaration of Independence.

To achieve this result under the press of the present crisis, through, THE PEOPLE must act in good time, by revitalizing the Militia immediately if not sooner. But what if they do not?

E. The National stage being set for an open takeover of government by "the military-industrial complex". The oligarchs know that a nationwide, even a worldwide, economic crisis is inescapable. They understand that when they can no longer depend upon the people's good will they must be able to suppress both individual and especially collective manifestations of the people's ill will. To crush dissent and civil unrest as extensive and intensive as can be expected to break out in the course of hyperinflation, depression, or one following immediately upon the other will require vast numbers of "boots on the ground". So the oligarchs will bend every effort to put a first-class *para-*military police-state apparatus into operation in this country as soon as possible. And they may advance far beyond what they have already accomplished before enough Americans awaken and start to resist.

The oligarchs apparently do not appreciate or even seem to be concerned, however, that the *para-*military police-state apparatus they are elaborating will not extricate them from, but will only exacerbate, the situation. It can not, and will not even attempt to, provide the basic economic reforms necessary to mitigate the crisis. Indeed, quite the opposite: The timely adoption by the States of an alternative currency in anticipation of a collapse of the Federal Reserve System is probably the only way under present conditions that America's free markets and State and Local governments can be protected against the worst ravages from hyperinflation of the Federal Reserve's currency. But, as common Americans become increasingly aware of this, and petition their States' legislators to take such action, police-state operatives can be expected to crack down on monetary reformers by labeling them "domestic economic terrorists".[3695] Obviously, though, the application of mere [3695] As of this writing, the oligarchy is still fixated on its traditional tactic of attempting to dissuade the majority of Americans from paying any attention to advocates of monetary reform in general and the adoption of gold and silver as alternative currencies in particular. In this effort, the police-state apparatus has adopted two approaches, which may be called "the soft-sell" and "the hard sell".

---

"The soft sell" is "soft" only in the misleading sense that a "soft-boiled egg" is "soft", but has nonetheless been cooked. Its goal is to boil Americans' brains in propaganda and agitation that extol the Federal Reserve System—and soon, perhaps, some new *supra-*national central bank set up to emit a new *supra-*national currency—while denigrating the usefulness of gold and silver as currency, as investments, or even as hedges against inflation. For decades, throughout the big print and electronic media the oligarchy has sown myriad little echo chambers that have reverberated with a centrally coördinated, carefully concocted, and to the untutored mind even seemingly credible "party line" always antagonistic towards everything even remotely favorable to real monetary reform. The oligarchy is well aware, however, that its standard defamation of critics of the Federal Reserve System as kooky "conspiracy theorists" is starting to fall on deaf ears. For, as the revelation of one grotesque banking and financial scandal follows another, even the veriest dolt can conclude that no "conspiracy theory" involving the Federal Reserve System, the big-time money-manipulators and speculators in New York City, and rogue officials in the General Government is too outlandish to believe. Rather, each of these groups by itself, and all of them together, constitute an on-going conspiracy against the public interest the likes of which has never before been witnessed in this country's history.

So, to maintain its position in the face of this pubic awakening, the oligarchy will increasingly have defamatory labels in the course of an economic collapse will fail to turn Americans on the brink of financial desperation away from alternative currencies. Therefore, if it hopes to salvage its foundering ship of state, the oligarchy will increasingly be compelled systematically to commit "state crimes against limited representative government"—perpetrated, as its spokesmen promise, "through infiltration, disruption, and dismantling of organizations which seek to challenge" the Federal Reserve System.[3696] This will require more and more intervention in the free market by para-military police and other operatives—and therefore more and more recruits for the police-state apparatus. Yet the oligarchs themselves sense that the apparatus cannot be expanded quickly enough to overtake, let alone outpace, the collapse of the economy and consequent alienation of the people from the régime. They are to rely upon "the hard sell". "The hard sell" is predicated on the adage, "Strike the shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered!" A glaring example of this tactic in operation is the recent conviction of one Bernard von NotHaus in the so-called "Liberty Dollar" case in the United States District Court in North Carolina. United States v. von NotHaus, Docket No. 5:09CR27-V (W.D.N.C. 2011). Von NotHaus may not have been an intellectual or political leader in the very first rank of the movement for sound money; but he did represent a distinct threat to the oligarchy's monetary and banking régime. For his "Liberty Dollar" pointed out the essential problem with the present monetary system, and indicated one basic direction in which at least part of the solution could be found—by providing average Americans with a means to avoid the Federal Reserve System's paper currency, in favor of silver and gold, not simply as investments or hedges against inflation, but for use as actual currency in day-to-day transactions. Celebrating its victory in this case, the Department of Justice issued a press release which stated in part:

---

> "Attempts to undermine the legitimate currency of this country are simply a unique form of domestic terrorism," [the] U.S. Attorney * * * said, in announcing the verdict [against Bernard von NotHaus]. "While these forms of anti-government activities do not involve violence, they are every bit as insidious and represent a clear and present danger to the economic stability of this country," she added. "We are determined to meet these threats through infiltration, disruption, and dismantling of organizations which seek to challenge the legitimacy of our democratic form of government."

Press Release of 18 March 2011, originally published on the website of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of Charlotte, North Carolina, at <http://charlotte.fbi.gov/dojpressrel/pressrel11/ce031811.htm>.

These assertions constitute more than idle threats. Rather, they must be taken as calculated acts of "official terrorism" directed at every American who intends not to allow himself to be looted by the Federal Reserve System, its financial controllers and clients in New York City, and its political puppets in the District of Columbia. But exactly what will the Department of Justice attempt to do to those Americans who use gold and silver, in whatever forms, as media of payment for the contracts that Congress has explicitly authorized? See 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (d). What pressure will the Department attempt to apply to those States which adopt alternative media of exchange, consisting of gold and silver in the form of coin or bullion, in reliance, not only on the Constitution, but also on the Supreme Court's favorable ruling on that very point? See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1 and Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 71, 76-78 (1869). And how, in the face of the First Amendment, will it contrive to gag all of the organizations, groups, and individuals which and who simply advocate the use of gold and silver as alternative media of exchange? For, even if the actual use of gold and silver for monetary purposes were illegal, simple advocacy of such use would nevertheless be constitutionally protected. See, e.g., Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234, 253 (2002) ("[t]he mere tendency of speech to encourage unlawful acts is not a sufficient reason for banning it"); and Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969) (advocacy of illegal activity can be punished only when it "is directed to inciting or producing imminent lawless action and is likely to incite or produce such action").

[3696] The contemporary version of this scheme sports the pseudo-scientific name "cognitive infiltration". See David Ray Griffin, Cognitive Infiltration: An Obama Appointee's Plan To Undermine The 9/11 Conspiracy Theory (Northhampton, Massachusetts: Olive Branch Press, 2011). But the techniques are as old as the modus operandi of the East German Stasi, Hitler's Gestapo, Stalin's NKVD, and the Tsarist Okhrana.

caught in a vicious circle: A para-military police state is necessary to contain popular rebellion in the course of the economic crisis—but the employment of police-state tactics will exacerbate America's political as well as economic troubles, which will necessitate further expansion of the police state, which will make the situation even worse—so, although reliance on the police state cannot be avoided in the short run, in the long run it will prove self-defeating. What, then, can the oligarchy do?

1. Revitalization of the Militia unacceptable to the oligarchy. Were the oligarchs patriots, rather than usurpers, tyrants, and even traitors, they would admit that America's only route of escape from the labyrinth of woe into which she has been lured is to revitalize "the Militia of the several States". Even they can recognize that the Constitution mandates "[a] well regulated Militia" as "necessary to the security of a free State", and that "a free State" by its very nature will have a sound economy based upon constitutional money. And they might be willing to make some reasonable concessions on free markets and sound currency, if thereby they could retain a modicum of their political, economic, and social status, powers, and privileges. They justifiably fear, however, that even if the Militia were revitalized circumspectly "from the top down" initially through some Congressional statute, a mass movement could be set in motion among Americans who would demand, develop, and perforce of the Militia usher in "régime change" throughout this country "from the bottom up"—necessarily to the oligarchy's detriment. On the other hand, the oligarchs also recognize that the people could reason backwards from economics to constitutional law: namely, that a sound economy is impossible in any but "a free State", that "a free State" is impossible without "[a] well regulated Militia", and that they are the Militia and therefore the only judges of what should be done to guarantee a sound economy. In that event, mass movements would revitalize the Militia "from the bottom up" in one State after another, without the assistance and quite beyond the control of Congress. This would pose a much greater danger to the oligarchs, because: in principle, the assertion of popular sovereignty "from the bottom up" would absolutely reject the oligarchy's claim to exercise authority "from the top down"; and, in practice, the people would not undertake the effort to revitalize the Militia themselves unless they were utterly fed up with the oligarchy and intent upon, not just deposing, but even demolishing, it.

For these reasons, the oligarchs must set into place their anti-Militia scheme—a centralized para-military police-state apparatus—before events move beyond their control. This requires that: (i) The very concept of "Militia" must be derided, denounced, and demonized in the big media in every possible way, so that next to no one will ever think of "Militia" as an acceptable solution to any problem besetting America—a scheme which has met with no little success in "the marketplace of ideas" over the last several decades. And (ii) "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" must be truncated to the maximum extent, even to extinction, so that those who do think about "Militia" in a favorable way will find themselves stripped of the implements necessary to turn their thoughts into actions—a scheme which has recently come to fruition in the Supreme Court of the United States.[3697]

Such apparent good fortune does not, however, solve the oligarchs' most pressing problem of being unable to deploy "boots on the ground" in their police-state apparatus sufficient in numbers to secure their own position in the face of mass revulsion and rebellion. So, having cut themselves off from the Militia, and therefore from WE THE PEOPLE, the oligarchs have turned to the Armed Forces for assistance.

2. The oligarchy's reliance on the Armed Forces even more dangerous than it is necessary. The ever-mounting emphasis by officials in the Department of Homeland Security on involvement of the Armed Forces in domestic police operations under color of "the war on terrorism" is certainly necessary—for the oligarchy. For no para-military forces the DHS could hope to deploy—even drawing upon all State and Local police as well as the armed civilian agencies of the General Government—could possibly deal with the chaos that would rampage throughout the United States upon an hyperinflationary explosion of the Federal Reserve System. The bright bulbs in the "homeland-security" bureaucracy's lamps have been unable to illuminate, however, the danger that reliance on the Armed Forces poses to the oligarchy itself—ironically, a danger arguably greater than it poses to WE THE PEOPLE.

a. America's Armed Forces are definitely paying ever-closer attention to the possibilities that: (i) a major economic crisis could seriously undermine "the military-industrial complex"; (ii) in such circumstances rogue officials in the General Government would surely attempt to take control of the entire National economy on the ground that "[t]he domestic industrial and technological base is the foundation for national defense preparedness";[3698] and (iii) resistance from common Americans to the imposition of a fully fascistic system of production throughout this country, particularly with respect to its adverse effects on their basic civil liberties and standards of living, could render unavoidable the widespread deployment of the Armed Forces for domestic "peacekeeping". One recent study, for instance, explained that

> [w]idespread civil violence inside the United States would force the defense establishment to reorient priorities in extremis to defend basic domestic order and security. * * * [U]nforeseen economic collapse, loss > of functioning political and legal order, purposeful domestic resistance or insurgency * * * are all paths to disruptive domestic shock.

---

[3697] See ante, at 1095-1103.

[3698] See Executive Order No. 13603, National Defense Resources Preparedness (16 March 2012), § 102, 77 Federal Register 16651, 16651 (22 March 2012).

>
> * * * [The Department of Defense] might be forced by circumstances to put its broad resources at the disposal of civil authorities to contain and reverse violent threats to domestic tranquility. Under the most extreme circumstances, this might include the use of military force against hostile groups inside the United States. Further, [the Department of Defense] would be, by necessity, an essential enabling hub for the continuity of political authority in a multi-state or nationwide civil conflict or disturbance.
>
> A whole host of long-standing defense conventions would be severely tested. Under these conditions and at their most violent extreme, civilian authorities, on advice of the defense establishment, would need to rapidly determine the parameters defining the legitimate use of military force inside the United States. Further still, the whole concept of conflict termination and/or transition to the primacy of civilian security institutions would be uncharted ground.[3699]

On a small canvas, this passage paints a remarkably comprehensive picture of a truly catastrophic situation, unprecedented in the history of the United States. In light of the extensive record of preparations by the Armed Forces for intervention in domestic civil disturbances and disorders, one senses that it is not intended as a sketch for a mere "thought experiment", either.[3700] Plainly, with the benefit of all of their sources of intelligence, the Armed Forces do not envision "unforeseen economic collapse, loss of functioning political and legal order, [and] purposeful domestic resistance or insurgency" as simply theoretical "paths to disruptive domestic shock", but rather as sequential, fully integrated steps in a

---

[3699] Nathan Freier, Strategic Studies Institute of the United States Army War College, Known Unknowns: Unconventional "Strategic Shocks" in Defense Strategy Development (November, 2008), at 32-33.

[3700] For example—1968: Department of the Army Civil Disturbance Plan (10 September 1968) [colloquially known as "Garden Plot"] ("This plan provides guidelines for development of plans to support civil disturbance operations by the Military Services, unified commands, and other DOD [i.e., Department of Defense] components."); 1973: Department of the Army Civil Disturbance Plan (17 May 1973); 1978: Department of the Army Civil Disturbance Plan (3 August 1978); 1991: Department of Defense Civil Disturbance Plan (15 February 1991); 2006: United States Northern Command Concept Plan 2501-05, Defense Support of Civil Authorities (8 May 2006); 2007: Joint Chiefs of Staff, Joint Publication No. 3-28, Civil Support (14 September 2007) ("This publication * * * sets forth joint doctrine to govern the activities and performance of the Armed Forces of the United States in civil support operations and provides the doctrinal basis for interagency coordination during domestic civil support operations."); 2009: United States Northern Command Concept of Operations Plan (CON PLAN) 3591-09, Response to Pandemic Influenza (13 August 2009); 2011: Defense Support of Civil Authorities, Tactical Level Commander and Staff Tool Kit, GTA 90-01-020 (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, [no date of publication given, but to expire on 30 January 2012]).

See generally, e.g., the overviews presented in Statement of General Victor E. Renuart, Jr., USAF, Commander, United States Northern Command and North American Aerospace Defense Command, before the Senate Armed Services Committee (6 March 2008); and U.S. Northern Command Overview, National DSCA [Defense Support of Civil Authorities] Workshop, Henderson, Nevada (3 March 2009).

process of societal destruction that is no longer in any sense "[u]nforeseen", but instead is actually being observed in its initial stages.

After this, however, the picture blurs. The most revealing aspect of the rest of this material is its intriguingly equivocal character:

• The high commands in the Armed Forces undoubtedly have a good idea as to who is responsible for the present "economic collapse". Surely they are aware that the fault lies with the oligarchy, not the American people. The contrary contention that the people are equally or more to blame because they elected various rogues to public office is inadmissible. First, even if true majorities of the voters, in honest elections, chose those individuals, they did not do so with the understanding that, once elected, the candidates would turn rogue and destroy America's economy. Second, even if true majorities chose those individuals for the very purpose of adopting destructive economic policies, WE THE PEOPLE would not be estopped to complain. For, in that case, those rogue officials would be serving the interests, not of society as a whole, but of a mere faction—that is, "a number of citizens, whether amounting to *a majority * * * of the whole*, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, *adverse * * * to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community*".[3701]

• Moreover, the Armed Forces surely realize that any "loss of functioning political and legal order" as it now exists threatens the oligarchs with serious diminution of the political and economic power, personal wealth, and social status which they (the oligarchs) now enjoy, but of which they would be deprived under a strictly constitutional "political and legal order". With all of that at stake, "state crimes against limited representative government" cannot be excluded from the oligarchs' strategy and tactics for survival. Indeed, the commission of such crimes has to be taken as a certainty, because: (i) The oligarchs have already committed numerous "state crimes against limited representative government" in order to arrive at this point in their careers, and therefore have nothing to lose by committing more. And (ii) the oligarchs are at this very moment claiming the authority to commit even more serious crimes under color of the purported powers catalogued above.[3702] Predictably, when the time comes, the oligarchs will order the Armed Forces to participate in, to facilitate, or at a minimum to acquiesce in these crimes. But will the Armed Forces comply?

• "[I]n a multi-state or nationwide civil conflict or disturbance", exactly what "continuity of political authority" would the Armed Forces seek to preserve? No doubt, that would depend upon the substance and the legitimacy of the particular "authority" being claimed, and by whom. By itself, though, the mere description of the situation as a "civil conflict or disturbance" could not compel the conclusion that the oligarchs' claims should necessarily prevail. That a "civil conflict or disturbance" is raging does not indicate which side is in the right. Labels can never substitute for analysis. One must investigate and contrast the ends the contending parties are seeking and the means they are employing. "Hostile groups within the United States" might be arrayed in opposition to homicidal usurpers and tyrants, so that those groups' hostility—even if it found expression in a widespread resort to arms—would be perfectly justified. A "purposeful domestic resistance or insurgency" could have as its goal the restoration of constitutional government, and therefore be perfectly lawful. Specifically, the oligarchs might be seen as mounting a treasonous "domestic * * * insurgency" themselves from within and through the governmental apparatus they have usurped and perverted to criminal purposes;[3703] whereas WE THE PEOPLE would be conducting legitimate "resistance" from outside the apparatus, but with their feet firmly planted on the more secure foundation of popular sovereignty under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". The circumstances might even establish that "a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object [had finally] evince[d] a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism", such that "it is the[People's] right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security".[3704]

---

[3701] The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison) (emphasis supplied).

[3702] See ante, at 1561-1631.

• Finally, who would be authorized definitively to decide who was right and who was wrong? The oligarchs? The Armed Forces? Or WE THE PEOPLE? Constitutionally, the answer must come from THE PEOPLE, because it can come from no one else. For, as THE PEOPLE'S mere agents, the Armed Forces could never provide an answer that would bind their principals. And as THE PEOPLE'S antagonists, the oligarchs should never be suffered to suggest any answer whatsoever.

b. Howsoever these matters might be resolved in the hurly-burly of the legal and political confusion that would arise in the course of a National economic crisis, beyond question is that, once the Armed Forces did "put [their] broad resources at the disposal of civil authorities to contain and reverse violent threats to domestic tranquility", "civilian authorities, on advice of the defense establishment, would need to rapidly determine the parameters defining the legitimate use of military force inside the United States", and "the whole concept of conflict termination and/or transition to the primacy of civilian security institutions would be uncharted ground". So, where "violent threats to domestic tranquility" were so severe that the Armed [3703] See, e.g., Texas v. White, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 700, 718-726 (1868); Thorington v. Smith, 75 U.S. (8 Wallace) 1, 7-11 (1869); Hanauer v. Doane, 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 342, 347 (1871); Sprott v. United States, 87 U.S. (20 Wallace) 459, 464-465 (1875).

---

[3704] Declaration of Independence.

Forces had to be deployed to quell them, civilian authorities would be effectively under the Armed Forces' tutelage and at their mercy. In the final analysis, the Armed Forces would "determin[e] the parameters defining the legitimate use of military force inside the United States"; and the Armed Forces would decide when it was appropriate to "transition to the primacy of civilian security institutions". As a practical matter, then, "the standing army" would control the civilian authorities, turning upside-down the fundamental constitutional principle that "the military power shall always be held in an exact subordination to the civil authority, and be governed by it".[3705]

(1) This should hardly surprise anyone, because the lesson History teaches, but which the deep thinkers in the District of Columbia's "homeland-security" bureaucracy have not absorbed, is that once politicians (in any country) have turned to their Armed Forces to put a lid on domestic turmoil erupting out of failed economic and social policies, the Armed Forces quickly conclude that they are able and even entitled to become political powers in their own right, on their own initiative, on their own terms, and in their own interests. After all, why should the Armed Forces not propose, control, or even dictate the policies and other decisions civilian officials make concerning their deployment, particularly when those officials' incompetence or corruption has brought about the domestic disturbances the Armed Forces' members are expected to risk their lives to quell? Then, why should the Armed Forces themselves not promulgate, or at least oversee, policies on all economic and social matters in the first place? Could they fail any more miserably than have civilian officials? And finally, why should the Armed Forces not select, or at least exercise a veto over the selection of, the civilian leadership, so as to forefend future blunders by imbeciles who have somehow insinuated themselves into top positions in the government?

Once they had been called in as "domestic peacekeepers", the Armed Forces would be uniquely positioned to take over politically, because they could correctly point to the civilian leadership as the cause of the chaos, thereby delegitimizing and even demonizing that leadership—both in its present embodiment in certain individuals, and in principle altogether. Indeed, essentially all of the top officials in the General Government, and the major personalities in the "two" political parties and other leadership groups, institutions, and structures, whether in the sphere of National politics or in the upper echelons of the economy, could easily be convicted in the court of public opinion, because once the country had come under some variety of "martial law" the only "official" position permitted to be aired would be the one that had passed the Armed Forces' censorship. And with that mass of propaganda as a base, real convictions by "military commissions" of the most despised among the old leadership could easily follow. Real convictions might even need to follow, in order to convince an enraged populace that the Armed Forces seriously intended to stamp out and punish civilian political incompetence, corruption, and criminality once and for all. Those who imagine that this could never transpire in the United States should recall that the Ceauşescus never foresaw their own demise at Târgovişte, either, and that two of the five charges leveled against them at their drumhead trial before a military tribunal were sabotage of Romania's national economy and the incitement of armed attacks against the Romanian people by the armed forces and the secret police.[3706]

---

[3705] CONSTITUTION OF MASSACHUSETTS (1780), PART THE FIRST, A DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS OF THE INHABITANTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Article XVII, in THE FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONS, ante note 1157, PART I, at 959.

(2) Whatever the level of their true support among the people, were the Armed Forces deployed to suppress widespread civil unrest emanating from a major breakdown of the economy, they would have a compelling institutional incentive of their own to maintain themselves in the foremost positions of political and economic leadership thereafter: namely, securing the continued viability of this country's gargantuan "military-industrial complex". For the effectiveness of the Armed Forces, and therefore the credibility of their newly assumed rôle as guardians of the public weal, would depend upon the smooth functioning of that complex.

In this, of course, the Armed Forces would inevitably command the support of the two other sides of the complex's "iron triangle": namely, the industrialists and the workers who, directly or indirectly, would constitute and derive incomes and other benefits from the complex. And as the complex expanded—which it doubtlessly would, if only in response to the increasingly diverse tasks the Armed Forces would have to perform as "domestic peacekeepers"—more and more industrialists and workers in other areas of production and services would become to significant degrees economically dependent upon, and therefore politically supportive of, the complex's smooth functioning, and for that reason would favor continued tight control by the Armed Forces over the domestic governmental apparatus.[3707] So that, at length, most of the domestic economy would be at least quasi-militarized in what would be the ultimate "warfare-welfare state"—with the overwhelming emphasis on "warfare", because the supposed "welfare" of everyone involved in the political and economic systems would be tied inextricably to the power of the Armed Forces. Of course, as has proven true everywhere else, having no particular training in economics or statecraft, politicized Armed Forces in this country would be unable to solve the underlying economic and social problems that rationalized their politicization in the first place. Their incompetence would not discourage them from trying, however. And their power would dissuade most everyone else from suggesting that it should.

---

[3706] See Victor Sebestyen, Revolution 1989: The Fall of the Soviet Empire (New York, New York: Pantheon Books, 2009), at 1-6, 380-400.

[3707] Under these circumstances, one could expect the Armed Forces to rely on organized labor as their main political prop amongst the citizenry, in a North American version of the authoritarian populism installed in Argentina under Juan Perón. See, e.g., Joseph A. Page, Perón: A Biography (New York, New York: Random House, Inc., 1983), Chapters 20 and 25.

(3) Although initially deployed to protect the oligarchy from a "purposeful domestic resistance or insurgency" emanating from the people themselves, the Armed Forces might end up sympathizing with the people in a paternalistic way, and might change sides. If the Armed Forces' high commands were constitutionally minded, they would realize that the oligarchs were aggressively mounting the "purposeful domestic * * * insurgency", and that the people were engaged in justifiable defensive "resistance". Even if not composed of self-conscious constitutionalists, and even if ignorant of the precept that national armies should always "Serve the People" by being "wholly dedicated to the liberation of the people and work[ing] entirely in the people's interest",[3708] the Armed Forces' high commands could be expected to concern themselves first and foremost with the interests of the United States that advance "the military-industrial complex" and thereby provide the people with significant protection—rather than the narrow "globalist" interests with which for entirely self-serving reasons the oligarchy has historically concerned itself, protection of the people be damned. In either event, the oligarchy's involvement of the Armed Forces would prove far more dangerous to the oligarchs than to the people. The people would be denied many of the benefits of "a free State"; but the oligarchs would stand to lose everything.

c. So, if in the course of an "economic collapse" and the "loss of functioning political and legal order" the only practical choice for common Americans were between their own repression by the oligarchy through the Armed Forces, and suppression of the oligarchy and control of the country by the Armed Forces under some variety of "martial law", many Americans could be expected to acquiesce, and perhaps even welcome, the latter. For: (i) The Armed Forces' ascension to power would appear to provide the only way that a modicum of economic order and social peace could be restored. (ii) The Armed Forces would still generally be seen as truly "American" in composition, attitudes, goals, and methods—as opposed to the oligarchs, who would be recognized as unpatriotic "globalists". (iii) The Armed Forces would present themselves as embodying popular aspirations and serving popular needs—governing on behalf of the great mass of working- and middle-class people, rather than for the benefit of parasitic special interests. And (iv) the Armed Forces' intervention would be excused as fundamentally "democratic", because most people would at least tacitly support it, in preference to the chaos it had replaced. On the other side, only a few die-hard constitutionalists would complain—until they were silenced—that: (v) The Armed Forces' overthrow of the oligarchs' police-state apparatus did not eliminate oppression of Americans, but merely changed its source and character from ostensibly "civilian" to frankly military. (vi) The Armed Forces' imposition of "martial law" was patently illegal.[3709] (vii) The Armed Forces and the rest of "the military-industrial complex" were themselves special interests of the most dangerous sort. And, (viii) even apparent popular approval of the Armed Forces' takeover reflected no more than that many Americans were willing to embrace what appeared to be "the lesser of two evils" in order to rid themselves of the oligarchy.

---

[3708] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 172.

Admittedly, no one can predict with apodictic certainty whether, as the result of an "economic collapse, loss of functioning political and legal order, [and] purposeful domestic resistance or insurgency", the oligarchs' burgeoning ostensibly civilian but para-military police state will coöpt the Armed Forces as its "enforcers"; or whether the Armed Forces will coöpt the police state as a front-group and transmission-belt in order to manipulate the governmental apparatus from behind a "civilian" mask; or whether the Armed Forces will simply push aside the police state altogether, and rule this country openly under color of what they imagine to be their own authority. The outcome will depend upon the particular figures in positions of political and military leadership at the time. What cannot be doubted, however, is that the dénouement will conform to Justice Jackson's prediction that "[e]very repetition [of a bad principle] imbeds the principle more deeply in our law and thinking and expands it to new purposes"[3710]—none of them salutary. The only way to forfend the problem would be for the Armed Forces unequivocally to reject all of these bad principles now, by putting their collective foot down against any participation in domestic police-state operations, and by putting their full influence behind immediate revitalization of the Militia.

[3709] See post, Chapter 48.

[3710] Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 246 (1944) (dissenting opinion).

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

Outside of a zone of actual military combat operations, the only form of "martial law" applicable to civilians which is constitutionally allowable within America arises when "the Militia of the several States" are "call[ed] forth * * * to execute the Laws of the Union" or the laws of their States.

A National para-military police state which claims extraordinary powers under color of "the law of war" to strip Americans of the basic protections guaranteed by the Constitution (and especially the Bill of Rights) is, in fact, asserting a license to impose potentially unlimited "martial law" on this country, effectively setting aside, superseding, or simply disregarding the Constitution in part or as a whole for as long as the police state's chief operatives unilaterally assert that some ersatz "war" or other "national emergency" persists—or, worse yet, whenever those operatives themselves threaten to launch some "preëmptive" or "preventive war" of outright aggression, or to create or conjure up some other dire "emergency" that they can somehow characterize, metaphorically or even mystically, as "war". Unfortunately, all too many Americans assume that public officials, in both the General Government and the States, can invoke "martial law" in this sense (and, indeed, can embroil this country in ersatz "wars" of all sorts) at any time they see fit to declare that circumstances constitute a "national emergency"—and even if they themselves have intentionally brought those circumstances into being specifically for that purpose. Nothing provides a foundation for and furthers the expansion of a para-military police state more than this belief. And no belief about the Constitution is more obviously false.

In legal analysis, definitions of terms make all the difference. And "martial law" can be defined in at least four ways:

A. "Martial law" to govern "the land and naval Forces" of the United States and "the Militia of the several States". "Martial law" fairly describes the laws which Congress may enact specifically for the day-to-day governance of the Armed Forces and "the Militia of the several States". This kind of "martial law" is plainly legitimate, because the Constitution delegates to Congress the powers "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces [of the United States]" and "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia of the several States] as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress".[3711] With respect to "the land and naval Forces", such "martial law" applies at all times. With respect to the Militia, it applies only when they have been "call[ed] forth * * * to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3712] The term "martial law" could also fairly apply to the laws enacted by the several States for the governance of their Militia when the latter are not "employed in the Service of the United States" but are on active duty on behalf of their States, and for such "Troops, or Ships of War" as the States may "keep" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" "in time of Peace" or may bring into the field in time of "War" or in order to "engage in War" when they are "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3713] With respect to everyone else in all other pursuits of life, though, including Militiamen not in actual service at the time, the original Constitution itself makes pellucid that such "martial law" applies not at all.

This absolute separation the Fifth Amendment confirms: "No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger". The "martial law" which may (but need not necessarily) dispense with "Grand Jur[ies]", applies only to "the land and naval forces" of both the United States and of the several States at all times,[3714] and to the Militia in time of "War" (for instance, "repel[ling] Invasions") or "public danger" (for instance, "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union" and of the States, and "suppress[ing] Insurrections" and other "domestic Violence")[3715]—and otherwise to no one else.

As clear-cut as this dichotomy is, not to describe these situations as exemplifying or involving "martial law" at all would be preferable. Instead, they should be described with particularity as, say, "rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" of the United States, "rules for governing part of the Militia of the several States when in the service of the United States", "rules for governing the Militia of the several States when not in the service of the United States", and "rules for the government of State 'Troops' and 'Ships of War'". Then their applications only to individuals in the Armed Forces of the United States and of the several States (at all times and everywhere) and in the Militia (when "call[ed] forth" either in extraordinary situations "in the Service of the United States" or in the normal course of events on behalf of their particular [3711] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 14 and 16. "[T]he land and naval Forces [of the United States]", of course, are synonymous with "the Army and Navy of the United States". U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1. See also U.S. Const. amend. V.

---

[3712] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3713] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3714] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14 and § 10, cl. 3 with amend. V.

[3715] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16; art. I, § 10, cl. 3; and art. IV, § 4 with amend. V.

States)—and their inapplicability to anyone else at any time, anywhere, for any reason—would immediately and always be beyond cavil.

B. "Martial law" in the zone of actual military combat operations. The term "martial law" may also denote the direct control of civilians by the regular Armed Forces of the United States or the "Troops, of Ships of War" of the States operating in those territories where civilians are present, but no effective civilian government exists, and therefore friendly military personnel are the only "peacekeepers" available.

1. According to the most common definition, "[m]artial law is the law of necessity in the actual presence of war".[3716] For example, during a true "War" (as opposed to some bastard political contrivance such as "the war on terrorism"), in the front lines and near-by rear echelons where combat is taking or may recently have taken place, as well as in locations in the immediate vicinity where no actual fighting with an enemy may be going on but the civilian authorities have been killed, incapacitated, driven out, or otherwise rendered impotent as a consequence of previous fighting, as a practical matter military personnel may be the only ones capable in fact of enforcing any sort of "law" at all. The legal justification for them to impose "martial law" then becomes the question.

Plainly, one cannot defend the definition that "[m]artial law is the law of necessity in the actual presence of war" simply by recourse to such maxims as "quod cogit necessitas defendit",[3717] "necessitas legem vincit",[3718] "necessitas sub lege non continetur quia quod alias non licitum licitum facit",[3719] and ultimately "necessitas non habet legem".[3720] For these supply only rhetorical avenues for evasion of the question. For example, under the strictures of "martial law", death may be the penalty for certain transgressions. Under *pre-*constitutional English law, homicide was justifiable if it was

> [S]UCH as is owning to some unavoidable necessity * * * . As, for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death, who hath forfeited his life by the laws and verdict of his country. This is an act of necessity, and even of civil duty; and therefore not only justifiable, but commendable where the law requires it. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable * * * .

[3716] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875) (emphasis supplied).

[3717] "Necessity defends that which it compels". See Black's Law Dictionary, ante note 368, at 1182.

[3718] "Necessity masters the law". See id.

[3719] "Necessity is not restrained under the rule of law because it makes lawful that which otherwise is not lawful." See id.

[3720] "Necessity has no law"; or, figuratively, "necessity needs no law". See id.

> AGAIN: in some cases homicide is justifiable, rather by the permission, than by the absolute command of the law: either for the advancement of public justice * * * ; or, in such instances where it is committed for the prevention of some atrocious crime, which cannot otherwise be avoided. * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [S]uch homicide, as is committed for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, is justifiable by the law of nature; and also by the Law of England[.][3721]

Neither "the law of nature" nor "the Law of England", however, established the Armed Forces of the United States or the States, or required that they be established. To be sure, the Armed Forces may not act in any manner that contradicts "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" which underlie the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. But, on the other hand, nothing compels, and common sense rejects, the conclusion that the Armed Forces are necessarily authorized to act in every possible way that happens to be consistent with those "Laws". So, to find a justification for "martial law" administered by the Armed Forces, one must search this country's positive laws for some specific permission. That Congress or a State's legislature might have enacted a statute licensing "the land and naval Forces" of the United States or the State's "Troops, or Ships of War" to impose "martial law" in some circumstances does not conclude the matter, though, because the constitutional basis for such a statute always remains at issue. But consideration of some basic constitutional principles can settle the matter.

If the Armed Forces are, in fact, the only institutions capable of enforcing "law" in some Locality, then not only must the civilian authorities have been effectively eradicated, but the Local Militia must have been destroyed or dispersed as well. Now, presumably, the personnel in the Armed Forces on the scene would be members of some "well regulated Militia" if they were not enlisted in the Armed Forces. Their faithful performance of duty in the Armed Forces justifies their exemptions from enrollment in the Militia—in effect, service in the Armed Forces being for them the equivalent of service in the Militia. Therefore, in the absence of any Militia in the affected Locality, the personnel in the Armed Forces could fairly be deemed to be performing the functions of the Militia, in the place of the Militia, and (if they are to be effective) with powers equivalent to those the Militia normally exercise. The very first constitutional responsibility of the Militia is "to execute the Laws of the Union".[3722] So, standing in the shoes of the Militia in such a situation, [3721] W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 178-180 (footnote omitted).

---

[3722] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

the personnel of the Armed Forces would be implicitly invested with that power. A proper Congressional statute providing for "martial law"—that is, the "law" to be executed by the Armed Forces in such an extremity—would be one of "the Laws of the Union" that the Constitution mandates should be "execute[d]". Similarly for a State's statute providing for "martial law" to be executed by her "Troops, or Ships of War". For that reason, the personnel of the Armed Forces of the United States or of that State would be justified in "execut[ing]" such "martial law" in the affected Locality—until the Militiamen in that Locality were sufficiently reformed to take over, or Militiamen from other jurisdictions reinforced them, or the Local civilian authorities were restored to office; at which point the Armed Forces could no longer claim to be acting in the place of either the Militia or those authorities, and the application of "martial law" to civilians would have to terminate.

This analysis provides a justification for "martial law", in the very specific sense of "the law administered by the Armed Forces in zones of actual military operations because of the exclusion by exigent circumstances of any other form of law", without concluding that such "martial law" as applied to civilians should exclude, or substitute for, or even be significantly different in substance from normal civilian law. Because, of course, there need be little or no divergence between such "martial law" and civilian law in that situation. For instance, it may easily transpire that, within or contiguous to a zone of actual combat, notwithstanding interference by or the constant threat of hostilities, courageous civilian officials can still exercise authority sufficient to negate any necessity for the imposition of "martial law" to the exclusion of civilian law. Even while the battle of Leyte opened the liberation of the Philippines in 1944, General MacArthur restored constitutional civil government to Filipinos by Filipinos on the part of the island the Americans had just cleared of Japanese; then, after the invasion at Inchon and the liberation of Seoul in 1950, while intense fighting still raged against the North Koreans, he restored civil government to South Korea.[3723] Indeed, when Germany faced invasion at the height of World War II, even Adolf Hitler recognized that, where civilian and political officials continued to function in zones of actual military operations, "martial law" should be subordinated to or exercised in coöperation with those officials.[3724] That such polar opposites as MacArthur and Hitler both arrived at the conclusion that conditions which might justify "martial law" do not always therefore provide grounds for excluding civilian law, or even subordinating it to "martial law", establishes the general validity of that judgment.

---

[3723] See General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, Reminiscenses (New York, New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1964), at 234-235, 354-356; William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur, 1880-1964 (New York, New York: Dell Publishing, 1978), at 694. In occupied Japan, MacArthur went further than that, lifting all restrictions on civil rights, and then assisting the Japanese in the adoption of a new constitution. Reminiscenses, ante, at 288-289, 298-304.

[3724] Decree of the Führer on the exercise of command in an area of operations within the Reich (13 July 1944), in Blitzkreig to Defeat: Hitler's War Directives, 1939-1945, H.R. Trevor-Roper, Editor (New York, New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., 1964), at 167-168; Decree of the Führer on co-operation between the Party and the Armed Forces in an area of operations within the Reich (13 July 1944), in id. at 169; Second decree of the Führer on co-operation between the Party and the Armed Forces in an area of operations within the Reich, dated 19th September 1944, in id. at 198; Second Decree of the Führer on powers of command in an area of operations within the Reich, dated 20th September 1944, in id. at 199-200.

Should hostilities result in the enforced absence of Local officials, though, the blame cannot rest upon the civilian community; and therefore the members of that community should not suffer the loss of their legal rights on that account. To be sure, no one would doubt that crimes such as espionage, sabotage, banditry, arson, looting, and otherwise terrorizing civilians would need to be detected and suppressed as quickly as possible—which might justify summary proceedings by Armed Forces' personnel in some instances. (For instance, in extreme cases of civil unrest and domestic violence, the shooting of arsonists or looters on sight might be the only effective procedure under the circumstances.) But in most cases of such crimes, let alone all others, the military police could perform the functions of detection, apprehension, and detention of suspects in keeping with the procedures and safeguards of civilian law. Even were the courts in the immediate vicinity temporarily closed perforce of hostilities from time to time, the Armed Forces could simply hold for trial, until the courts reopened, any persons whom the military police arrested, or transfer those detainees to civilian authorities in other areas in which regular judicial proceedings could seasonably be had. That is, "martial law" would closely approximate civilian law, with the exception that when necessary it would be put into effect in the first instance by military police or other soldiers, because they would be the only personnel then available to enforce any laws. This would be in keeping with the fundamental political axiom of "a free state" that, whenever possible, "the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power"[3725]—not in the sense that civilian officials actually govern military personnel at all times (because in the situation posited no civilian officials would be at hand to do so), but in the sense that civilian law should always set the standards for military conduct.

A fortiori, when a true "War" is being waged, "martial law" (even in the limited sense of largely civilian law administered by the Armed Forces) cannot automatically be extended over territory not actually part of the Armed Forces' legitimate theater of military operations. For example, the Armed Forces may not attempt to impose "martial law" on civilians as the consequence of the Armed Forces' mere presence on the scene—say, with combat units passing through some peaceful Locale on the way to the front, or with rear-echelon units temporarily operating bases for replacements, depots for storing supplies and repairing equipment, or field hospitals and other medical facilities there.

[3725] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

2. More problematic yet is the rôle, if any, of "martial law" (in the sense being discussed here) after some huge natural disaster, mammoth industrial accident, or devastating attack by "terrorists" across a wide area in which every important arm of the civilian administration has been rendered inoperative. The usual apology offered for "martial law" in these cases is not the presence of "War[fare]" (although these days any attack by anyone who can be labeled a "terrorist" is immediately catalogued as an action in "the war on terrorism"), but instead that, the enforcement of civilian law being temporarily impossible, some other form of "law and order" must immediately be established and enforced for the benefit of otherwise helpless civilians who cannot be evacuated from the zone of danger. This, however, begs certain important preliminary questions, such as: If Armed Forces' personnel are already on the scene, how did they survive the event which created the emergency? And if they survived in a condition which allowed them to take over enforcement of the law, did not Local Militiamen in numbers sufficient for that purpose also survive? Or, if the Armed Forces' personnel are to be brought in from some other Locale only after the event, why cannot Militiamen, or even temporary civilian officials, be brought in, too, thereby obviating any need for involvement of the Armed Forces at all, or in the capacity of the exclusive or even primary enforcers of "law and order"? Or, if so many civilians are present in the area that a major relief effort is necessary, why are they not prepared to function as Militiamen in "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union" as well as State and Local laws? And, if they are, why would it not be better simply to provide them with whatever equipment and supplies they need to do so?

In any event, even if involvement of the Armed Forces were, for whatever reason, deemed unavoidable in some such situations, nothing would preclude Congress from exercising its power "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces"[3726] in compliance with the principle that "the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power",[3727] so as to require that, when operating in any "police" capacity within any part of the United States not in fact within an active zone of military combat during an actual "War", the Armed Forces must adhere to State and Local law to the selfsame degree that State and Local police do, for at least as long as the Local courts remain open,[3728] and must always submit to supervision by, and coördinate their actions with, whatever other civil authorities remain on the scene. Neither would anything preclude Congress from requiring Armed Forces' personnel who commit offenses that are punishable by civilian law from being tried by civilian

---

[3726] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14.

[3727] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3728] See Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 2, 127 (1866). See also O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258, 273-274 (1969).

courts or made subject to civilian punishments.[3729] Similarly, for the States' legislatures with respect to the States' own "Troops, or Ships of War".

3. In no case should the Armed Forces of either the United States or of the several States ever be suffered to evade restrictions on their employment of "martial law" in domestic venues by peremptorily shutting down the Local courts and refusing to turn nonmilitary prisoners over to civilian custodians.[3730] And Congress labors under a constitutional duty to provide as much, because: (i) If any species of "martial law" is valid at all, it must be among "the Laws of the Union". (ii) Only "the Militia of the several States"—of which State and Local police forces should be integral parts, upon proper revitalization of the Militia[3731]—enjoy the explicit constitutional authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union" when "call[ed] forth" for that purpose by Congress.[3732] Therefore, (iii) the Armed Forces may exercise no authority equivalent to the Militia's in any Locality unless circumstances have precluded the Militia from being "call[ed] forth". But such circumstances would not obtain unless almost all of the civilian population in that Locality had been wiped out, incapacitated, or driven away, and sufficient numbers of Militiamen could not be summoned from other Localities; or unless and until the Militia had been "call[ed] forth" from whatever Locality and had actually failed for whatever reason "to execute the Laws". Again, the same considerations apply to each State's legislature with respect to restricting the employment of the State's own "Troops, or Ships of War".

C. "Martial law" imposed as the result of a takeover of the government by rogue Armed Forces. The term "martial law" can also denote the set of dictates under color of which rogue personnel in the Armed Forces might purport to exercise outright control over some area in which they have simply suppressed the Local authorities and supplanted the apparatus of civilian government under the threat of main force. If a State or the whole of the United States were involved in such usurpation, the event might be styled a coup d'état, a Putsch, or a golpe. If Americans had a proper understanding of, and were to determined to enforce, constitutional limits on the power to draft individuals into military service, they

---

[3729] See, e.g., An Act for enrolling and calling out the national Forces, and for other Purposes, Act of 3 March 1863, CHAP. LXXV, § 30, 12 Stat. 731, 736 (emphasis supplied): "That in time of war, insurrection, or rebellion, murder, assault and battery with an intent to kill, manslaughter, mayhem, wounding by shooting or stabbing with an intent to commit murder, robbery, arson, burglary, rape, assault and battery with an intent to commit rape, and larceny, shall be punishable by the sentence of a general court-martial or military commission, when committed by persons who are in the military service of the United States, and subject to the articles of war; and the punishments for such offences shall never be less than those inflicted by the laws of the state, territory, or district in which they may have been committed." would not need to fear "martial law" in the sense of "military dictatorship", because neither "the military-industrial complex" as it now exists nor any reasonably conceivable National para-military police-state apparatus could impress enough cannon fodder into the ranks of the Armed Forces or "law-enforcement agencies" to overawe "the Militia of the several States" and set up such a régime.[3733] In the absence of revitalized Militia, however, the danger needs to be carefully assessed.

[3730] See Duncan v. Kahanamoku, 327 U.S. 304, 313-324 (1946); Sterling v. Constantin, 287 U.S. 378, 400-401 (1932).

[3731] See ante, at 327-328, 1135-1138, 1194-1202, 1276-1277, 1292-1293, and 1482-1488.

[3732] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

1. Whether or not personnel of the Armed Forces affect to follow some specific "code of military justice", "martial law" (in the sense under consideration here) purports to override, set aside, or suspend the Constitution and all of the other "Laws of the Union", as well as of "the several States" and their Localities, and to substitute therefor the orders of military officers and tribunals. And any civilian who dares to violate these orders—even if he is acting pursuant to the Constitution and other "Laws of the Union" or of a particular State or Locality—may be punished, perhaps unto death itself. Although many Americans might acquiesce in "martial law" of this variety if they imagined that it were the only available response to an actual natural disaster, economic crisis, or other political or social upheaval of severe magnitude, many others justifiably fear that rogue public officials bent on usurpation and tyranny, on the pretext of some phony "emergency" they themselves have created, allowed to happen, or exacerbated, will deploy the Armed Forces along with para-militarized State and Local police throughout the United States for the purpose, not of protecting, but rather of oppressing, common Americans. Obviously, neither public officials nor officers of the Armed Forces can rationalize their imposition of "martial law" in some geographical area by themselves destroying, driving out, or otherwise suppressing civilian authorities on the claim of some supposed "emergency" that does not really exist at all, that has been ginned up especially for the purpose, that has been blown wildly out of proportion, or that in any event does not prevent the civilian authorities from functioning. Once the straitjacket of "martial law" has been fastened on a community, however, a real "emergency" will exist—not least of all in the inability of civilian authorities and residents to resist the oppressors occupying their territory. So "martial law" in this sense can amount to a self-fulfilling prophecy: Aspiring usurpers and tyrants in public office claim that some imaginary or exaggerated "emergency" exists. They declare "martial law" and deploy troops and para-militarized police forces. The imposition of "martial law" creates a set of circumstances with which average Americans have had no experience and for which they are totally unprepared. The resulting destruction of popular self-government—with attendant economic, political, and social chaos—then rationalizes the maintenance of "martial law" into the indefinite future.

[3733] See post, Chapter 49.

2. The question, though, remains: "Is 'martial law' of this variety legal in America?" In light of the delusions that hold sway among a large segment of this country's population, the answer demands painstaking analysis of the Constitution.

a. The first step is to place one's self in the position of Americans in the late 1700s so as to understand what they understood. In that era, those at all literate in the law were aware that no less an authority than Blackstone was highly critical and deeply suspicious of "martial law":

> WHEN the nation [that is, England] was engaged in war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline were esteemed to be necessary, than could be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times more rigorous methods were put in use for the raising of armies and the due regulation and discipline of the soldiery: which are to be looked upon only as temporary excrescences bred out of the distemper of the state, and not as any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of the kingdom. For martial law, which is based upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions, is * * * in truth and reality no law, but something indulged, rather than allowed as a law: the necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land. * * * And it is laid down, that if a lieutenant * * * doth in time of peace hang or otherwise execute any man by colour of martial law, this is murder; for it is against magna carta. And the petition of right enacts * * * that no commission shall issue to proceed within this land, according to martial law.[3734]

The Declaration of Independence provides conclusive evidence that patriotic Americans of that time thought even less of "martial law" than did Blackstone. As it recounted:

> The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.—
>
> * * * * *
>
> He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.—He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:—For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:—For protecting them, by a mock Trial,

---

[3734] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 412 (footnotes omitted).

> from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States[.]

In this litany of the most egregious aspects of "martial law", the worst is that "[h]e has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power"—for, if that can be done, then all the rest (and even more) will inevitably follow, inasmuch as no one will have any legal recourse against whatever the executors of "martial law" may choose to do.

b. No American alive today can believe that the men who wrote the Declaration of Independence, who acted upon it to separate the Colonies from and to conduct a long and sanguinary war against Great Britain, and who upon the strength of the Declaration then enacted constitutions for their States and the United States ever imagined that the powers to behave in the fashion of King George III—powers that he had used to bring about "a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object [that] evince[d] a design to reduce [Americans] under absolute Despotism"; and powers the very use of which justified the invocation and exercise of "the[people's] right, * * * their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security"—were among the "just powers" that "Governments * * * instituted among Men, deriv[e] * * * from the consent of the governed". And no American alive today can believe that WE THE PEOPLE in that era authorized the States and then the United States in their constitutions to do what the Declaration of Independence had just condemned as "abuses", "injuries[,] and usurpations" aiming at nothing less than "absolute Despotism" and "absolute Tyranny". Moreover, what Americans believed and incorporated into their fundamental laws at that time retains operative force today. For if the Declaration of Independence did not state the necessary and sufficient legal principles upon which the Colonies became independent States, then everything the States and their people did thereafter is devoid of legal basis.[3735]

(1) Now, when the Union was founded, many of the States explicitly demanded in their constitutions and declarations of rights "that standing armies, in time of peace, should be avoided, as dangerous to liberty; and that, in all cases, the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power".[3736] Self-evidently, a "military * * * under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power" cannot impose "martial law" on civilians.

(2) The Constitution of the United States is not so explicit. Yet perusal of the Constitution easily proves the illegitimacy of the type of "martial law" which purports to override, set aside, or suspend the Constitution itself and potentially all other "Laws of the Union", upon the mere say-so of military officers or tribunals (or of rogue civilian public officials colluding with them). This variety of "martial law" proceeds on the premiss that it is, or can become, the "supreme law" in this country. It is, in effect, military dictatorship, pure and simple—"military", because it is administered by the Armed Forces; and "dictatorship", because "[t]he scientific term 'dictatorship' means nothing more nor less than authority untrammeled by any laws, absolutely unrestricted by any rules whatever, and based directly on force".[3737] Revealingly, the essential point in Blackstone's description, emphasized by Lenin's definition—namely, that "martial law * * * is based upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions"—has never been denied, even by the Supreme Court of the United States: "Martial law * * * is administered by the general of the army, and is in fact his will. It is arbitrary; but it must be obeyed."[3738] How a Court purporting to exercise "[t]he judicial Power"of a government invested with "just powers" alone could accept as valid and as rightfully commanding obedience any body of supposed "law" that, being arbitrary, is inherently *un*just has never been explained.[3739]

---

[3735] See ante, at 22-27.

[3736] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13. See ante, at 1542-1545.

This lacuna exists for good reason. The Constitution declares that "[t]his Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land".[3740] And all public officials, including officers of the Armed Forces, "shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution".[3741] So, unless "martial law" in the sense Blackstone used that term is authorized by the Constitution itself in so many words, or by some constitutional "Laws of the United States" or constitutional "Treaties" enacted or entered into pursuant to some constitutional power of Congress or of the President and the Senate, then no public official, and no officer of the Armed Forces, can invoke, enforce, or act under color of it without thereby violating his "Oath or Affirmation". Unless within the Constitution itself lurks some power to set aside or suspend the Constitution, perhaps with no guarantee of its ever being reëstablished, "martial law" is utterly impossible, as a direct contradiction of the Constitution's legal supremacy. And no such power exists. For example—

(a) Congress cannot authorize "martial law" by dint of any of its express powers, because no such express power can be found in the Constitution —with, of course, the exception of Congress's power "[t]o provide for calling forth the

---

[3737] V. Lenin, "A Contribution to the History of the Question of the Dictatorship, A Note", ante note 3643, at 353.

[3738] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875).

[3739] Compare U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 with Declaration of Independence.

[3740] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[3741] U.S, Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

Militia to execute the Laws of the Union", which allows for an entirely different, and benign, form of "martial law".[3742] Congress cannot authorize "martial law" by dint of any implied power, either. For, although Congress does enjoy the power "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" its enumerated "Powers",[3743] none of those "Powers" relates to "martial law" (except with respect to the Militia)—and therefore no implied power can be exercised in relation to that subject. In any event, Congress can enact only "Laws * * * which shall be made in Pursuance of" its express or its implied powers;[3744] and no mere "Law[ ]" can override, set aside, or suspend anything in the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights (or any other Amendments).[3745]

To be sure, Congress does have the power "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces",[3746] and thereby to enact a "code of military justice" or equivalent body of "military law" for those "Forces".[3747] By constitutional definition, however, Congress can extend any such "code of military justice" only to "the land and naval Forces", not at all to the civilian population at large. And "the land and naval Forces"—having no independent existences or powers of their own, because they are no more than the creatures of Congress, invested with only such authority as it has to grant—cannot on their own initiative impose that or any like "code" on anyone not within their ranks. In addition, even Congress cannot promulgate a "code of military justice" that purports to license "the land and naval Forces" to disregard such limitations in the original Constitution as the prohibitions on "Bill[s] of Attainder" and "ex post facto Law[s]",[3748] or that purports to deny civilians the benefits of the numerous restraints on Congress's powers that the Bill of Rights catalogues.[3749]

(b) Neither can the President authorize "martial law". Although the President is "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States",[3750] in that capacity (or in any other, for that matter) he lacks authority to make any "Laws of the United States" in the first place,[3751] or to overrule, set aside,

---

[3742] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15, discussed post, at 1674-1678.

[3743] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3744] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[3745] See, e.g., Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 173-180 (1803); Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 491 (1966); United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873, 877-878 (1975).

[3746] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14.

[3747] See, e.g., 10 U.S.C. §§ 801 through 946.

[3748] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3.

[3749] Especially U.S. Const. amends. II, III, IV, V, VI, and VIII.

[3750] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3751] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 with art. II, § 1, cl. 1.

or suspend any of the "Laws" then in existence—unless perhaps those "Laws" themselves so provide, or are not really "Laws" at all because they are unconstitutional.[3752] Indeed, how could any rational President ever consider himself justified in acting above or outside, let alone against, the Constitution, when what the Constitution calls "the Office of President"[3753] is entirely a construct of the Constitution, and when "[b]efore he enter on the Execution of his Office, [the President] shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States'"?[3754] Self-evidently, he could not, because his constitutional duty is always to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3755] So, if no "Law[ ]" allowing "martial law" exists, the duty to "take Care" requires the President to refrain from any involvement whatsoever with "martial law", except to prevent anyone else from attempting to invoke, let alone to impose, it.

(c) The President enjoys no greater license to play at or with "martial law" by combining with rogue Senators "to make Treaties".[3756] For, as noted above, because all "Treaties" must "be made[ ] under the Authority of the United States", and because "the Authority of the United States" extends no farther than the boundaries the Constitution sets, no "Treat[y]"—or "international peacekeepers" imported under the aegis of some foreign alliance or supra-national institution—can overrule, set aside, or suspend the Constitution.[3757]

(d) The Constitution does allow for "[t]he Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus * * * [to] be suspended, * * * when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it".[3758] This, however, does not amount to a power to invoke or execute "martial law", because suspension of "the Privilege of the Writ" has no necessary connection with "martial law", howsoever defined. Suspension of "the Privilege" addresses merely one part of the civilian law, licensing civilian authorities to hold a suspect without bail, presumably pending trial—and therefore falls within Congress's civilian powers "[t]o constitute Tribunals inferior to the [3752] See, e.g., Huntington v. Worthen, 120 U.S. 97, 101-102 (1887); Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886); Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 288 (1885).

---

[3753] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cls. 4 and 7.

[3754] U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 7. Significantly, this "Oath of Affirmation" employs the oracular prophetic and imperative phrase "I will" rather than the simple idiomatic phrase "I shall".

[3755] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3756] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2.

[3757] See, e.g., United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 701 (1898); Doe v. Braden, 57 U.S. (16 Howard) 635, 657 (1863); The Cherokee Tobacco, 78 U.S. (11 Wallace) 616, 620-621 (1871); Holden v. Joy, 84 U.S. (17 Wallace) 211, 243 (1872); Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 267 (1890); Asakura v. City of Seattle, 265 U.S. 332, 341 (1924); United States v. Minnesota, 270 U.S. 181, 208 (1926); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 16-18 (1957) (Black, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

[3758] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2.

Supreme Court",[3759] to "make" "Exceptions" to the "appellate Jurisdiction [of the Supreme Court], both as to Law and Fact",[3760] and "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" those "Powers".[3761] Although, in the situations the Constitution specifies, that part of the civilian law may be temporarily suspended, no form of military law is, or need be, thereby created or substituted for it. Indeed, the Armed Forces need play no part in the process at all. Revealingly, the conditions precedent for suspension of "[t]he Privilege"—that is, "Rebellion or Invasion" sufficient to endanger "the public Safety"—involve circumstances which the advocates of "martial law" invariably cite as reasons for invoking "martial law". Yet, even in those situations, the Constitution does not suggest the propriety of, let alone call for, "martial law", suspension of "[t]he Privilege of the Writ" alone being deemed sufficient to protect "the public Safety".

(e) The Constitution mandates that "[t]he United States shall guarantee to every State in th[e] Union a Republican Form of Government".[3762] Self-evidently, a community ruled dictatorially by "martial law" is not functioning as "a Republican Form of Government". For the American "definition of * * * a [republican] Government is * * * one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people".[3763] And "martial law" in the sense under consideration here derives its powers purely and simply from military force—at base, from nothing more than the arbitrary will of some "general of the army"[3764] or other puffed-up uniformed popinjay—not from WE THE PEOPLE. For that very reason, "martial law" is not any "Form" of "Government[ ]" that "deriv[es its] just powers from the consent of the governed"—the one and only "Form" of "Government[ ]" which the Declaration of Independence allows in America. Thus, perforce of this constitutional provision alone, "martial law" cannot be imposed by the United States on any State. And if any State attempts to set up a régime of "martial law" on her own, the United States must put it down forthwith.

(f) Inasmuch as the United States cannot impose "martial law" in any State, and inasmuch as no State can impose "martial law" within her own territory, where in America could "martial law" in the sense at issue here ever exist? Not even in the District of Columbia and in "all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be", over which "Places" the Constitution empowers Congress "[t]o exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever".[3765]

[3759] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9. See U.S. Const. art. III, § 1.

[3760] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2.

[3761] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3762] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3763] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (Wilson, J.).

[3764] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875).

[3765] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17.

For, even in those "Places", although Congress may exercise "exclusive Legislation" it may not enact arbitrary legislation. As Blackstone pointed out, "martial law, which is based upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions, is * * * in truth and reality no law, but something indulged, rather than allowed as a law".[3766] Thus, the very essence of "martial law" is vagueness, because no one can predict what arbitrary orders military officers may pronounce on the spur of the moment, or how they may interpret or enforce them. Indeed, this very "flexibility" of "martial law" its advocates typically commend most highly. "[A] statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application", however, "violates the first essential of due process of law".[3767] So, even if "martial law" were explicitly enacted in some supposed statute applicable to the "Places" in which Congress may "exercise exclusive Legislation", it would "violate[ ] the first essential of due process of law", and therefore be unconstitutional—hardly a surprising result, though, given that "martial law * * * is * * * in truth and reality no law" at all.

(g) The essence of "martial law" in the sense under consideration here may be vague, but its constitutional effect is pellucid: Any attempt to impose "martial law" by force is nothing less than "Treason". The Constitution declares that "Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort".[3768] And "if ['War'] be actually levied, that is, if a body of men be actually assembled, for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors".[3769] In operation, "martial law" always proceeds by arraying men under arms in order to override, set aside, suspend, or defy the Constitution of the United States, in whole or in part, and to employ those arms against anyone who resists—without any constitutional or other lawful authority for doing so. Therefore, inasmuch as "the United States" exists only perforce and through application of the Constitution, "martial law" amounts to "levying War against the[United States]". And inasmuch as WE THE PEOPLE are the authors and beneficiaries of the Constitution—and the real parties in interest behind the rubric "the United States"—"martial law" must amount as well to "levying War against" THE PEOPLE themselves. It would be immaterial that those who attempted to impose "martial law" wore uniforms (even with United States or State flags as shoulder patches), or held commissions in "the land and naval Forces" of the United States or the "Troops, or Ships of War" of some State, or acted

---

[3766] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 412 (emphasis supplied).

[3767] Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926).

[3768] U.S. Const. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[3769] Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75, 126 (1807).

pursuant to orders from supposed superiors. Even someone who commits "Treason" under color of law and a claim of "good faith" is entitled to no immunity. This principle is part of the modern Law of Nations: "[T]hat the [officer] acted pursuant to order of his Government or of a superior shall not free him from responsibility".[3770] And it subsists in American law of a far longer heritage.[3771]

In sum, "martial law" in the sense being considered here cannot lawfully exist in this country. Participation in it would constitute the most serious of all crimes. And it would supply just grounds for mass resistance among the citizenry aimed at overthrowing whatever purported governmental apparatus attempted to impose it. For, as the Declaration of Independence proclaims, under such circumstances "it is the[people's] right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security". And the Declaration of Independence is still very good law in America.

All that being so, who in his right mind would ever attempt to impose such a form of "martial law" on America? Perhaps no one. Prudent Americans must nevertheless prepare for the possibility that individuals not in their right minds may somehow insinuate themselves into high public offices and the upper echelons of the officer corps of "the land and naval Forces" of the United States and the "Troops, or Ships of War" of the several States, and from those points d'appui seek to transmogrify this country from a constitutional republic into a national-security state, a garrison state, or a para-military police state[3772]—a process which any individual with his eyes half open can see taking place at an accelerating pace even as he reads these words. Because no national-security state, garrison state, or para-military police state can operate according to the Constitution (let alone the Declaration of Independence), its leaders must invoke some alien mumbo jumbo to rationalize their rule. Being entirely arbitrary in its substance, yet able to masquerade in the patriotic garb of "national security", "martial law" fits their purposes perfectly. So perfectly, that "martial law" should be recognized as the legalistic springboard and support which psychopathic personalities inevitably employ in order to seize total political power—and therefore should be outlawed, and its proponents treated as pariahs. Certainly it is myopic to contend that, insofar as responsible people with well-balanced minds presumably outnumber psychopaths in society by many orders of magnitude, America has nothing to fear. For that would be true only if such right-thinking Americans were properly organized to meet the danger of "martial law" in the "well regulated Militia" which the Second Amendment itself tells them are "necessary to the security of a free State".

[3770] The Charter of the International Military Tribunal (Nuremberg, Germany, 1945), art. 8.

[3771] E.g., Mitchell v. Harmony, 54 U.S. (13 Howard) 115, 137 (1851).

[3772] See, e.g., Andrew M. Łobaczewski, Political Ponerology: A Science on the Nature of Evil Adjusted for Political Purposes (Grande Prairie, Alberta, Canada: Red Pill Press, Second Edition, 2006).

D. "Martial law" arising out of applying "the law of war" to situations that do not involve actual "War". Through their apparent willingness uncritically to accept the definition of "martial law" as "the law of military necessity in the actual presence of war",[3773] most Americans have set themselves up for aspiring usurpers' and tyrants' latest political scam: to wit, imposing various aspects of "martial law" throughout this country under the pretense of fighting some ersatz "war", such as "the war on terrorism". To be sure, today America finds herself forced by rogue public officials "in[to] the actual presence of ['the war on terrorism']". But "the actual presence of ['the war on terrorism']" does not amount to "the actual presence of war"—and therefore could not even arguably rationalize the imposition of "martial law" anywhere within the United States to any degree—unless "the war on terrorism" were an actual "War" in the constitutional sense. Congress, of course, has never "declare[d] War" on "terrorism", and rationally could not do so;[3774] and none of the States is "engag[ing] in [a] War" against "terrorism" in fact, because none of them has been "actually invaded [by any 'terrorists'], or [is] in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3775] So "martial law" cannot come into play in that manner. On the other hand, if certain disloyal Americans, allegedly employing the tactics of "terrorists", were "levying War against the[United States]", then the constitutional law of "Treason", not "martial law", would apply to them.[3776] So, even if the United States could be described figuratively as fighting a "war on terrorism" against those rogue Americans, the metaphor could not change the constitutional result.

E. "Martial law" arising out of the authority of the Militia to "execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions". A plainly legitimate form of "martial law" which could be imposed on civilians within the United States would arise whenever "the Militia of the several States" were "call[ed] forth * * * to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections * * * [or] "repel Invasions" "in the Service of the United States",[3777] or were called forth to perform like tasks (or to perform other services in the realm of "homeland security") on behalf of their own States.

1. For the Militia to "repel [an] Invasion[ ]" would involve military combat operations against foreign forces or possibly erstwhile Americans who had forfeited their citizenship by allying with such forces. Therefore, to those enemy forces the Militia could apply "martial law" in the sense of "the law of military necessity in the

---

[3773] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875) (emphasis supplied).

[3774] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11. See ante, at 1570-1576.

[3775] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1.

[3776] U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1. See ante, at 1576-1580, 1583, and 1589-1591.

[3777] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

actual presence of war"[3778]—to wit, "the law of war" recognized by "the Law of Nations" and embodied in such statutes as Congress had enacted to authorize the Militia to "punish * * * Offenses against the Law of Nations" (which presumably an "Invasion[ ]" by an aggressor nation would entail).[3779] Inasmuch, however, as the Constitution plainly empowers Congress to enact such "Laws" and the Militia "to execute" them, in and through such execution the Militia would be enforcing the Constitution, not overriding it, setting it aside, suspending it, or disregarding it.

For the Militia to "suppress [an] Insurrection[ ]" could involve military combat operations if the insurrectionists were "levying War" on the United States; nonetheless, outside of the zone of actual combat, the law of "Treason", not "the law of war" would apply. So, following—and, to the extent practical, perhaps even during—actual combat operations, the Militia would have a duty to proceed according to and substantively enforce the civil laws applicable to prisoners and suspects, such as by simply holding them in custody pending normal civilian judicial proceedings. "[S]uppress[ion of an] Insurrection[ ]" on some lesser scale would involve no more than enforcement of the normal civilian law. Other than actual combat, these activities could be loosely described as the enforcement of "martial law" only because the Militia were the enforcers, not because of the character of the laws being enforced.

Finally, for the Militia to "execute the Laws of the Union" in all other respects would involve none but civilian laws. All of these situations could implicate "martial law" only in the loose, purely descriptive sense that the Militia would be enforcing "the Laws", perhaps in the fashion of para-military police. Of course, nothing would require the Militia, when "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union", always to employ overtly para-military tactics. To the contrary, the members of "well regulated Militia" who performed such police functions would doubtlessly be trained and equipped to operate, wherever possible, in a properly civilian fashion, so as to maintain social solidarity in their communities. In which case, to describe the involvement of the Militia as somehow a true manifestation of "martial law" would be inaccurate, except to the extent that every involvement of the Militia in any activity partaking of their enforcement of any "law" could be deemed "martial law" simply because the Militia are inherently "martial" institutions.

In any event, as the Constitution plainly mandates in the generality of its language, whenever "call[ed] forth * * * to execute [any of] the Laws of the Union", the Militia would be required, to the fullest extent possible, simultaneously to execute all of "the Laws of the Union" relevant to the situation, including both the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights (and other Amendments), both substantively and procedurally. So in no such situation could any claim ever arise that the Militia might impose upon Americans any form of "martial law" which would purport to override, set aside, suspend, or simply disregard the Constitution in any particular.

---

[3778] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875).

[3779] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10.

Finally, what the Militia could not do or claim with respect to "martial law" the President as their "Commander in Chief"could not himself do or claim, or order them to do or claim, "when [they were] called into the actual Service of the United States".[3780] For the President—in his rôle as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" and otherwise—must always "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3781] And "the Laws"—in particular, the Constitution itself—provide that the President is "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" only when the Militia are, in fact and law, "call[ed] forth" "to be employed in the Service of the United States"—by which is meant "the actual Service of the United States" not some merely suppositious or fictitious "Service"—and only for one or more of the three explicit constitutional purposes.[3782] As just explained, only two of those purposes allow for the invocation of "martial law" in the sense of "the law of military necessity in the actual presence of war", and then exclusively in zones of actual military combat operations.

2. In all of these situations, the Militia's enforcement of "martial law" (such as it might be) would always be fully consistent with "a Republican Form of Government". For the American "definition of * * * a [republican] Government is * * * one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people".[3783] And "a well regulated militia" is "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms"[3784]—which training enables "the people" to exercise "the Supreme Power". So the basic principle of "a Republican Form of Government" is made manifest whenever and in whatever fashion the Militia legitimately enforce "martial law" in the various senses under consideration here.

3. Besides being undoubtedly valid, because the Constitution provides for them in so many words, the types of "martial law" enforceable by the Militia would never become politically dangerous.

a. In contrast to the variety of "martial law" under color of which members of the regular Armed Forces would be deployed to control—and possibly to oppress—Americans they did not know in Localities in which they had never lived or worked, "martial law" enforceable by the Militia would almost always involve in the forefront of operations Local Militiamen who could hardly be expected to

---

[3780] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3781] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3782] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16. See ante, at 871-880.

[3783] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (Wilson, J.) (emphasis supplied).

[3784] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 (emphasis supplied).

oppress their own families, friends, neighbors, and co-workers. Indeed, if the territory being policed contained large numbers of civilians, probably most of them would be members of the Militia—and therefore to a large extent the Militiamen would be policing themselves.

b. Even the Militia would not be "call[ed] forth" to enforce some variety of "martial law" within their ken unless the ordinary course of civilian justice were hopelessly obstructed. As Congress's very first statute on the subject provided, > whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in [United States] marshals * * * , the same being notified to the President of the United States, by an associate justice or the district judge, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth the militia of such state to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed.[3785]

Obviously, the understanding was that "calling forth" the Militia "to execute the Laws of the Union" would not be constitutionally appropriate unless and until "the laws of the United States" were "opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed * * * by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings". This language reflected Congress's belief in the existence of an implicit restriction on its constitutional power to "call[ ] forth the Militia", which took into account the character of the Militia as para-military establishments. Although only implicit, such a restriction plainly accorded with the Founders' concern to keep enforcement of the law in purely civilian hands as much as possible, as well as to maintain both the strictest practical separation of powers and division of responsibilities between the Judicial Branch of the General Government (the courts)[3786] and the Executive Branch (the President and the Militia),[3787] as well as a proper balance of federalism between the General Government and the States (insofar as "the Militia of the several States" would be "called into the actual Service of the United States").[3788] All of these matters considered, this practical construction of the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union", having been "adopted at a time when the founders of our government and [3785] An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions, Act of 2 May 1792, CHAP. XXVIII, § 2, 1 Stat. 264, 264 (emphasis supplied). See 10 U.S.C. § 332. Inasmuch as the Act of 2 May 1792 preceded the Act of 8 May 1792 in which Congress first provided for organizing, arming, and disciplining the Militia, it evidenced Congress's understanding that the Militia were then already at least minimally prepared by the States to carry out the purposes of the Act of 2 May.

---

[3786] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 and art. I, § 8, cl. 9.

[3787] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and § 3; and art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3788] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs" is entitled to no little deference.[3789]

Unfortunately, "martial law" enforceable by the Militia—protective as it would be of Americans' rights—cannot be invoked today, because "well regulated militia" of the constitutional pattern, "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms",[3790] do not exist in a single State. And none will exist until enough Americans who want this country to avoid having to relive the perilous circumstances that justified the Declaration of Independence come forward to correct this deficiency.

F. "Martial law" enforced directly by WE THE PEOPLE. In light of all of contemporary America's serious economic, political, and social problems, avoidance of such a dire situation "in the Course of human events" may no longer be possible.

1. The day may soon dawn when the Constitution can no longer be enforced because of combinations too powerful to be suppressed by normal legal processes. Rogue public officials may control so much of the General Government that no effective "checks and balances" remain within that level of the federal system. Such officials will claim sweeping powers under the Constitution, but refuse to recognize most if not all of its disabilities. "[T]he right of the people * * * to petition the Government for a redress of grievances"[3791] will prove feckless. Elections will prove futile, except perhaps to change the particular identities of the rogues in office. And the rogues will claim the authority to employ their version of the powers of the General Government to prevent anyone else from trying to enforce the Constitution against them in any other way, by deploying squads of para-military goons against dissenters. So the situation will parallel the dire straits in which patriots found themselves at the time of the Declaration of Independence, that King George III "has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us". In addition, this country will probably be in the throes of an economic crisis, with attendant civil unrest, which rogue officials will present as an excuse to crack down on common Americans. In such circumstances, could any type of "martial law" justifiably be invoked by anyone—under color of the Constitution or otherwise— as the basis for action designed to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution against such rogue officials?

2. The Constitution provides numerous "checks and balances" that would involve what could be called "martial law".

[3789] Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 56 (1900). Accord, e.g., McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 401-402 (1819); Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 53 U.S. (12 Howard) 299, 315 (1851); The Laura, 114 U.S. 411, 414-415 (1885); Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 174-175 (1926); United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation, 299 U.S. 304, 322-329 (1936).

[3790] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3791] U.S. Const. amend. I.

a. The only parties whom the Constitution expressly empowers "to execute the Laws of the Union" are the Militia and the President of the United States as their "Commander in Chief".[3792] The Constitution also imposes on the President the duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3793] But the only way for him to perform that duty when the rest of the General Government—including, presumably, a significant part of the regular Armed Forces—were composed of or in thrall to rogue officials would be to "call[ ] forth the Militia". So, in the extraordinary situation posited here, the President and the Militia could jointly "execute the Laws", including the Constitution. As this effort would center on enforcement of "the Laws" by the Militia, which are quasi-military institutions, under the direction of their "Commander in Chief", which is a quasi-military status, it could properly be described as "martial law" under the aegis of the Constitution.

b. Of course, it might happen that the President himself turned rogue, along with the rest of the highest officials in the General Government. That, however, would not prevent the Militia from "execut[ing] the Laws", even against the wayward individual masquerading as President, because all of the Militia's other "Officers" are appointed by the States, and faced with a rogue President would take direction from the States' political leaders. If a rogue President attempted to countermand orders to the Militia from the States' leaders, the Militia would be under no obligation to obey, because whatever actions a rogue President directed would not constitute "the actual Service of the United States".[3794]

Presumably, with the entire governmental apparatus in the District of Columbia in the hands of rogues, public officials in States loyal to the Constitution would be subjected to threats and even attacks from various armed agents of the General Government. The Constitution provides that "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, * * * or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3795] On its face, the Constitution does not confine the right and power of the States to act on their own when "actually invaded, or in * * * imminent Danger" only to situations involving invasions launched by foreign nations. Self-evidently, an actual attack or credible threat of an attack on a State by regular or para-military armed forces commanded by rogue officials in the General Government, being unconstitutional, would satisfy the condition of that State's being "actually invaded, or in * * * imminent Danger". Indeed, even a credible threat from rogues in the General Government that did not rise of the level of "imminent Danger" should suffice to negate the disability that "[n]o State shall * * * keep Troops" "without

---

[3792] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3793] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3794] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1, discussed ante, at 871-880.

[3795] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied).

the Consent of Congress"—for, being composed of rogues itself, Congress would never give its "Consent"; and no State could be compelled to forsake preparation for her own self-defense because her adversary refused to agree to it. Nonetheless, although the raising of "Troops" would be constitutionally permissible, scant time would be available in which to do so. Therefore, the States would have to depend primarily upon their Militia. Again, as this effort would center on enforcement of "the Laws" by the Militia, perhaps with the assistance of State "Troops", it could properly be described as "martial law", but squarely within the ambit and under the aegis of the Constitution.

c. It might also transpire, though, that most of the States' highest public officials were themselves rogues, too, acting in collusion with the rogues in the General Government. In that eventuality, patriotic Americans would be compelled to depend upon themselves alone for succor. So the Militia would be bound by their primary constitutional duty "to execute the Laws of the Union" to police the rogue officials in both the General Government and their own State governments.

But what if a rogue Congress had enacted no statutes that "provide[d] for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union", or that "provide[d] for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" for that purpose?[3796] And, to make matters worse, what if rogue officials in the States had done nothing to provide for "well regulated Militia" either? Plainly, average Americans could not take upon themselves the authority of Congress or any of their States' legislatures in order to enact the necessary statutes on their own recognizance. Would they therefore be compelled to proceed only extra-constitutionally in order to act effectively? Not at all.

(1) The Second Amendment guarantees "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" so that "the people" always possess the implements necessary for their participation in "well regulated Militia". Implicit in "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms", therefore, is "the right of the people" to serve in "well regulated Militia"—a right which is absolute, because "the security of a free State" depends upon it.[3797] No right, however, can prove effective unless a remedy exists for its infringement.[3798] If rogue legislators refuse to assist "the people" in effectuating their right to serve in "well regulated Militia", then "the people" can and must act in their own self-defense—especially when that course of action is the only way to guarantee "the security of a free State" in the face of usurpation and tyranny. What, after all, is the alternative?

[3796] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3797] See ante, at 1401-1423.

[3798] See, e.g., Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 163 (1803); United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 71 U.S. (4 Wallace) 535, 554 (1867); Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 303 (1885).

To be sure, although "[h]e that has virtue and power to save a people, can never want a right of doing it",[3799] even in this dire situation "the people" would not be authorized to enact actual statutes. But why could they not adopt temporary "ordinances"—so called in order to differentiate them from the products of regular legislatures[3800]—through which they could organize their Militia provisionally according to the tried and true constitutional principles to which all statutes on that subject must conform? Organizing their Militia in this manner would constitute simply the fulfillment of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms".

The power "the people" would employ for the purpose of enforcing their "right" could be derived from the Tenth Amendment, which provides that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". No "powers" are "delegated to the United States" or "reserved to the States respectively" to deprive "the people" of "well regulated Militia". Rather, such "powers" are clearly "prohibited" to both the States and the United States.[3801] So, if the government of the United States and the governments of the States, in the grips of rogue officials, refuse to assist "the people" in forming "well regulated Militia" which are "necessary to the security of a free State", some "powers" suitable for that purpose must be "reserved * * * to the people" if such Militia, and therefore "free State[s]", are to exist at all anywhere within America.

(2) If a "right" for "the people" to enact "ordinances" of this kind cannot be found in the Second Amendment, it can nonetheless be derived from elsewhere. For example, both the Ninth and Tenth Amendments presume that "the people" are entitled to "certain rights" and "powers" that appear nowhere in the Constitution in so many words, but are incorporated into it by reference from other sources through those Amendments.

The obvious well from which some of these "rights" and "powers" can easily be drawn is the Declaration of Independence, which constitutes the legal as well as the political spring from which has issued every one of the governments in America since 1776.[3802] The Declaration states that all "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed", in order "to secure" "certain unalienable Rights"; and that, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their

---

[3799] A. Sidney, Discourses Concerning Government, ante note 54, at 227.

[3800] See ante, at 592 & note 895.

[3801] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16; art. II, § 2, cl. 1; and amend. II.

[3802] See ante, at 22-27.

Safety and Happiness". So, perforce of the Declaration, "the People" enjoy and can exercise on their own initiative, not only certain "rights", but also certain "powers" (or "the People" could not delegate "just powers" to any "Form of Government" or "organiz[e] its powers"). These must be in the forefront of the unenumerated "rights" and undefined "powers" to which the Ninth and Tenth Amendments refer. Therefore, through those Amendments (if not in other ways, too), the Declaration of Independence finds its place at the very head of "the Laws of the Union" that the Militia enjoy the authority and labor under the responsibility to "execute".

Now, because "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed", when rogue public officials take it upon themselves to assert "[un]just powers" "the People" can and should withdraw their "consent" to whatever degree may be necessary. So, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it was "instituted", "it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government", pursuant to the principle cuius est instituere eius est abrogare.[3803] The paradigmatically worst case is "when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism". Then, "it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security". In any less egregious situation, though, "the People" need not "throw off [the] Government" entirely. For theirs is the "Right", and therefore the power, "to alter or to abolish" "any Form of Government"—a power which, under the counsel of "Prudence", "the People" can and should exercise in such time, place, and manner as circumstances may dictate "most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness".[3804] Inasmuch as WE THE PEOPLE have a right to participate in "well regulated Militia" which can "execute the Laws of the Union" in aid of "the security of a free State"; and inasmuch as, to be "well regulated", the Militia must be organized pursuant to some act with legislative character; and inasmuch as THE PEOPLE today are entitled to execute the selfsame right and power their forebears invoked in the Declaration of Independence, "to alter or to abolish" their "Form of Government" in order to prevent that "Form" from "becom[ing] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it was "instituted"; and inasmuch as THE PEOPLE, under the aegis of that right and power, could "throw off" the entire Constitution, eliminating the legislative powers of Congress and of the States as well; therefore, THE PEOPLE can merely "alter" their "Form of Government" by enacting temporary "ordinances" under the authority of which they can organize themselves in "well regulated Militia" for the purpose of preserving the Constitution by "throw[ing] off" the misgovernment of usurpers and tyrants. In taking such action, THE PEOPLE would not set aside or suspend the [3803] "To whom it is to institute, to him it is to abrogate"; or, figuratively, "he who institutes may abrogate".

---

[3804] See ante, Chapter 32.

Constitution, but rather would enforce it, by exercising rights and powers incorporated within the Ninth and Tenth Amendments.

To be effective against usurpers and tyrants in practice, THE PEOPLE would likely have to form provisional Militia in order to protect themselves while such "ordinances" were being enacted and then put into operation. So this process, too, could properly be described as a form of "martial law" within the ambit of the Constitution, and of the Declaration of Independence as well.

3. If the Declaration of Independence is not one of "the Laws of the Union" perforce of or under the Constitution, but is an extra-constitutional law, then neither "the Militia of the several States" nor the President of the United States can "execute" it under color of the Constitution. Which would mean that, in the circumstances posited above, the Constitution could not protect WE THE PEOPLE against usurpation and tyranny being worked against them by rogue public officials under color of the Constitution. As the Declaration described such a situation, the "Form of Government" embodied in the Constitution would have "become[ ] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it had been "instituted", and irretrievably so. Common Americans would then find themselves in the position their forebears occupied following publication of the Declaration of Independence but before adoption of the Articles of Confederation or ratification of the Constitution.

At that time, however, the Declaration of Independence was not merely some hortatory pronouncement, but was the first and foremost organic law of each of the States, because it was through the Declaration that each of them became "Free and Independent States" with "full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do". The authority of the Declaration and the means for its enforcement did not depend upon the Constitution, which was not even imagined, let alone in existence. Indeed, the Declaration was not only a pre-constitutional and an extra-constitutional law, but also a supra-constitutional law, because it was the foundation in fact and justification in law for the Constitution. So if, in the present era, the Constitution were to fail, in the sense of "becom[ing] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it was "instituted", WE THE PEOPLE could still fall back on the Declaration of Independence.[3805] And the Declaration recognizes THE PEOPLE'S "right" and "duty" "to throw off [a bad] Government"—where necessary, by force of arms. In the temporary absence of any regular "Government" as a result of the failure of the Constitution, THE PEOPLE would have to organize themselves into Militia that were extra-constitutional, because the Constitution could not be enforced to authorize such formations, and were even supra- constitutional, because through their efforts either the old Constitution would be restored or some new organic law adopted. This process, too, could be described as a form of "martial law", because it would be executed by the Militia, albeit under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence alone.

[3805] This, of course, is one of the main reasons why those intent upon destroying the Constitution domestically are also attempting to negate the independence of the United States, individually and collectively, through their absorption into some form of supra-national "global government".

4. What if the Declaration of Independence were deemed to be without any authority of its own in the premises, purportedly because it applied only to an unique situation in the past, when one part of a country separated from the rest and become independent, whereas the situation under scrutiny here involves an attempt to hold the entire country together in the face of usurpation and tyranny by its disloyal leaders?

a. Even on that supposition, the controlling first principle remains that "sovereignty is never in abeyance". WE THE PEOPLE—ultimately, those "citizens, whether amounting to a majority or a minority of the whole, who are united and actuated" by a desire to protect "the rights of other citizens" and to advance "the permanent and aggregate interests of the community"[3806]—always retain their sovereignty. WE THE PEOPLE—through "Representatives" speaking "in the Name, and by the Authority of the good People of the[ ] Colonies"—put forth the Declaration of Independence. WE THE PEOPLE—through "delegates" acting "in the name and in behalf of [their] respective constituents"—adopted the Articles of Confederation.[3807] WE THE PEOPLE then "ordain[ed] and establish[ed] th[e] Constitution" through "Conventions" in the several States.[3808] And, whenever necessary, WE THE PEOPLE can take up such tasks again, in order to create a whole new body of supreme law for themselves. They can do this in the future in the same way they did it in the past, through organizing themselves in "well regulated Militia". For "a [republican] Government is * * * one constructed on this principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people"[3809]—"the Sword and Soveraignty always march hand in hand"[3810]—all "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun"[3811]—and "a well regulated militia" is "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms".[3812]

Thus the genius of the Second Amendment's declaration that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State": The independence of "a free State" precedes its constitution. But "the security of a free State" must be [3806] See The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison).

---

[3807] Arts. of Confed'n, closing paragraph.

[3808] U.S. Const. preamble and art. VII.

[3809] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (Wilson, J.).

[3810] AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, ante note 27, at 7.

[3811] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[3812] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

guaranteed if that "State" is to enjoy enduring independence. "A well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". Therefore, the establishment of "[a] well regulated Militia" is the condition precedent to both independence and a constitution for "a free State", and the condition subsequent for their preservation. This, because "[s]elf-defence * * * is * * * the primary law of nature",[3813] upon the successful execution of which depend all other laws.

b. If, because of the unique historical circumstances in which it arose, the Declaration of Independence were deemed inapplicable to the situation posited here of egregious usurpation and tyranny within America, and therefore WE THE PEOPLE could not rely upon it as the controlling law, nonetheless they would not act without law, or as a law unto themselves. The Declaration may have addressed itself to a special situation; but the legal principles it invoked were never understood to be so confined in their pertinence. Rather, as the Declaration itself made clear, they are the basic principles of law that govern the entire "Course of human events" in political societies. For they derive from the permanent "Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" to which "all men" are subject and from which "all men" are entitled to benefit. These "Laws" set WE THE PEOPLE above all "Governments". But they do not set THE PEOPLE above all law. Rather, "Governments * * * instituted among Men * * * deriv[e] * * * just powers from the consent of the governed", because THE PEOPLE possess only "just powers" to delegate to them, with the standards of "justice" defined, not by mere "Men", but by "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". Thus, THE PEOPLE enjoy the absolute right to organize themselves in Militia for collective self-defense, because "[s]elf-defence * * * is * * * the primary law of nature"; but, on the other side, they labor under the absolute duty that their Militia never engage in aggression, because aggression attempts to negate others' rights of self-defense.

5. In the final analysis, the problem with any conception of "martial law" is formulating a guarantee that the executors of "martial law" will relax their control and allow society to return to civilian law when the legitimate occasion for "martial law" has passed. This becomes especially difficult if the type of "martial law" at issue "is based upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in it's decisions";[3814] "is administered by the general of the army, and is in fact his will";[3815] and therefore "means nothing more nor less than authority untrammeled by any laws, absolutely unrestricted by any rules whatever, and based directly on force".[3816] The precepts of American political science, however, provide bases for confidence that this fear

---

[3813] See W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 3, at 4.

[3814] Id., Volume 1, at 412.

[3815] United States v. Diekelman, 92 U.S. 520, 526 (1875).

[3816] V. Lenin, "A Contribution to the History of the Question of the Dictatorship, A Note", ante note 3643, at 353.

is groundless when WE THE PEOPLE themselves, in and through "well regulated Militia", administer the variety of "martial law" suitable for the Militia to execute.

Inasmuch as "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle the[People]" to "a separate and equal station" "among the powers of the earth", under the aegis of which they may "do all * * * Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do"[3817]—and inasmuch as "a well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms" is "necessary to the security of a free State"[3818]—those "Laws" therefore approve of WE THE PEOPLE'S participation in such Militia. For THE PEOPLE to maintain their entitlement to that "separate and equal station", however, they must adhere to those "Laws" at all times, by exercising only "just powers", which by definition are never arbitrary in their application. In particular, their Militia must remain "well regulated" in terms of those "Laws" especially when enforcing "martial law"—because, unless checked, military discipline tends to instil robotic responses to arbitrary commands. Fortunately, "martial law" is more likely to conform to "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" when THE PEOPLE themselves are enforcing it through their Militia, because then the political principals in society, not their mere representatives or agents who might mistake the principals' commands or even betray the trust the principals have reposed in them, are in control.

So if tomorrow WE THE PEOPLE were compelled by circumstances to revitalize the Militia and invoke "martial law" on their own initiative in order to enforce the Constitution (or the Declaration of Independence through the Constitution, or the Declaration of Independence in aid of restoring the Constitution) against usurpers and tyrants in the highest offices of the General Government and the States, the Militia could not be selective in what provisions of the Constitution to enforce. Because the Constitution is an unitary charter of government, each word and phrase of which supports and depends upon every other, the Militia would be bound in duty to enforce the Constitution in its entirety. And as soon as the situation no longer justified THE PEOPLE in enacting and enforcing "ordinances" for organization of the Militia—that is, as soon as the General Government and the governments of the States were thoroughly purged of usurpers and tyrants and their string-pullers in factions and other anti-social special-interest groups; as soon as the misconstructions and misapplications of the Constitution that enabled such miscreants to gain footholds in the governmental apparatus were overruled; and as soon as loyal, honest, and competent individuals were installed in public office—then THE PEOPLE would look to Congress and the States' legislatures to regularize the situation by enacting the necessary statutes,

---

[3817] Declaration of Independence.

[3818] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 and U.S. Const. amend. II.

formally revitalizing the Militia and ratifying the actions they took to execute the laws while under the aegis of THE PEOPLE'S provisional "ordinances".[3819] [3819] See, e.g., United States v. Heinszen & Company, 206 U.S. 370, 381-382, 385-386 (1907).

CHAPTER FORTY-NINE

In order to function as effective "checks and balances" against "standing armies", "the military-industrial complex", and a domestic National para-military police state, members of "the Militia of the several States" must be immune from wholesale impressment into the regular Armed Forces.

Although no one should minimize the danger posed by the progression—or, more accurately from the perspective of anyone concerned with legality and liberty, the retrogression—from "standing armies" to a massive "military-industrial complex" to a National para-military police state, and with it the ever-intensifying insinuation of "martial law" into common Americans' lives, all in the service of the most immoral, avaricious, and corrupt political and economic factions ever to have parasitized the United States, no one should treat the situation as hopeless, either. For the Constitution provides the necessary and sufficient "checks and balances":

> The militia is the natural defence of a free country against * * * domestic usurpations of power by rulers. It is against sound policy for a free people to keep up large military establishments and standing armies in time of peace, both from the enormous expenses with which they are attended and the facile means which they afford to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people.[3820]

Nonetheless, as with every other constitutional "check and balance", "the Militia of the several States" can function effectively in that capacity only if certain conditions are satisfied.

A. "[T]he Militia of the several States" not to be absorbed within or subordinated to the regular Armed Forces. Self-evidently, "the Militia of the several States" cannot serve as "checks and balances" against "standing armies", "the military-industrial complex", and a National para-military police state unless: (i) they actually exist in practice, not simply in words on the parchment of the Constitution; and (ii) they are recognized as independent of and superior to those establishments; which requires that (iii) they are maintained separate from those establishments, by being held immune from absorption within, as well as subordination to, the regular Armed Forces. Fortunately, the Constitution insures that all of these requirements can be met.

---

[3820] J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646.

1. Revitalization of the Militia the first priority. If "standing armies", a "military-industrial complex", and a National para-military police-state apparatus cannot be avoided in the first place, or eliminated after they have once been set up, society must face the difficult problem of how to assert sufficient "civilian control" to keep them on a tight leash until they can be reduced in size or disbanded entirely. In contemporary America, all of these establishments exist, are well entrenched (in the case of "standing armies" and "the military-industrial complex") or are becoming so (in the case of the police-state apparatus), and are largely out of WE THE PEOPLE'S practical control. Americans find themselves in these dire straits precisely because no "well regulated Militia" worthy of the name exists in even a single State. True "civilian control of the military"—that is, "civilian control" according to constitutional principles—must rest with the architects, arbiters, and beneficiaries of the Constitution: WE THE PEOPLE themselves, who, in their capacity as "the Militia of the several States", can (in Justice Story's estimation) "offer[ ] a strong moral check against the usurpation and arbitrary power of rulers, and will generally, even if these are successful in the first instance, * * * resist and triumph over them".[3821]

The danger is more acute today than during the Founding Era, because the contemporary "military-industrial complex" goes far beyond the mere "standing armies" of that time. Indeed, compared to "the military-industrial complex", those "standing armies" were little more than toothless paper tigers. Not because they were not sufficiently large, thoroughly armed, well trained, and usually led by competent officers, but because they were overmatched by both political and military "checks and balances" amongst the people they attempted to repress. In that age, Americans were well schooled in political philosophy of liberty, used to self-government, intent upon preserving it, and willing to make whatever personal and collective sacrifices "the Course of human events" might have required to that end. And, being organized, armed, and disciplined in their Militia, Americans were actually capable of defending their rights in the field. Moreover, during the entire period prior to 1776, the Militia—along with the British Army, Colonial "Troops", and the hodge-podge of manufacturers of armaments in both the Colonies and the Mother Country—had all been integral components of the Anglo-American "military-industrial complex". And during the whole of the pre-constitutional period following the Declaration of Independence, the Militia—along with the Continental Army, State "Troops", and such manufacturers of arms as existed—were all integral components of America's "military-industrial complex". So Americans never looked upon personal military preparedness and even actual participation in military campaigns as something alien to them, but instead accepted that service as the most important part of the duties, and the rights as well, inherent in citizenship in "a free State".

---

[3821] Id. (footnote omitted).

Not so for all too many Americans today, however. Now, "the Militia of the several States" are not parts of this country's "military-industrial complex" at all—having been effectively excluded for more than a century by Congress's purported assignment of most Americans to the oxymoronic "unorganized militia".[3822] As a result, WE THE PEOPLE—including those who through their personal possession of firearms naively imagine themselves to be exercising "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" to the full—have no personal experience of the Militia. And although many Americans may entertain vague notions of what the Militia once were—with mental images of men in tricorn hats, knee britches, and buckled shoes, carrying flintlock muskets—vanishingly few have the foggiest notion of what the Militia constitutionally still are and must be, and especially why it matters. Devoid of both experience and knowledge, most Americans fall back on the assumption that "standing armies" are necessary for their country's defense—never noticing, let alone understanding, that WE THE PEOPLE could safely delegate to Congress the power "[t]o raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years",[3823] precisely because the original Constitution incorporated "the Militia of the several States" as permanent components of its federal system.

Through its mouthpieces among rogue public officials, the big media, and various subversive factions and special-interest groups, "the military-industrial complex" does its best to keep average Americans in this state of ignorance, too—ridiculing, defaming, and demonizing those few patriots whose advocacy of revitalization of the Militia cannot simply be ignored. Next to no one, however, draws the conclusion that, having made itself independent of and even hostile to "well regulated Militia", "the military-industrial complex" has emerged, as a matter of constitutional fact and law, as an antagonist of "the security of a free State", and therefore an antagonist of "a free State" everywhere throughout this country (although that conclusion should be glaringly obvious from the complex's promotion of the domestic para-military police-state apparatus). This antagonism proves not merely that America is confronted (in President Eisenhower's words) by "[t]he potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power", but that "the military-industrial complex" has already acquired "unwarranted influence" which "endanger[s] our liberties [and] democratic processes"—and that it will never be brought to heel under constitutional "civilian control" until the Militia are revitalized.

[3822] See 10 U.S.C. § 311(b)(2). See ante, at 786-793.

[3823] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12 (emphasis supplied).

The Constitution requires the Militia to be fully organized at all times.[3824] Nonetheless, a merely formal revitalization of the Militia, no matter how complete on paper, will not suffice. The Militia must be restored in actual practice to the exact position the Constitution reserves and requires for them, in strict compliance with all of the pre-constitutional principles that define "well regulated Militia", so that they can exercise the full measure of authority necessary to control "the military-industrial complex" (as well as perform the other tasks the Constitution and the States' laws assign to them). Any deviation from those constitutional principles will provide aid and comfort to "the complex", and to all other enemies of the United States, foreign and especially domestic. The most insidious form of such deviation today exhibits the characteristics of camouflage and confusion. Namely, that Americans have long been gulled by the fantastic misconstruction of the Constitution under color of which Congress: (i) has labeled the National Guard and the Naval Militia "the organized militia"—when in reality they consist of the "Troops, or Ships of War" that the several States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress";[3825] and (ii) has consigned everyone not a member of the National Guard or the Naval Militia to the constitutionally impossible "unorganized militia"[3826]—so that now almost all Americans have been led to believe that they need not, or even cannot, actively participate in any "militia" at all. Obviously, if WE THE PEOPLE continue to swallow such bilge in the face of a crescent National para-military police state, they will soon choke to their political deaths on tyranny. So their first steps must be: (i) To assert in the strongest possible terms their ultimate legal supremacy as the parties "in [whose] Name, and by [whose] Authority" the Declaration of Independence was "solemnly publish[ed] and declare[d]", and who originally "ordain[ed] and establish[ed] th[e] Constitution"[3827]—and therefore who, having exercised "the power to enact" retain "the final authority to declare the meaning of the[ir very own] legislation".[3828] And then (ii) to direct their "representatives" in public office to revitalize the Militia immediately if not sooner, on pain of having THE PEOPLE revitalize the Militia themselves in the event of officialdom's default.

2. Revitalized "Militia of the several States" to be maintained separate from, independent of, and superior to the regular Armed Forces at all times. Revitalization of "the Militia of the several States" will provide effective "checks and balances" against "the military-industrial complex", because of the Militia's unique constitutional nature and status.

[3824] See ante, Chapter 34.

[3825] See ante, at 786-793.

[3826] See 10 U.S.C. § 311.

[3827] U.S. Const. preamble.

[3828] Propper v. Clark, 337 U.S. 472, 484 (1949).

a. The Militia are separate from and independent of the regular Armed Forces in two ways.

(1) By definition, the Militia must be "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms"[3829]—and not simply as the result of each individual's personal choice, but perforce of every able-bodied adult's constitutional duty.[3830] Conversely, the Armed Forces have never been defined in law as "composed of the body of the people"—and could not possibly ever be "composed of the body of the people" in fact unless either the individuals eligible for Militia service were entitled to dissolve the Militia themselves by voluntarily joining the Armed Forces pursuant to some specific statutory exemption from Militia duty for that purpose, or some legislative body were empowered to dissolve the Militia by impressing into the Armed Forces every individual eligible for the Militia. But no one, whether individual citizen or legislator, may dissolve the Militia, because the Constitution permanently incorporates the Militia within its federal system.[3831] So, although the States, or Congress, or both could enact exemptions from Militia service for individuals who voluntarily joined the regular Armed Forces of the United States or such "Troops, or Ships of War" as the States might "keep" "in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" or might assemble on their own initiatives in time or war or when "engaged in War" because they were "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay",[3832] such exemptions could not license draining the Militia of so many members that they could no longer function as "well regulated Militia".[3833]

The Militia's independence of the Armed Forces is a crucial attribute, because, being "composed of the body of the people", the Militia can never imagine themselves as somehow distinct, separate, or divorced from, let alone antagonistic to, "the people"; whereas regular Armed Forces or "Troops" composed of volunteers or draftees, being always less than "the body of the people", can easily (and, indeed, are conditioned through training to) envision themselves as "soldiers" and everyone else as mere "civilians". So, although it is impossible to speak of "'Militiamen' as opposed to 'civilians'" let alone "'Militiamen' who are opposed to 'civilians'", because all "Militiamen" are "civilians" and most "civilians" are "Militiamen", it is quite possible to speak of "'soldiers' as opposed to 'civilians'"; and in times of political turmoil and civil unrest this distinction can easily be twisted in the minds

---

[3829] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3830] See ante, Chapter 35.

[3831] See ante, Chapter 33. On the constitutional impossibility of general impressment from the Militia for the Armed Forces, see post, at 1714-1835.

[3832] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 and § 10, cl. 3; and art. VI, cl. 2.

[3833] See ante, Chapter 36. On the constitutional impossibility of generating unlimited ersatz exemptions by impressing Militiamen into the Armed Forces, see post, at 1714-1835.

of impressionable "soldiers" to the pernicious concept of "'soldiers' who are opposed to 'civilians'" in the sense of mutual antagonists.

(2) As well as by virtue of their composition, the Militia are separate from and independent of the Armed Forces by dint of their unique status and distinct position in the Constitution.

(a) The Militia are permanent components of the federal system at every one of its three levels:

> (i) The Militia consist of "the body of the people, trained to arms"[3834]—more or less identical with WE THE PEOPLE. WE THE PEOPLE existed before the foundations of the federal edifice were poured, and will continue to exist even were that edifice totally demolished. WE THE PEOPLE created the federal edifice—and it depends upon their consent for every moment of its continued existence. They do not depend upon it at all, but may determine at their own discretion that their continued welfare demands its alteration or abolition.[3835]
>
> (ii) "[T[he Militia of the several States"[3836] are State governmental institutions. Indeed, they are the most important of all State governmental institutions, because the Constitution guarantees to each State "a Republican Form of Government";[3837] "a Republican Form of Government" is "one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people";[3838] "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun";[3839] and the Militia are "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms". And
>
> (iii) The Militia may be "employed in the Service of the United States" for three vital constitutional purposes.[3840] Self-evidently, as long as that "Service" is to be performed—which presumably is as long as the Constitution provides for it—the Militia must remain in existence.

In sharp contrast, "the Army and Navy of the United States" are merely contingent components of the General Government alone[3841]—with the Army explicitly exposed to complete dissolution every "two Years", unless Congress

---

[3834] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 (emphasis supplied).

[3835] See Declaration of Independence; U.S. Const. preamble and art. V.

[3836] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3837] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[3838] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (opinion of Wilson, J.).

[3839] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[3840] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 (emphasis supplied).

[3841] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 through 14, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

provides a new "Appropriation of Money".[3842] The Constitution does empower Congress "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy",[3843] which suggests that the Senior Service should be permanent. Yet, if Congress determines in good faith that no "Navy" is needed after all, no one else can "provide and maintain a Navy" on anything akin to a permanent basis, because private parties cannot put to sea without being issued "Letters of Marque and Reprisal" from Congress,[3844] and the States cannot "keep * * * Ships of War in time of Peace" "without the Consent of Congress".[3845]

Similarly, the "Troops, or Ships of War" which the States may "keep" "in time of Peace" are merely contingent components of the States' governments alone—and are even less secure in their existences than are "the Army and Navy of the United States", because "[n]o State shall * * * keep" them at all "without the Consent of Congress". To be sure, as a condition of Congress's "Consent" to their existences (and the States' concurrence therewith), these "Troops, or Ships of War" may be integrated into "the Army and Navy of the United States" for certain National purposes. Yet such possible integration into forces which are themselves contingent renders such "Troops, or Ships of War" no less contingent than if Congress had not mandated such integration, or the States had not agreed to it.

(b) The Constitution explicitly recognizes that the Militia are separate from and independent of the regular Armed Forces,

- by denominating them differently—as "the Militia of the several States" in contrast to "the Army and Navy of the United States";[3846]
- by delegating different powers to Congress with respect to each of those establishments, and segregating those powers in different clauses;[3847]
- by directing that the Militia be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for but three purposes, while imposing no limitation on the use of the Armed Forces;[3848]
- by establishing different bodies of rules for governing "the land and naval Forces" and "such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States";[3849]

[3842] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

[3843] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 13 (emphasis supplied).

[3844] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[3845] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3846] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3847] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 through 14 ("Armies", "Navy", "land and naval Forces") with cls. 15 and 16 ("the Militia").

[3848] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 with cls. 12 and 13.

[3849] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14 with cl. 16.

• by differentiating the status of the President with respect to those establishments—that "[t]he President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States" at all times, but "of the Militia of the several States, [only] when [they are] called into the actual Service of the United States";[3850]

• by "reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers [in the Militia], and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress",[3851] so that the Militia cannot be brought under the command of any officer of "the Army [or] Navy of the United States" other than the President, and then only in his separate capacity as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States"; and even

• by explicitly securing to "the people" "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of serving in "well regulated Militia" that can provide effective "checks and balances" against "standing armies".[3852]

b. "[T]he Militia of the several States" are superior to the regular Armed Forces in three ways.

(1) They are politically superior.

(a) The Second Amendment's declaration—that "[a] well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed"—is special. Unlike the terms of office for the Members of Congress or for the President, or many of the powers of Congress, which might have been set, or formulated, or distributed otherwise with no diminution of their utility, the Second Amendment presents an unqualified statement both of constitutional law, deriving from fixed principles of political philosophy, and of constitutional fact, arising out of actual American experience—and, by negative implication, also and especially a premonishment: namely, that without "well regulated Militia" Americans can never provide "the security of a free State" and therefore will inevitably prove unable to preserve "a free State" for themselves. Thus, the reason for everything in the Constitution that pertains to the Militia—for incorporating the Militia into the federal system at all three of its levels; for requiring Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia"; for "reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia"; and for limiting the President's authority as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" to when they are

---

[3850] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3851] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3852] U.S. Const. amend. II.

"called into the actual Service of the United States"[3853]—is that the Militia are the ultimate political establishments: They provide THE PEOPLE with the means to preserve self-government through THE PEOPLE'S own efforts under THE PEOPLE'S own personal control.

The epigram "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'"[3854] encapsulates the fact, undeniable throughout history, that in the final analysis no division can long exist between political and military power. Ultimately, those people who are to decide their society's political polices must be the bearers of arms, because the bearers of arms in any society will always come to decide its political policies. Morality and law, though, look beyond the mere fact of who happens to wield the gun at any particular time to ask, "Who is entitled to wield the gun?" When the gun is in the hands of the people entitled to hold it, then their use of the gun to obtain, preserve, and employ political power—but always in a just fashion—is legitimate.

In America, WE THE PEOPLE are the only sovereigns.[3855] WE THE PEOPLE are also the Militia. The Militia exist because THE PEOPLE do. Indeed, as the Second Amendment attests, it is impossible to imagine a self-governing society organized as "a free State" in America without "[a] well regulated Militia" composed of "the people". Thus, the Militia constitute the executive arm of the sovereigns themselves, composed of the sovereigns themselves, commanded by the sovereigns themselves directly. Conversely, "the Army and Navy of the United States" and the States' "Troops, or Ships of War" are the contingent creations of THE PEOPLE'S "representatives" in the General Government and the governments of the several States. Thus, they are three long political steps removed from THE PEOPLE: the first step, THE PEOPLE'S creation of those governments through the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the States' constitutions; the second step, those governments' creation of regular Armed Forces by the enactment of various statutes; the third step, the recruitment of a relatively small set of individuals for the Armed Forces, which never embraces "the body of the people" as a whole.

(b) The three constitutional purposes for which the Militia may be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States"—that is, "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"[3856]—emphasize the supreme political character of the Militia. None of these responsibilities does the Constitution explicitly assign to the regular Armed Forces. And for at least three good reasons:

[3853] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[3854] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[3855] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 454, 456 (opinion of Wilson, J.), 471-472 (opinion of Jay, C.J.) (1793).

[3856] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

(i) Two of the purposes for "calling forth" the Militia "in the Service of the United States" address threats arising within this country—"to execute the Laws of the Union" against those who violate "the Laws", and to "suppress Insurrections" (which could be seen as a special case of "execut[ing] the Laws"). When such internal threats have some specifically political genesis, they are always more dangerous than attacks from outside. For, aspiring usurpers and tyrants being perennial and hardy weeds in the Republic's garden, such threats are always ready to sprout and flourish; and in their initial stages of germination and growth they are not easily recognized for the noxious vegetation they are, if the ones who cultivate them adroitly employ their public offices to subvert the Constitution and even the Declaration of Independence under the color of law and the pretense of loyalty.

To deal with such eventualities, a "standing army" is far less reliable than the Militia. True enough, both a "standing army" and the Militia are military establishments; and both may be salted with individuals looking out for only their own personal interests, "the general Welfare" be damned. The danger from each is not equally great, though, because a rogue "standing army" may see its chance to usurp sovereignty and tyrannize society, either in collusion with disloyal civilian officials or on its own initiative; whereas the Militia can have no rational interest in usurping sovereignty which as WE THE PEOPLE they already exercise, or in tyrannizing over their own members. Certainly the Constitution conclusively presumes that "the Militia of the several States" are not as dangerous to freedom as any "standing army", or it would not assign the explicit authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union" and to "suppress Insurrections" exclusively to them. Moreover, the Second Amendment reflects the historical fact that the Militia mustered in the very forefront of Americans' original struggle for independence and liberty, and as a matter of law requires contemporary Americans to presume that the Militia will continue to prove "necessary to the security of a free State". This, after all, is the only plausible and prudent expectation: For are WE THE PEOPLE, with their own arms in their own hands, and their own officers chosen from amongst themselves, likely to set out to oppress themselves? And even if such an event cannot be excluded as impossible, one must weigh the highly conjectural risk that some significant portion of the Militia might turn rogue against the near-certainty that a "standing army" will prove disloyal to THE PEOPLE at some dark turning-point "in the Course of human events".

(ii) It may seem odd that the Constitution also explicitly assigns the exclusive authority and responsibility to "repel Invasions" to the Militia alone, rather than to the regular Armed Forces, either alone or in tandem with the Militia. As a practical matter, when foreign navies land foreign armies on America's shores, "the Army and Navy of the United States" and "Troops, or Ships of War" from the States might be expected to be better prepared than the Militia to defeat the aggressors. But within that natural expectation lurks a worrisome realty: If this country's regular Armed Forces were large and strong enough to "repel Invasions" by those enemies sufficiently powerful to launch assaults from distant foreign bases, they would be large and strong enough to pose a distinct domestic threat themselves. An "Invasion[ ]", after all, need not always be entirely military in character, but may be military in its perpetrators while political in its purposes. And its perpetrators need not be foreign armies, but could be rogues in a domestic "standing army" who, by systematically usurping power for themselves through violations of "the Laws of the Union", surreptitiously "invade" the centers of governmental authority and become effectively an "army of occupation" through stealth rather than shooting.[3857] Politically it would be more prudent, then, to build up the Militia to the point at which they could "repel Invasions" by any conceivable foreign forces—either in concert with the Armed Forces, or even on their own—so that an excessive reliance would not have to be placed upon, and excessive power surrendered to, the Armed Forces.

(iii) On the other hand, "Invasions" that are entirely political in nature must also be considered. These occur when large numbers of American public officials in influential positions exhibit an attachment to some foreign nation so politically unnatural and inordinate as to be pathological, in that they transfer their primary loyalties to that nation and misuse their positions in government in order to advance its interests at the expense of the United States or their own States. The causative factors may be traceable to matters of race, religion, cultural affinity, ideology, bribery, blackmail, or other improper source, motive, or consideration. Some of these individuals may have had such a foreign loyalty inculcated into them while impressionable youths; others may have eagerly cultivated it only later on in order to advance their careers or swell their personal estates; and still others may have reluctantly acceded to it under pressure in order to evade exposure of embarrassing events earlier in their lives. Whatever the origin of this perverse phenomenon in individual cases, its danger to the country as a whole was cogently explained by George Washington:

> [N]othing is more essential than that * * * passionate attachments for other[Nations] should be excluded; and that in place of them just & amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. * * * [A] passionate attachment of one Nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favourite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels & Wars of the latter, without adequate inducement or justification: It leads also to concessions to the favourite Nation of priviledges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the [3857] This process is sometimes denominated a "cold coup".

> Nation making the concessions—by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained—& by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom eq[ua]l priviledges are withheld: And it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favourite Nation) facility to betray, or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation[,] a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for the public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition[,] corruption[,] or infatuation.
>
> As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent Patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public Councils! * * *
>
> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, * * * the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of Republican Government. * * * Real Patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favourite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause & confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.
>
> The Great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign Nations is * * * to have with them as little political connection as possible.[3858]

The legal consequence of "passionate attachments" to foreign nations (and, especially today, to international and supra-national organizations) on behalf of America's public officials, and of those officials' inevitable seduction and corruption by "the insidious wiles of foreign influence", should be pellucid. In the pre-constitutional era, Blackstone described in detail that > species of offences, more immediately against the king and government, [which] are entitled misprisions and contempts.

>
> MISPRISIONS (a term derived from the old French, mespriss, a neglect or contempt) are * * * generally understood to be all such high offences as are under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon: and it is said, that a misprision is contained in every treason and felony whatsoever * * * . Misprisions are generally divided into two sorts; negative, which consist in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed; and positive, which consist in the commission of something which ought not to be done.
>
> * * * * *

[3858] Farewell Address, ante note 3366, at facsimile pages 23-25.

> * * * MISPRISIONS, which are * * * positive, are generally denominated contempts or high misdemeanors; of which
>
> 1. THE first and principal is the mal-administration of such high officers, as are in public trust and employment. This is usually punished by the method of parliamentary impeachment: wherein such penalties, short of death, are inflicted as to the wisdom of the house of peers shall seem proper; consisting usually of banishment, imprisonment, fines, or perpetual disability. * * * Other misprisions are, in general, such contempts * * * as demonstrate themselves by some arrogant and undutiful behaviour towards the king and government. These are
>
> 2. CONTEMPTS against the king's prerogative. As * * * by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own, or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence in favour of such extrinsic power[.][3859]

Today, of course, Americans recognize no "king's prerogative". For WE THE PEOPLE themselves are America's sovereigns.[3860] But public officials surely demonstrate "CONTEMPT[ ]" against THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty "by preferring the interests of a foreign potentate to those of our own [country], or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence in favour of such extrinsic power". Therefore, any such "preferring" should constitute a "high * * * Misdemeanor[ ]", warranting "Impeachment", "Conviction", and "remov[al] from Office", and after that other appropriate punishment.[3861] Of course, the practical problem is that when too many rogue officials develop intensely "passionate attachments" for foreign nations and international organizations, and succumb to "the insidious wiles of foreign influence", normal procedures such as impeachment and prosecution cannot be had. Then, extraordinary measures must be undertaken.

In situations of this type that involve rogue civilian officials, the Armed Forces would be of little use, except perhaps for such specialized activities as the collection and analysis of foreign intelligence. Rather, the Militia would be best equipped to handle these matters, for two reasons:

First, because these situations would always implicate "the Laws of the Union", from violations of governmental codes of ethics and regulations of election-campaigns to subversion and outright espionage. At the very minimum, when disloyal public officials act as agents of influence on behalf of some foreign nation, they break their "Oath[s] or Affirmation[s], to support this Constitution", which

---

[3859] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 4, at 119, 121-122. In this, Blackstone closely followed W. Hawkins, A Treatise of The Pleas of the Crown, ante note 434, Book I, Chapter XX, § 1, and Chapter XXII, §§ 1 and 3, at 55-56, 59.

[3860] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 454, 456 (opinion of Wilson, J.), 471-472 (opinion of Jay, C.J.) (1793).

[3861] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 4; and compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 7 with, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242.

misbehavior not only amounts to what Blackstone called "the mal-administration of such high officers * * * usually punished by the method of parliamentary impeachment", but also should be treated as a serious crime against every one of their constituents.[3862] And the very first constitutional responsibility of the Militia is "to execute the Laws of the Union".

Second, because of the insidious nature of the wrongdoing, the danger to "a free people" and "Republican Government" in situations of this kind would be particularly acute. In contrast to an open invasion by foreign troops at one or a few points around the periphery of the country, domestic agents of foreign influence who posture as loyal Americans work their wiles under cover as well as color of law and throughout the interior of this country, "tamper[ing] with domestic factions", "practic[ing] the arts of seduction", "mislead[ing] public opinion", and "influenc[ing] and aw[ing] the public Councils" in ways that become apparent only to those who are both authorized and able to apply the closest scrutiny to the actions and especially the motivations of suspicious public officials. Revitalized Militia would be perfectly positioned to deal quickly and decisively with these matters, however. For they could investigate public officials, expose alien influences, compile evidence, and compel the application of appropriate legal sanctions to wrongdoers.[3863]

(2) "[T]he Militia of the several States" are legally superior to "the Army and Navy of the United States" and to the States' "Troops, or Ships of War", for at least three reasons:

(a) The Militia are "the body of the people, trained to arms".[3864] "[T]he body of the people" consists of almost all of WE THE PEOPLE—for in the common parlance of pre-constitutional times, "the body of the people" meant "[a] collective mass; a joint power" and "[t]he main part; the bulk",[3865] just as later it meant and still means "the main, central, or principal part"[3866] and "[a] number of individuals spoken of collectively, usually as united by some common tie, or as organized for some purpose; a collective whole or totality".[3867] WE THE PEOPLE are America's sovereigns.[3868] Therefore, the Militia consist of "the body of the [sovereigns], trained [3862] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied) with 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242.

---

[3863] See ante, at 956-963.

[3864] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3865] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definition 5 in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions, and definitions 9 in the First Edition and 8 in the Fourth.

[3866] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 162, definition 2. Accord, Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 301, definition 2.

[3867] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 162, definition 5. Accord, Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 301, definition 13.

[3868] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 454, 456 (opinion of Wilson, J.), 471-472 (opinion of Jay, C.J.) (1793).

to arms"—that is, "the main part" and "the bulk", up to the "collective whole or totality", of the sovereigns organized for the assertion of their sovereignty through collective self-defense. In contrast, "the Army and Navy of the United States" and the States' "Troops, or Ships of War" do not now include, and never have included, within their ranks "the main part" or "the bulk" of the populace of the United States or of any State. At best, "the Army and Navy of the United States" and the States' "Troops, or Ships of War" are the mere "shadow[s]" of the people, whereas the Militia are "the substance, as opposed to the shadow".[3869] Therefore, the regular Armed Forces can lay no claim whatsoever to being themselves institutions somehow invested with sovereignty, as opposed to being the mere instruments of THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty.

(b) The Militia are permanent components of the Constitution's federal system, in that respect at least equal in constitutional status to the States, Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court. Indeed, inasmuch as the Militia were the only organized armed forces with which Americans began "to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle[d] them" even before and then under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence, and would be called upon again if "the People" were to exercise their "Right * * * to alter or to abolish" the present "Form of Government" by force should it become "destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it was "institute[d]", the Militia are undoubtedly of an extra-constitutional status superior to Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court, and arguably to the States as well. In contrast, the regular Armed Forces of both the General Government and the States are merely contingent establishments.

(c) Because the Constitution explicitly "reserv[es] to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia",[3870] no officers of "the Army and Navy of the United States" enjoy any authority to issue commands to any Militiaman—except for the President, and then only in his separate, specific capacity as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia", not as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States" or simply as the President.

Congress, however, could authorize "Officers" of the Militia to supervise personnel in the Armed Forces, by "provid[ing] for calling forth the Militia to execute th[os]e Laws of the Union" that constituted the "Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces".[3871] "[T]he Army and Navy" could not complain about such an arrangement, either, because the Constitution neither [3869] See Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 162, definition 3.

---

[3870] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3871] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 14.

assigns to them any explicit authority or responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union" in general, nor designates them as the sole or final executors of the "Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces" in particular. And Congress could surely determine that, in order to control this country's "standing armies", it would be "necessary and proper" "[t]o make [a] Law" for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces" by "calling forth the Militia" in a supervisory capacity in order to insure that those "Rules" were being properly "execute[d]".[3872]

Moreover, in the absence of some controlling statute of Congress, as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States" with a duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed", the President himself is authorized to deploy political liaison officers from the Militia within the Armed Forces, and to order the Armed Forces to accept such oversight.[3873] On the other hand, the Militia could arrest a rogue "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States" were that necessary "to execute the Laws of the Union" such a President was violating, or to "suppress [an] Insurrection[ ]" he was leading or in which he was participating. The Militia would even be entitled to disregard any purported orders from him to the contrary, on the grounds that their compliance with such orders would not constitute "the actual Service of the United States", because: (i) in promulgating such orders the individual in "the Office of President" was not acting in his constitutional capacity of "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" at all, but instead was violating both his "Oath or Affirmation" of office and his duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed"; and (ii) establishments to which the Constitution delegates the authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union" can never be ordered to violate those "Laws".[3874]

In addition, no officers in such regular "Troops, or Ships of War" as the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" may be licensed to command members of the States' Militia. For "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace".[3875] And Congress cannot condition such "Consent" on a requirement that the States' "Troops" must or even may control the States' Militia, because in either event the Militia would then become parts of or subordinate to the States' "Troops" by the contrivance of Congress or (worse yet) by connivance between Congress and the States, in violation of the

---

[3872] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3873] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and § 3.

[3874] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 and art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied); art. II, § 1, cl. 7; and art. II, § 3. See ante, at 871-880.

[3875] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

Constitution's categorical separation of "the Militia of the several States" from the States' "Troops, or Ships of War".[3876]

On the other hand, Congress could condition its "Consent" for the States to "keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace" on those forces' being subject to supervision in each State by her Militia (or perhaps by the Militia of some other State). In contradistinction to the improper subordination of the Militia to State "Troops", an arrangement of that kind would be perfectly constitutional, because it would involve "calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union" that related to Congress's "Consent" for those "Troops, or Ships of War" to exist in the first place. Congress certainly may determine that it is "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" its authority to allow the States to "keep Troops, or Ships of War" to employ the very institutions the Constitution assigns "to execute the Laws of the Union" in order to ensure that the States comply with the implicit constitutional requirement that the "Troops, or Ships of War" for which Congress gives its "Consent" always behave in a lawful manner.[3877]

A State would not need "the Consent of Congress" to "keep Troops, or Ships of War" in time of "War", or if she were "engage[d] in War" because "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[3878] Nonetheless, even under such circumstances Congress could decide that it was "necessary and proper" to "call forth[ ] the Militia" of that or some other State to supervise those "Troops" and "Ships", on the grounds that: (i) "the Law[ ] of the Union" which allows the States to "keep Troops" and "Ships" is the Constitution; (ii) the Constitution sets out the condition that such "Troops" and "Ships" may be "ke[pt]" only in time of "War" or for the particular purpose of repelling an "actual[ ]" or "imminent" invasion; and therefore (iii) in aid of "execut[ing]" the Constitution, the Militia may supervise the State's "Troops" and "Ships" so as to ensure that they are deployed at such a time and for such a purpose alone.

(3) The Constitution implicitly presumes that "the Militia of the several States" will always be operationally superior to "the Army and Navy of the United States" in whatever ways may be necessary and sufficient for the Militia to serve as effective "checks and balances" against rogue "standing armies". This is self-evident: For to remain politically and legally superior to the regular Armed Forces in fact, and well as in political and legal principle, the Militia must always retain operational superiority as to them in fact wherever and whenever such superiority is most important.

[3876] See generally, e.g., Kathleen M. Sullivan, "Unconstitutional Conditions", 102 Harvard Law Review 1413 (1989). See ante, at 1304, notes 2642 and 2643 & accompanying text.

[3877] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3878] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

The most obviously efficacious operational "checks and balances" against rogue "standing armies" fall into two categories: deterrence, and resistance if deterrence fails:

(a) The first line of operational superiority is deterrence by timely exposure. If rogues in the Armed Forces cannot plot in secret, their schemes will all die aborning, and may not even be set into motion in the first place. Living in a self-governing Republic, WE THE PEOPLE must acquire complete and accurate information as to everything subject to their governance. The Armed Forces must be subject to the closest possible governance. Therefore, THE PEOPLE must conduct day-to-day oversight of the Armed Forces. Being well advised, however, by the admonition Quis custodes custodiet?[3879] THE PEOPLE cannot safely leave such supervision to personnel in the Armed Forces or to THE PEOPLE'S civilian "representatives", either or both of whom might turn rogue. (If such laissez-faire has ever been possible, the mushrooming growth of "the military-industrial complex" since World War II proves that it is now neither practical nor prudent.) So THE PEOPLE must ask the further question, Quis custodes custodire potest?[3880] In the present situation, that question has but one answer: THE PEOPLE themselves. And, in their Militia, THE PEOPLE themselves comprise the perfect institutions to perform the task. The Constitution imposes on the Militia the responsibility to guarantee "the security of a free State" against "large military establishments and standing armies" which may afford "facile means * * * to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people".[3881] The Constitution endows the Militia with the authority and responsibility "to execute the Laws of the Union".[3882] As the ultimate beneficiaries of "the security of a free State", the members of the Militia are possessed of every personal incentive linked to liberty and the pursuit of happiness to engage in such supervision. And the Militia dispose of a plenitude of personnel capable of doing the job.

Thus, acting on the precept that "knowledge is power", revitalized Militia can best preserve their operational superiority to "the Army and Navy of the United States" by being "call[ed] forth to execute the Laws of the Union" that pertain to the "Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces" enacted by Congress;[3883] and their operational superiority to the States' "Troops, or Ships of War" by having Congress condition its "Consent" for the States to "keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace" on those forces' being subject to

---

[3879] "Who shall guard the guardians?"

[3880] "Who is able to guard the guardians?"

[3881] See J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646, explaining U.S. Const. amend. II.

[3882] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3883] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 14.

supervision in each State by her Militia.[3884] Such oversight will deter the Armed Forces from going rogue, and in the event that deterrence fails will provide an early warning which will enable the Militia and loyal elements in the Armed Forces to intervene and prevent the rogues from doing too much damage.

(b) The second line of operational superiority is deterrence by expectation of defeat. If rogues in the Armed Forces recognize that any attempt to impose "martial law" on this country will arouse THE PEOPLE against them in a firestorm which regular troops and para-military police cannot possibly quench, even complots that have been successfully kept secret will wither on the vine.

(c) The second line of operational superiority depends, however, on the third and final line, which is actual resistance by THE PEOPLE that cannot be overcome. How revitalized Militia can preserve operational superiority over well organized, equipped, and trained rogue Armed Forces in the field, of course, poses the main problem.

In the nature of things, no matter how "well regulated" they might come to be, the Militia could probably never maintain a thoroughgoing technical superiority over the regular Armed Forces on every point of organization, arms and other equipment, discipline, training, and so forth relevant to modern military operations. So instead of attempting to compete in all of these areas, the Militia should take advantage of their unique, inherent, and permanent source of superiority over the Armed Forces: namely, their identity with WE THE PEOPLE. Being composed of THE PEOPLE, the Militia will always be imbued with the correct political attitude for any military establishment which truly intends to "Serve the People"—that is, to guarantee "the security of a free State" by remaining "wholly dedicated to the liberation of the people and work[ing] entirely in the people's interest".[3885] Because the Militia are THE PEOPLE, they will always have on their side not only THE PEOPLE'S "hearts and minds" to lend moral support, but also THE PEOPLE'S hands to labor at whatever work may be necessary. Being THE PEOPLE, the Militia will always vastly outnumber the Armed Forces. And being dispersed in every Local community throughout America where THE PEOPLE actually live and work, the Militia will always enjoy the benefits of specialized knowledge, experience, and skills acquired, put to use, practiced, and perfected over long periods of time in all sorts of circumstances—none of which the Armed Forces could possibly duplicate.

A PEOPLE as numerous as Americans, armed to the teeth, defending a land as extensive as the United States with the tried and true strategies and tactics of guerrilleros or "irregulars", and determined to remain free, cannot be conquered. Indeed, in light of the successes of popular resistance-movements against British repression on the relatively small islands of Ireland (during and after World War I) and Cyprus (after World War II)—even with the British in complete control of ingress and egress by both air and sea, with the forces of occupation able to draw upon secure bases overseas, and with the indigenous freedom fighters possessed of little more than small arms, scanty supplies of ammunition, and only a few explosive devices—the notion that "martial law" could suppress some three hundred million people in physical control of most of the territory within a massive swath across the continent of North America, a great many of them both well armed and incensed against their oppressors, is ludicrous.[3886]

---

[3884] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3885] Compare U.S. Const. amend. II with Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 172.

So, to establish and maintain their operational superiority as "checks and balances" against "standing armies", revitalized "Militia of the several States" should develop the highest possible degree of proficiency in guerrilla and other "irregular" operations. This is the natural way for WE THE PEOPLE to conduct a "people's war" against both foreign aggressors and especially domestic usurpers and tyrants. For any "people's war" is at base a political struggle, a collective act of self-defense that aims to secure sovereignty for "the people" "'out of the barrel[s] of [the] gun[s]'" they hold in their very own hands.[3887]

Besides playing to the Militia's overwhelmingly strong suit of identity with THE PEOPLE, an emphasis on preparation for guerrilla resistance would prove both inexpensive and convenient, important considerations were the Militia to be revitalized during a period of economic stringency. First, a great deal of new and costly equipment would not be required—for most patriotic Americans who already possessed firearms suitable for Militia service would probably also possess enough other useful items to fit out a typical résistant's minimum kit. Second, manuals of instruction, and even actual instructors, for the full range of guerrilla operations would be readily available (just as they are today[3888])—although, of course, Militia across the country would need to tailor the basic principles of such operations to the peculiar resources, advantages, and problems their own Localities offered and [3886] See, e.g., Commandant General Tom Barry, Guerilla Days in Ireland (Dublin, Ireland: Anvil Books, 1989); J.B.E. Hittle, Michael Collins and the Anglo-Irish War: Britain's Counterinsurgency Failure (Washington, D.C.: Potomac Books, Inc., 2011); The Memoirs of General Grivas, Charles Foley, Editor (New York, New York: Frederick A. Praeger, Inc., 1964). See generally, e.g., Robert Taber, War of the Flea: The Classic Study of Guerrilla Warfare (Washington, D.C.: Potomac Books, Inc., 2002); Friedrich August Freiherr von der Heydte, Modern Irregular Warfare in Defense Policy and as a Military Phenomenon, George Gregory, Translator (New York, New York: New Benjamin Franklin House, 1986).

---

[3887] Compare Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61 with R. Taber, War of the Flea, ante note 3882, at 10.

[3888] See, e.g., Department of the Army, U.S. Army Guerrilla Warfare Handbook (New York, New York: Skyhorse Publishing, Inc., reprint of the original Field Manual, 2009); Department of the Army, U.S. Army Improvised Munitions Handbook (New York, New York: Skyhorse Publishing, Inc., reprint of the original Field Manual, 2012); The Partisan's Companion: The Guerrilla Fighter's Handbook (3rd Edition, 1942), translated as The Red Army's Do-It-Yourself Nazi-Bashing Guerrilla Warfare Manual, Lester Grau and Michael Gress, Editors (Havertown, Pennsylvania: Casemate Publishers, 2011).

presented. Third, training could be accomplished Locally, where the future guerrilleros lived, and on an efficient part-time basis. Fourth, as the training in each Locality would necessarily focus on the specific strategies and tactics future résistants and other partisans would employ in the event of some oppressors' declaration of "martial law" in that particular area, literally hundreds or even thousands of experiments could be performed, both on sand-tables and in the field, in order to devise and perfect the best possible methods for conducting campaigns of resistance in a wide range of different situations—thus insuring the defeat of any "standing army" or para-military constabulary which relied upon only a few largely theoretical "school solutions" of counterinsurgency.

Moreover, nothing precludes the Militia from developing other novel techniques to thwart a rogue "standing army". Pointing to contemporary "private militias" as their models, opponents sneeringly predict that revitalized Militia will turn out to be ill-regulated gaggles of poorly educated misfits from the margins of society which will provide little if any real security to their communities, in comparison to professional Armed Forces (such as the Army and the National Guard) and civilian para-military police departments. Such predictions fail to take into account, however, that, upon revitalization of the Militia, existing State and Local police forces, Sheriffs' departments, and other law-enforcement and emergency-services agencies will be absorbed into and deployed by the Militia as units of specialists akin to the "Rangers" and "Minutemen" of the pre-constitutional era.[3889] That will leave the Militia to be compared with the Armed Forces alone. And such a comparison will be anything but unfavorable to the Militia.

Nothing particularly distinguishes individuals in the Armed Forces as such from everyone else in society. So, man for man and woman for woman, the individuals who will serve in revitalized Militia can be expected to be just as capable as their counterparts in the Armed Forces. Indeed, they will probably prove to be more capable, because revitalized Militia in every State will draw upon tens and even hundreds of thousands of individuals from all walks and stages of life, with far more diverse backgrounds, educations, knowledge, skills, accomplishments, and experiences than the typical individuals serving in the Armed Forces. In addition, upon their return to civilian life, many soldiers demobilized from the Armed Forces will be required to enroll in or will volunteer for the Militia, bringing with them whatever specialized training, expertise, and experience they acquired during their previous service.

Of course, training is largely what separates a "civilian" from a "soldier" in practice. Once the Militia are revitalized, though, their members will be offered and often required to engage in training in many ways equal, and in some ways even superior, to the training personnel in the Armed Forces will normally receive. The Constitution "reserv[es] to the States respectively * * * the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress".[3890] That "discipline" must prepare the Militia to perform the three purposes for which they may be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States": namely, "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions".[3891] Because the Militia may well need to work in close coöperation with the Armed Forces to "suppress Insurrections" and especially to "repel Invasions", Congress will need to "prescribe[ ]" military and para-military "discipline" for the Militia that at least approximates the Armed Forces' standards. On the other hand, Congress will also have to "prescribe[ ]" for the Militia "discipline" specifically tailored to "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union", necessitating types of training to which few in the Armed Forces, other than military police and lawyers, will ever be exposed. So, on that score, man for man the Militia's training will actually exceed the Armed Forces' standards. In addition, each of the several States will train her own Militia to perform "homeland-security" duties peculiar to that State. So, as to those matters, the Militia will be trained in numerous ways that next to no personnel of the Armed Forces will ever experience. In short, anything the Armed Forces will be able to do in certain of the areas of responsibility that the Constitution assigns to the Militia the Militia will be able to do equally well. And many things that the Militia will be able to do in other areas of their responsibility the Armed Forces will be unprepared to do.

---

[3889] See ante, at 327-328, 1135-1138, 1194-1202, 1276-1277, 1291-1292, and 1482-1488.

c. All of the foregoing is well and good enough in principle. The question remains, nonetheless, how to insure that "the Militia of the several States" are always maintained separate from, independent of, and superior to the regular Armed Forces in actual practice. To answer this question, one needs to ask how designing men in public office might attempt to eliminate—and, indeed, have largely eliminated—the Militia as viable "checks and balances" against rogue Armed Forces. The ultimate goal of such miscreants must be to preclude the very possibility of organization of all eligible Americans in the Militia in each and every State, by convincing them that they need not be organized, and then depriving them of the firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements required in order to field effective Militia, so that even if by some miracle they disabuse themselves of the party line, realize that they have the right, power, and duty to be organized, and recognize the need to organize in order to defend themselves against usurpation and tyranny, they will neither possess nor be able to acquire the necessary equipment.

(1) The most obvious way for rogue public officials to proceed would be openly and formally to disestablish the Militia in their entireties. Then people promoting revitalization of the Militia would be merely whistling in the wind. Even for the most blatant of usurpers, however, this would be impossible without excising from the Constitution all of its references to the Militia.[3892] And such a formal disestablishment would require ratification of a new constitutional Amendment, during the national debate on which the true significance of the Militia might just come to the fore—leading not to disestablishment but to revitalization.

---

[3890] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3891] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

(2) Inasmuch as rogue officials do not dare—so far—to attempt to disestablish the Militia openly, they must try to destroy them through stealth. To a large extent this has already been accomplished, by inventing an imaginary "militia of the United States" unknown to the Constitution, denoting the National Guard and the Naval Militia as "the organized militia" when they are not any sort of "militia" at all, and consigning every individual not enrolled in those establishments to "the unorganized militia", which for all intents and purposes is nothing more than an empty and useless shell.[3893] Because these political ploys merely play deceptively on words, though, they could easily be thwarted by revitalization of the true Militia. Substantively, nothing would need to be changed with respect to the National Guard and the Naval Militia. It would be enough for officials of the General Government and the States simply to stop using the misnomers "militia of the United States" and "organized militia" in reference to those two establishments; and instead candidly to admit that they consist of the "Troops, or Ships of War" the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress",[3894] with all of the legal and other consequences that admission entails.

(3) Another method by which the Militia have been and are being suppressed through stealth is "gun control". By convincing Americans that, at most, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is a so-called "individual right" not necessarily connected to the Militia[3895]—and that therefore "the people" enjoy no constitutional right to participate collectively in "well regulated Militia" according to pre-constitutional principles—the enemies of "a free State" have deprived "the people" of the very institutions the Constitution itself declares to be "necessary to the security of a free State".[3896] In addition, "gun control" deprives "the people" of the specific types of firearms, ammunition, and accoutrements most suitable for Militia service under contemporary conditions[3897]—so that "the people" cannot [3892] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16; art. II, § 2, cl. 1; and amends. II and V.

---

[3893] See 10 U.S.C. § 311.

[3894] See ante, at 786-793.

[3895] See District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 576-578, 598-605 (2008) (Scalia, J., for the Court).

[3896] U.S. Const. amend. II (emphasis supplied).

[3897] See, e.g., the egregious dicta in District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 592, 626 (2008) (Scalia, J., for the Court).

easily prepare themselves for revitalization of the Militia by their legislators in the normal course of events, let alone through their own efforts if they are compelled to assert "the right of restoration" against rogue public officials in extraordinary circumstances.[3898] Of course, when WE THE PEOPLE have once and for all disabused themselves of such false interpretations of the Second Amendment, revitalization of the Militia will entirely alleviate these problems.

(4) The most insidious tactic for effectively nullifying the Militia involves absorbing directly into the Armed Forces those individuals most useful to the Militia. This process is doubly destructive. On the one hand, it depletes the Militia, rendering ineffective the very institutions intended to serve as "checks and balances" against "the standing army", and otherwise "necessary to the security of a free State". On the other hand, it balloons "the standing army", the very domestic institution most dangerous to "the security of a free State". This tactic is employed in two ways:

(a) Many individuals interested in military service as "citizen-soldiers" voluntarily join the National Guard and the Naval Militia under the mistaken impression that these establishments are constitutional "militia", when in fact they consist of the "Troops, or Ships of War" the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" as adjuncts to "the Army and Navy of the United States".[3899] This removes probably the most highly motivated individuals from the pool of those eligible for the Militia in their communities. It also convinces almost everyone else who bothers to think about the subject at all that "militia" do exist in their States, but that (fortunately for them) they are not required to enroll. That, of course, fosters precisely the insouciance, self-centeredness, and sloth which concerned Joseph Story in the 1830s, when he warned that > among the American people, there is a growing indifference to any system of militia discipline, and a strong disposition, from a sense of its burdens, to be rid of all regulations. How it is practicable to keep the people duly armed without some organization it is difficult to see. There is certainly no small danger that indifference may lead to disgust, and disgust to contempt; and thus gradually undermine all the protections intended by [the Second Amendment.][3900]

"[U]ndermine" is not the half of it, though. For if the supposed "organized militia" actually consists of State "Troops, and Ships of War" committed to possible service with "the Army and Navy of the United States", and if the remainder of Americans

---

[3898] See ante, Chapter 32.

[3899] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3. See ante, at 786-793.

[3900] Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646 (footnote omitted).

eligible for the Militia are consigned to a supposed "unorganized militia", then of course it will prove "[im]practical to keep the people duly armed", and of course "all the protections intended by [the Second Amendment]" will ultimately be lost.

Yet, as observed above, this problem can be solved, not by significantly restructuring the National Guard and the Naval Militia, but simply by revitalizing "the Militia of the several States" in a political climate of opinion that demands the transformation of "homeland security" from a "top-down" to a "bottom-up" operation. Once the National Guard and the Naval Militia, on the one side, and "the Militia of the several States", on the other side, are in open competition—with the Militia enjoying the advantage of preferential compulsory membership by all eligible individuals from sixteen years of age up—the vast majority will likely prefer to remain in the Militia.[3901]

(b) As with the National Guard and the Naval Militia, today the regular Armed Forces of the United States are made up entirely of volunteers.[3902] Nonetheless, since the 1860s, rogue public officials in the General Government have claimed, and continue to claim, a power to draft any and all individuals into the Armed Forces, in time of peace as well as in time of war, and for any reason. The Constitution, however, delegates no explicit power "to draft", "to impress", or in any other language to require anyone to serve in the "Armies" or the "Navy" of the United States. So advocates of such compulsory service have implied a power "to draft" or "to impress" within Congress's powers "[t]o raise and support Armies", "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy", and "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers".[3903] A power without limitations, too—because its exponents refuse to admit that the phrases "[t]o raise", "[t]o provide", and especially "Laws which shall be necessary and proper" must be construed within the historical and legal contexts in which they first arose.

Such a power of universal impressment in favor of expanding the regular Armed Forces necessarily implies a corresponding power of universal contraction of the Militia, such that "the standing army" may employ the draft even to eliminate [3901] "Preferential compulsory membership" would recognize that membership in the Militia is each citizen's primary constitutional duty. Therefore, anyone enrolled in the Militia would need a specific exemption in order to volunteer for the National Guard or the Naval Militia. Such an exemption would not be automatic, either, but would require approval by a Militia exemption board (essentially the opposite of a traditional draft board), which would determine whether the Militia did or did not need that particular individual at that particular time. In light of the very large numbers of Americans eligible for revitalized Militia, sufficient exemptions would probably be allowed for the National Guard and the Naval Militia to maintain their present strengths in terms of numbers, although the Militia could be expected to retain within their ranks most of the enrollees of the highest quality.

---

[3902] See, e.g., Bernard Rostker, I Want You! The Evolution of the All-Volunteer Force (Santa Monica, California: RAND Corporation, 2006).

[3903] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12, 13, and 18.

all "checks and balances" emanating from the Militia, by bleeding the Militia into impotence. And such a transfusion of the Armed Forces with the lifeblood of the Militia could not be cut back, let alone cut off, simply by revitalizing the Militia. The question then becomes, "How can too great an absorption into the regular Armed Forces of individuals eligible for the Militia be prevented?" As with so many political conundrums these days, the answer is that the reigning misconstruction of the Constitution on this score must first be exposed and corrected. Which actually is a solution simpler than it appears, because the notion that Congress possesses an unlimited power to draft individuals into the Armed Forces collapses rather readily in the face of history and sound legal analysis.

B. The practice of impressment in *pre-*constitutional law and history. As with the true meaning of the power of Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" and of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", one must turn first to *pre-*constitutional experience in order to determine how to construe, in relation to the Militia, the powers of Congress "[t]o raise and support Armies" and "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy", and the power of the States to "keep Troops, or Ships of War".[3904] For "[i]n construing * * * a constitution established by the people as the supreme law of the land, regard is to be had, not only to all parts of the act itself, and of any former act of the same law-making power, but also to the condition, and to the history, of the law as previously existing, and in the light of which the new act must be read and interpreted".[3905]

1. *Pre-*constitutional English practice. In his discussion "OF THE MILITARY AND MARITIME STATES" under English law, with respect to the British Army Blackstone observed that > [T]HE military state includes the whole of the soldiery; or, such persons as are peculiarly appointed among the rest of the people, for the safeguard and defence of the realm.

>
> IN a land of liberty it is extremely dangerous to make a distinct order of the profession of arms. In absolute monarchies this is necessary for the safety of the prince, and arises from the main principle of their constitution, which is that of governing by fear: but in free states the profession of a soldier, taken singly and merely as a profession, is justly an object of jealousy. In these no man should take up arms, but with a view to defend his country and it's laws: he puts not off the citizen when he enters the camp; but it is because he is a citizen, and would wish to continue so, that he makes himself for a while a soldier. The laws therefore and the constitution of these kingdoms [that is, England,

---

[3904] See ante, Chapter 1.

[3905] United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 653-654 (1898).

Scotland, and Ireland] know no such state as that of a perpetual standing soldier, bred up to no other profession than that of war * * * .

* * * * *

UPON the Norman conquest the foedal law was introduced here in all it's rigor, the whole of which is built on a military plan. * * * [I]n consequence thereof, all the lands in the kingdom were divided into what were called knight's fees * * * ; and for every knight's fee a knight or soldier, miles, was bound to attend the king in his wars for forty days in the year * * * . This personal service in process of time degenerated into pecuniary commutations or aids, and at last the military part of the foedal system was abolished at the restoration [of King Charles II] * * * .

IN the mean time we are not to imagine that the kingdom was left wholly without defence, in case of domestic insurrections, or the prospect of foreign invasion. Besides those, who by their military tenures were bound to perform forty days service in the field, the statute of Winchester [in 1285] obliged every man, according to his estate and degree, to provide a determinate quantity of such arms as were then in use, in order to keep the peace * * * .

* * * * *

SOON after the restoration of king Charles the second, * * * it was thought proper to ascertain the power of the militia, to recognize the sole right of the crown to govern and command them, and to put the whole into a more regular method of military subordination: and the order, in which the militia now stands by law, is principally built upon the statutes which were then enacted * * * the general scheme of which is to discipline a certain number of the inhabitants in every county * * * . They are not compelled to march out of their counties, unless in case of invasion or actual rebellion, nor in any case compellable to march out of the kingdom. They are to be exercised at stated times: and their discipline in general is liberal and easy; but, when drawn out into actual service, they are subject to the rigours or martial law, as necessary to keep them in order. This is the constitutional security, which our laws have provided for the public peace, and for protecting the realm against foreign or domestic violence; and which the statutes declare is essentially necessary to the safety and prosperity of the kingdom.

WHEN the nation [that is, Great Britain] was engaged in war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline were esteemed to be necessary, than could be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times more rigorous methods were put in use for the raising of armies and the due regulation and discipline of the soldiery: which are to be looked upon only as temporary excrescences bred out of the distemper of the state, and not as any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of the kingdom. * * *

BUT, as the fashion of keeping standing armies * * * has of late years universally prevailed over Europe * * * it has also for many years > past been annually judged necessary by our legislature, for the safety of the kingdom, the defence of the possessions of the crown of Great Britain, and the preservation of the balance of power in Europe, to maintain even in time of peace a standing body of troops under the command of the crown; who are however ipso facto disbanded at the expiration of every year, unless continued by parliament. * * *

>
> TO prevent the executive power from being able to oppress, * * * it is requisite that the armies with which it is entrusted should consist of the people, and have the same spirit with the people * * * . Nothing then, according to these principles, ought to be more guarded against in a free state, than making the military power, when such a one is necessary to be kept on foot, a body too distinct from the people. Like ours therefore, it should wholly be composed of natural subjects; it ought only to be enlisted for a short and limited time; the soldiers also should live intermixed with the people; no separate camp, no barracks, no inland fortresses should be allowed. And perhaps it might be still better, if, by dismissing a stated number and enlisting others at every renewal of their term, a circulation could be kept up between the army and the people, and the citizen and the soldier be more intimately connected together.[3906]

Most revealing here is the exact parallel that can be drawn between "the main principle of the[ ] constitution[s]" of "absolute monarchies" in and before Blackstone's day and of totalitarian dictatorships in contemporary times: namely, the principle and practice of "governing by fear". In the parlance of both the late 1700s and today, "governing by fear" can be restated as "official terrorism". For the first definition of "terrorism" is "a mode of government by terror or intimidation".[3907] And, in the Founding Era, "to intimidate" meant (as it means today) "[t]o make fearful".[3908] Therefore, according to Blackstone (as well as the common sense of modern history), "official terrorism" usually depends upon some type of "standing army", either in the traditional form or quite often today in the deceptively quasi-"civilian" form of a para-military police-state apparatus (often denominated "the secret police", although its existence and purpose are never kept secret from the masses whom it aims to frighten into submission). For that reason, as Blackstone recommended and America's Founding Fathers embodied in the Militia Clauses of the original Constitution and in the Second Amendment, in a "free state" "the military power, when such a one is necessary to be kept on foot, [should not be] a body too distinct from the people".

[3906] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 407, 409-414 (footnotes omitted).

[3907] Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 1489 (emphasis supplied). Accord, The Compact Edition of the Oxford English Dictionary, ante note 11, Volume 2, at 3268.

[3908] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions. Accord, N. Webster, An American Dictionary, ante note 15; Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 781; Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 1301.

With respect to the pre-constitutional British Navy, although Blackstone opined that "[T]HE maritime state is * * * much more agreeable to the principles of our free constitution", he also pointed out that > [t]he power of impressing men for the sea service by the king's commission, has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance; though * * * the practice of impressing * * * is of very antient date, and hath been uniformly continued by a regular series of precedents to the present time * * * . The difficulty arises * * * that no statute has expressly declared this power to be in the crown, though many of them very strongly imply it. * * * All which do most evidently imply a power of impressing to reside somewhere; and, if any where, it must from the spirit of our constitution, as well as from the frequent mention of the king's commission [in the statutes] reside in the crown alone.

>
> BUT * * * this method of impressing * * * is only defensible from public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way[.][3909]

So, even as to her Navy, always England's first and foremost line of defense, impressment was "only defensible from public necessity", "and submitted to with great reluctance".

Not surprisingly, then, Britain never attempted to impose a draft for her Army in the Colonies. No draft existed in the Mother Country until almost two years after the Colonies declared their independence.[3910] And even these statutes provided only for highly selective drafts similar to those enacted in Virginia during the pre-constitutional era.[3911]

2. The practice in the Colonies and then the independent States. Impressment for military service was not foreign to the policy of the Colonies and the independent States.

a. As to the Militia. Impressment with respect to members of the Militia took several forms.

[3909] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 417, 418-419.

[3910] See An Act for the more easy and better recruiting of his Majesty's Land Forces and Marines, 18 George III, CAP. LIII, in THE STATUTES at LARGE, From the Sixteenth Year of the Reign of KING GEORGE the THIRD, To the Twentieth Year of the Reign of KING GEORGE the THIRD, inclusive (London, England: Charles Eyre and William Strahan, 1780), Volume 13, at 273, particularly §§ IX and X, at 274-275; superseded by An Act for repealing an Act, made in the last Session of Parliament, intituled, An Act for the more easy and better recruiting of his Majesty's Land Forces and Marines; and for substituting other and more effectual Provisions in the Place thereof, 19 George III, CAP. X, in THE STATUTES at LARGE, ante, Volume 13, at 316, particularly §§ XVI through XIX and XXII, at 318-319; repealed as to impressment and continued as to volunteers by An Act to continue, for a limited Time, so much of an Act, made in the last Session of Parliament, for the more easy and better recruiting his Majesty's Land Forces and Marines, as relates to the Encouragement of Volunteers, 20 George III, CAP. VII, in THE STATUTES at LARGE, ante, Volume 13, at 557.

[3911] See ante, at 375-382.

(1) The Militia themselves were (and would be today) always and everywhere based upon compulsory service by every able-bodied adult free man from the time he reached the minimum age for enrollment.[3912] So, in both principle and practice, anyone impressed into the regular Armed Forces of a Colony or State was, in effect, transferred from the Militia.

(2) In many instances, drafts were made within the Militia for service with the Militia only.

(a) In Rhode Island, as their name implied, "Minutemen" were always subject to call at all times. For example:

> [1775] "That the * * * Minute-Men march for the Defence of the Colony, when and as often as they shall be called upon by the Colonel of the Regiment to which they respectively belong[.]"{EN-2059}

Their exposure to such arduous service, however, was the result of their initial voluntary enlistments in the Militia's Minute Companies.

Otherwise, all Militia service was entirely compulsory—but often mitigated by a process of "draughts" working through rotation:

> • [1776] "That all male Persons subject by Law to bear Arms, whether of the Militia, Alarm List or Independent Companies * * * be draughted in three Divisions * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> " * * * That the Division on actual Duty shall be relieved monthly, in the Order they shall be drawn out, by other Divisions * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> " * * * [I]n case any Officer or Soldier * * * shall refuse or neglect to appear at Time and Place ordered * * * , either by himself or a good able-bodied and suitable Person in his Stead, to enter upon and perform such military Duty as shall be enjoined him, he shall be subjected to and pay * * * Fines, Forfeitures, and Penalties [.]"{EN-2060}
>
> • [1777] "[T]hat the first division of the second draft of the militia, and alarm and independent companies, heretofore drafted * * * march to such part of the shores within their respective counties, as shall be directed by the commanding officer * * * , properly equipped, to relieve those that are now upon duty, and there to remain and do duty for fifteen days * * * .
>
> * * * * *

[3912] See ante, Chapters 5, 16, 34, and 35.

"And * * * in case of sickness and inability to do duty (which alone shall excuse any person), it shall be in the power of * * * the field officers * * * to permit such a person to hire a man to do his tour of duty; and if such sick and unable person shall be so extremely poor * * * as to be unable to hire a person in his stead, that such field officer be empowered to remit such poor person's fine."{EN-2061}

• [1777] "That one of the Divisions, consisting of the One Sixth Part of the Independent and Alarm Companies and the Militia heretofore draughted, and One Half of a Division, be immediately called upon actual Duty * * * : That they continue in Service for the Space of Fifteen Days, and be relieved at the Expiration of said Time by the other half of said Division, and one other Division, in the Order in which said Divisions were drawn, to continue in Service during said Time; and that the Divisions on actual Duty from Time to Time be relieved and do Duty in Manner as is before directed.

* * * * *

" * * * [I]n case any Officer or Soldier * * * shall neglect to appear at Time and Place ordered * * * , either by himself or a good able-bodied and suitable Person in his Stead, compleatly equipped with Arms and Accoutrements, to enter upon and perform such military Duty as shall be enjoined him, he shall be liable to pay as a Fine for each Day's Neglect the Sum of Five Shillings[.]"{EN-2062}

• [1777] "That one Half of the Militia, Alarm, Independent, and Artillery Companies, be drafted * * * ; and that the Persons who shall be drafted * * * be duly equipped with Arms and Accoutrements according to Law."{EN-2063}

• [1777] "Whereas * * * one half of the militia, independent, artillery and alarm companies within this State were draughted, and have done duty for one month,—

"It is voted * * * that the remaining half-part of militia, independent, artillery and alarm companies, be draughted into two divisions * * * .

" * * * [O]ne of the said divisions * * * shall march to such place or places as shall be ordered * * * and do duty for the space of thirty days * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [I]f any person who shall be draughted * * * shall neglect to do duty, or hire a man to do his tour of duty, the town council of the town in which such person shall reside, are empowered to hire a man in the room of such delinquent person, * * * if the delinquent person be adjudged by such town council of sufficient ability to bear the expense thereof[.]"{EN-2064}

• [1777] "[T]hat the militia and alarm company of the town of Little Compton be drafted into two divisions * * * .

"That one of the said divisions do duty within the said town, to guard the shores of the same, for the space of thirty days * * * .

"That after the expiration of the said thirty days, the first division be relieved by the second, who shall do duty within the said town, for the space of thirty days.

"That they continue to relieve each other, and do duty in manner as aforesaid, until the further orders of this Assembly."{EN-2065}

• [1777] "[T]he council of war of this state [may] call forth into actual duty, such part of the militia, independent and alarm companies, within this state, for the defence thereof, as they shall from time to time think necessary, in the order in which they have been draughted, to supply the delinquencies of the quotas to be furnished for the purpose aforesaid, by the states of the Massachusetts Bay, New Hampshire and Connecticut, and in the proportion they shall be deficient therein."{EN-2066}

• [1778] "[I]n case of an alarm, * * * the commander of the troops within this state * * * [shall] be empowered, with the advice and concurrence of * * * the Governor * * * , to call forth the militia, alarm and independent companies, or any part thereof, to do duty, which they shall be held to do, within this state only, unless in cases of imminent danger, when they shall be marched to any place within his command.

* * * * *

" * * * [E]very officer and soldier who shall neglect or refuse to do his duty when so called, and every person who shall be do draughted, and shall not appear, or procure an effective man in his room, shall be * * * punished for disobedience * * * in the same manner as officers and soldiers in actual service may be: excepting persons of tender consciences, for whom the town councils * * * shall provide effective men[.]"{EN-2067}

• [1781] "Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men of the Independent, Artillery, Senior and Junior Class Companies of Militia * * * be forthwith embodied; and that they rendezvous at such Places within this State * * * to do Duty therein for One Month * * * .

* * * * *

"AND * * * the * * * Commanders of each Regiment * * * shall forthwith issue their Warrants to the Captains of each Company * * * , setting forth the Number of the * * * able-bodied effective Men, which such Company is required to furnish, and commanding such Captain * * * , if the said Number of Men shall not voluntarily turn out to do Duty * * * , to detach the Men for the Service * * * and cause them to be marched to the Place of Rendezvous * * * .

* * * * *

"AND * * * the * * * Commanders * * * shall proportion the Men which each Company shall raise according to the Numbers of Men which the Company shall consist of, in Proportion to the whole Number to be raised by the Town to which such Companies shall respectively belong.

"AND * * * the Commanders of each respective Company * * * shall forthwith call their * * * Companies together, and in case the Number of able-bodied effective Men which such Company is required to raise shall not voluntarily turn out to do Duty * * * , that then such Commander shall detach such a Number of Men as will make up their Quota * * * .

"AND * * * the [named individuals] appointed to class the Inhabitants of the Islands of Rhode-Island and Jamestown * * * be * * * empowered and directed, to detach from the Inhabitants of their respective Towns the Number of Men * * * assigned to the said Towns, unless they shall voluntarily engage in the said Service[.]"{EN-2068}

• [1781] "[T]hat the following independent companies, to wit: the Artillery of Providence, the Kentish Guards, the Kingstown Reds and the Pawtuxet Rangers, forthwith turn out one-half of the men belonging to their respective corps, to march to Newport, * * * there to do duty for one month; that the men so furnished by the said independent companies be accounted to the towns to which they respectively belong, and be reckoned as so many men furnished towards their quota of five hundred men * * * ; that the towns of Tiverton and Little Compton forthwith furnish one hundred and two men, to be at Newport * * * to do duty for ten days, which shall be in lieu of their furnishing their quota for one month's service; * * * and that the whole of the aforesaid men * * * shall be excused from doing further duty until the remaining part of the men in their respective towns shall have done an equal tour of duty."{EN-2069}

Actually, these might more accurately be styled as "deployments" or "assignments", rather than "drafts" or "impressments" in the strict sense, because everyone so selected had already been compelled to become a member of the Militia. Rather than being "impressed" in the first instance, these men were "detach[ed]", "turn[ed] out", or "furnish[ed]" for active service, or "called upon actual Duty". Moreover, in practice these drafts were largely voluntary, because in most cases anyone selected for duty could appear "either by himself or a good able-bodied and suitable Person in his Stead". Or "the town council" might be "empowered to hire a man in the room of [a] delinquent person" if he were "adjudged * * * of sufficient ability to bear the expense". And in situations in which "sickness and inability to do duty * * * alone * * * excuse[d] any person", "the field officers" could "permit such a person to hire a man to do his tour of duty; and if such sick and unable person" was "so extremely poor * * * as to be unable to hire a person in his stead", the field officers could "remit such poor person's fine".

(b) In Virginia, too, drafts were made within the Militia for service with the Militia only.

• [1727, 1732, 1734, 1738, 1740, 1744, 1748, and 1753] "[U]pon any invasion of an enemy by sea or land, or upon any insurrection, the governor * * * have full power and authority to levy, raise, arm, and muster, such a number of forces, out of the militia * * * as shall be thought needful for repelling the invasion, or suppressing the insurrection, or other danger[.]"{EN-2070}

• [1757, 1758, 1759, 1761, 1762, 1764, 1766, 1769, and 1772] "That upon any invasion of any enemy, by sea or land, or upon any insurrection, the governor * * * shall have full power and authority to levy, raise, arm and muster such a number of forces out of the militia of this colony as shall be thought needful for repelling the invasion, or suppressing the insurrection or other danger[.]

* * * * *

" * * *[T]o the end a sufficient number of men may be appointed for guarding the batteries erected in the several rivers of this dominion, and to assist in the better managing the great guns there mounted, when occasion shall be, It is hereby further enacted, That it shall * * * be lawful for the governor * * * to appoint and assign such a number of the militia as he shall think fit to attend the said batteries, * * * which number of the militia shall be drafted out of any of the militia of the county by the commanding officer of such county in which such battery is or shall be erected, and shall be exempted from all private musters, except at such battery only during their attendance at such battery[.]"{EN-2071}

• [1763] "The Council * * * were of Opinion that calling the [General] Assembly at this Juncture would be of no use, in as much as could they be prevail'd on to Levy Troops, they could not be rais'd in time to be of service this Year: They therefore advised [the Governor] to order Colo. Stephen to draught five hundred Men * * * out of [certain Counties], in proportion to the number of Militia in each County and to appoint Colo. Andrew Lewis County Lieutenant of Augusta, with directions to draught out of the Militia in that County as many Men as can well be spared, and then apply to [certain other Counties] for such a proportion of their Militia as he shall think will enable him to defend the Frontiers[.]"{EN-2072}

• [1775] "And for the more expeditious, convenient, and speedy draughting into service detachments of the militia * * * , as occasion may arise, Be it farther ordained, That, at the general muster * * * the commanding-officer of each county or corporation shall, by fair and equal lot, cause to be drawn out of each company so many men as will amount to one tenth part thereof, and cause the names of the persons so allotted to be enrolled * * * as the first division of militia for such county or corporation; and * * * shall in like manner proceed, by lot, to fix * * * nine other divisions * * * ; and thereafter, if the militia * * * shall be called into duty, the same shall be performed by the divisions, in the order they shall so stand enrolled, one after another, so as to preserve the regular rotation of duty amongst them.

* * * * *

"Provided always, That if there shall * * * be a sufficient number of men, who will voluntarily enter into the service, to answer the demand made upon the militia * * * , such volunteers shall be accepted instead of calling on the divisions[.]"{EN-2073}

• [1776] "[W]here it shall be necessary to call on duty the militia of any colony [sic, 'county' was meant], upon an invasion or insurrection within the same, or any county adjoining, the commanding-officer shall have full power and authority to order into service such part of the militia of his said county as to him shall seem necessary, and shall also call in the divisions, or any part thereof, according to allotment; and the militia first called on duty shall be discharged as soon as the divisions called in shall be ready to perform the service required of such division. And where any soldier of the militia shall fail to appear at musters through sickness, the captain * * * of such company * * * may hear any evidence offered on behalf of such person * * * and admit the excuse, if to him it shall seem just[.]"{EN-2074}

• [1777] "FOR making provision against invasions and insurrections, and laying the burthen thereof equally on all: Be it enacted * * * , That the division of the militia of each county into ten parts * * * shall be completed and kept up * * * , each part to be distinguished by fair and equal lot * * * .

" * * * The several divisions of the militia * * * shall be called into duty by regular rotation * * * ; and every person failing to attend when called on, or to send an able bodied man in his room, shall, unless there be good excuse, be considered as a deserter, and suffer accordingly. Any able bodied volunteers who will enter into the service shall be accepted instead of so many divisions of the militia * * * , or of the particular person in whose room they may offer to serve; but if the invasion or insurrection be so near and pressing as not to allow the delay of calling the division * * * next in turn, the commanding officer may call on such part of the militia as shall be most convenient to continue in duty until such division * * * can come in to supply their places."{EN-2075}

• [1780] "WHEREAS there is reason to apprehend that an invasion is now meditating against the eastern frontiers of this state, * * * the governour, with the advice of the council, be empowered to direct the county lieutenants * * * of [certain named Counties] to order one sixth part of their respective militias to hold themselves in constant readiness to march at a moment's warning, taking care in such arrangement to fix upon those who will most probably answer the purposes of this act. And if the said sixth part shall at any time be called out into actual duty, the several county lieutenants * * * shall, in like manner, > order one other sixth part of their respective militias to hold themselves in the same readiness. Prov ided, That nothing * * * shall preclude the governour and council, or commanding officer in any of the said counties from ordering out a greater part of the militia, if occasion shall require. * * * And every officer and soldier called upon to perform the duties required by this act, shall, for every day they are in the execution thereof, * * * be entitled to * * * pay[.]"{EN-2076}

As in Rhode Island, Virginia's drafts from her Militia were meant to be as economical as possible—"to levy, raise, arm, and muster * * * out of the militia * * * [only as many men] as shall be thought needful for repelling the invasion, or suppressing the insurrection, or other danger" (1727 through 1772), often "caus[ing] to be drawn out of each company" at any one time only "so many men as will amount to one tenth part" (1775) or "one sixth part" (1780), while "taking care in such arrangement to fix upon those who will most probably answer the purposes" (1780). In practice, Virginia's drafts were largely voluntary—because, "if there * * * [were] a sufficient number of men, who w[ould] voluntarily enter into the service, to answer the demand made upon the militia * * * , such volunteers [were] accepted instead of calling on the divisions" (1775); and any individual drafted could usually "send an able bodied man in his room" (1777). Virginia also aimed at an equitable process of selection—"laying the burthen [of each individual draft] equally on all" (1777), "by fair and equal lot" (1775). And Virginia spread the burden of service throughout the community by "regular rotation" (1777).

b. As to the regular Armed Forces. The Colonies and then the independent States raised regular "Troops" in various ways.

(1) Volunteers might be recruited specifically from the Militia. For example, in 1776 Rhode Island recruited men for a State regiment intended to serve with the Continental Army:

> [T]hat one regiment be * * * raised from the militia of this state, * * * to continue in the service of this state three months from the time of their enlistment, unless dismissed before that time by this Assembly.
>
> * * * * *
>
> That said regiment be composed of six men as soldiers, of every hundred of the male inhabitants of sixteen years of age, and upwards, as last estimated within this state.
>
> That the several towns within this state, raise such a number of men within their respective towns, as shall be their proportion, thereof, agreeably to the said estimate.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [T]he form of enlistment * * * be as follows, to wit:
>
> Form of Enlistment for the Soldiers.

> "I * * * hereby solemnly engage and enlist myself, as a soldier, in the regiment ordered to be raise from the militia of the state of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, in the service and pay of said state, from the day of my enlistment, for and during the term of three months, unless sooner discharged by the Assembly of said state; and I hereby promise to submit myself to all the orders and regulations of the army of the United States * * * ."{EN-2077}

Notably, this statute allowed only six percent of the Militia—"six men * * * of every hundred of the male inhabitants of sixteen years of age, and upwards"—to be recruited, indicating the General Assembly's concern, even during a time of war, with keeping under the State's control in her Militia the vast majority of Rhode Islanders eligible for service.

(2) Statutes recruiting volunteers for the Colonies' and then the States' regular Armed Forces often did not specify that the men were to be drawn from the Militia. In fact, though, if the volunteers were suitable for "soldiers" at all, they must already have been enrolled in the Militia. These statutes, then, always amounted to implicit exemptions from Militia duty during the periods in which the men served with the regular Armed Forces; and sometimes they extended such exemptions even after those periods ended, as part of the compensation paid for an individual's enlistment.

(a) During the Colonial period, Rhode Island regularly recruited men for service alongside the British Army. Usually, monetary compensation was the main inducement for enlistment:

> • [1740] "[F]or the encouragement of those who shall enlist in His Majesty's service, * * * that there be a commanding officer in each regiment in this colony appointed * * * to enlist so many men as shall be willing to serve * * * in the intended expedition against the Spaniards, which officer so appointed, shall be obliged to enlist himself.
>
> " * * * [E]ach soldier (so enlisted by said officer) being an able bodied effective man, shall have the sum of £3 allowed to him by the colony, at the time of his enlisting; and shall be exempted from all military service for the space of three years after his return, except in cases of great extremity * * * .
>
> "And in order to facilitate the raising and enlisting such soldiers, the field officers in each county be hereby empowered to call each captain's company together, in order for the * * * commanding officer to enlist the soldiers[.]"{EN-2078}
>
> Noteworthy in this statute is that: (i) the General Assembly used the Colony's Militia Companies as the most practical focal points for recruiting, but (except for "a commanding officer in each regiment * * * appointed * * * to enlist [the] men") did not draft Militiamen directly; and (ii) each individual who enlisted was "exempted from all military service for the space of three years after his return, except in cases of great extremity". Presumably, "all military service" included actual service in the Militia; but presumably, too, "cases of great extremity" included "alarms", in which everyone eligible for Militia duty was always required to serve. So, for the average Militiamen, the apparent "exempt[ion] from all military service" may have been of limited value, in that it did not apply in the most dangerous situations.

•[1755] "[I]nasmuch as there is a scheme proposed for the governments of New England, to attempt, in conjunction with other neighboring governments, to remove the encroachments which the French have made upon the lands and country of our sovereign, at or near Crown Point * * *

" * * * there [shall] be * * * raised in this colony, at the government's expense, four hundred good and able-bodied men * * * ; which troops * * * shall join and act in conjunction with those of the other governments in New England, under the command of the general of the whole army; subject, nevertheless, to the control of the General Assembly of this colony.

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he following wages * * * shall be the pay and allowance per month, of the officers and troops to be raised:

* * * * *

"Every common soldier [is to receive] £16 per month, and £20 bounty, if furnished with a good firelock; but no more than £15, without; * * * [and] if the arms brought by any soldier into the army, shall be damnified afterwards, or lost, the same shall be made good by the colony, according to the value thereof.

* * * * *

"And for a further encouragement, * * * all such officers and soldiers shall be exempted from any and every arrest and execution, for the space or term of one whole year after the expedition is ended * * * ; and shall not, during said term of one year, be impressed for, or into any further military duty or service."{EN-2079}

Once again, exemption from impressment "into any further military duty or service" for Rhode Island during "one whole year"—presumably including service in her Militia, and even in the event of "alarms"—was offered as part of the enlistee's compensation. Revealingly, too, although these troops were to "join and act in conjunction with those of the other governments in New England, under the command of the general of the whole army", they remained "subject * * * to the control of the General Assembly". Apparently, notwithstanding that the governments of the New England Colonies had agreed upon this enterprise, Rhode Island refused to surrender command of her troops to some "general of the whole army" from some other Colony.

• [1757] "Whereas, His Excellency the Earl of Loudoun, commander in chief of all His Majesty's forces in North America, hath demanded of this colony an aid of four hundred and fifty able bodied, effective men, to be employed in His Majesty's service, for, and during the ensuing campaign, in North America;—

" * * * [T]hat four hundred and fifty able bodied effective men * * * be * * * raised in this colony, to be employed in His Majesty's service, * * * for, and during a term of time, not exceeding one year * * * .

* * * * *

"And for the more easy and expeditious raising said men,—

" * * * [E]very able bodied effective man, who shall voluntarily enlist, shall receive a bounty of £30 * * * ; and be paid £25 * * * per month, during the time he continues in this service"

* * * * *

" * * * [I]n case it shall so happen that the * * * men demanded of this government, * * * and now ordered to be raised, should not be made up, * * * the deficiency shall be proportioned unto the several towns in this colony * * * ; and * * * an enlisting officer [shall] be appointed in every town[.]"{EN-2080}

• [1757] "[T]wo hundred and fifty able bodied, effective men, of the soldiers now in the pay of this colony, [shall] be enlisted anew, as they return from the service, they are now employed in, for, and during the pleasure of the General Assembly; that is to say, if so many will voluntarily enlist; and in case the said number will not, that then so many others be enlisted as shall be wanted, to make the whole number of two hundred and fifty * * * .

" * * * [A]ll the officers and soldiers so enlisted, shall have and receive the same pay as is now allowed them; * * * the bounty only excepted."{EN-2081}

• [1758] "Whereas, the King * * * is about to send a considerable reinforcement of land forces * * * to carry the war into the enemy's country; expecting that the six northern provinces will raise twenty thousand men, to be joined to, and co-operate with his regular forces * * *

" * * * one thousand able bodied, effective men * * * [shall] be forthwith raised in this colony, to be employed in His Majesty's service[.]

* * * * *

"And for the encouragement of men to enlist,—

" * * * [E]very able bodied man * * * shall receive a bounty of $18 * * * ; and shall have the monthly wages of $5[.]50 * * * ."{EN-2082}

• [1759] "[T]he troops now in the government's pay, [shall] be augmented to the number of one thousand able bodied, effective men[.]

* * * * *

"And for an encouragement to the soldiers now belonging to the regiment, to behave well, and to induce others to enlist into the same,—

" * * * [E]ach soldier shall * * * receive the same pay and billeting * * * that the soldiers had and enjoyed the last year; bounty only excepted."{EN-2083}

• [1759] "[T]o encourage good men to enlist and fill up the [regiment ordered by this government to be raised for the King's service] * * *

" * * * all such able bodied effective men as hereafter enlist * * * shall be allowed and paid down * * * wages and billeting for two months back from the time of enlisting; which amounts to £111 * * * ; and on or about the time of embarkation, each man shall have two months pay advanced to him."{EN-2084}

• [1759] "[O]ne hundred and fifteen able bodied, effective men [shall] be raised in this government * * * to complete the regiment ordered by the General Assembly, for the campaign of the current year; which men * * * shall be presented unto the committee of war, who are * * * to send them immediately unto Albany, to join the regiment there.

"And for the encouragement of such men to enlist as may be fit for the purpose,—

" * * * [A] bounty of £14 * * * shall be given each able bodied, effective man * * * ; he shall also be entitled to the same monthly wages * * * with the other soldiers now in the regiment, and receive a month's pay before the time of his embarkation."{EN-2085}

• [1760] "That One Thousand able-bodied effective Men * * * be forthwith raised in this Colony; to be employed in his Majesty's Service, until the End of the ensuing Campaign, and no longer * * * .

* * * * *

"AND for the Encouragement of Men to inlist, * * * That every able-bodied effective Man * * * shall receive a Bounty of Nine Pounds Lawful Money * * * and be provided with Billeting, from the Time of his Inlistment until he leaves the Colony, at the Rate of Eight Shillings * * * per Week, and * * * Two Pounds * * * per Month Wages[.]"{EN-2086}

(b) Official correspondence during this period establishes quite clearly that, in order to raise regular troops from the Colonies to serve alongside the British Army in North America, the British had to request assistance from Colonial authorities, rather than simply impress the Colonials into military service directly:

At the end of 1758, British Secretary William Pitt wrote to Governor Stephen Hopkins of Rhode Island that,

> His Majesty having nothing so much at heart as * * * by the most vigorous and extensive efforts, to avert * * * all dangers which may > threaten North America from any future eruptions of the French; and the King not doubting that all his faithful and brave subjects there, will cheerfully co-operate with, and second to the utmost, the large expense and extraordinary succors supplied by this kingdom for their preservation and defence; and His Majesty considering that the several provinces in particular, from proximity and accessibility of situation, more immediately obnoxious to the main eruptions of the enemy from Canada, are, of themselves, well able to furnish at least twenty thousand men, to join a body of the King's forces, for invading Canada * * * —

>
> I am commanded to signify to you the King's pleasure, that you do forthwith use your utmost endeavors and influence with the Council and Assembly of your province, to induce them to raise with all possible despatch, within your government, at least as large a body of men as they did for the last campaign, and even as many more, as the number of its inhabitants may allow; * * * that you do direct them to hold themselves in readiness * * * to march to the rendezvous * * * as His Majesty's commander in chief in America shall appoint * * * .
>
> And the better to facilitate this important service, the King is pleased to leave it to you to issue commissions to such gentlemen of your province, as you shall judge, from their weight and credit with the people, and their zeal for the public service, may be best disposed and able to quicken and effectuate the speedy levying of the greatest number of men * * * .
>
> The King is further pleased to furnish all the men so raised * * * with arms, ammunition and tents, as well as to order provisions to be issued * * * in the same proportion and manner as is done to the rest of the King's forces. A sufficient train of artillery will also be provided at His Majesty's expense * * * .
>
> The whole, therefore, that His Majesty expects and requires from the several provinces, is, the levying, clothing and pay of the men; and on this head, also, that no encouragement may be wanting to this great and salutary attempt, the King * * * permit[s] me to acquaint you, that strong recommendations will be made to Parliament * * * to grant a proper compensation for such expenses * * * , according as the active vigor and strenuous efforts of the respective provinces shall justly appear to merit.
>
> It is His Majesty's pleasure, that you do, with particular diligence, immediately collect, and put into the best condition, all the arms issued last campaign, which can be any ways rendered serviceable, or that can be found within your government, in order that the same may be employed, as far as they will go, in this exigency. * * * [A] reasonable supply of arms will be sent from England, to re-place such as may have been lost, or that become unfit for future service.{EN-2087}

Then, in early 1760, General Jeffrey Amherst, Britain's commander in chief in America, wrote two letters to Governor Hopkins on the same subject:

> [A]lthough [Mr. Secretary Pitt] does not send me His Majesty's commands for the operations of the ensuing campaign, yet he directs me to make all the necessary preparations for pushing on the war with vigor * * * , and thereby complete the great work * * * of rendering His Majesty entire master of Canada.
>
> In order * * * to enable me to fill these instructions, I must renew to you my most earnest solicitations for your moving your Assembly to make immediate provision for the same, or a greater number if possible, of men, than they did for the last campaign; and to have them in such immediate readiness, that * * * I may be certain of the motion and junction of all the forces, at the time and places which I shall hereafter acquaint you with * * * .{EN-2088}
>
> * * * I have only to request that you would exert your utmost endeavors to incite and encourage your Assembly to the full and due execution of the King's commands, in a matter so essential to the future welfare and prosperity of the several provinces, and the success of the ensuing decisive, and (it is greatly hoped,) last campaign in North America * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> I have also * * * to recommend to you the collecting and putting into a proper condition, all the arms which can be in any way rendered serviceable, or that can be found within your government, in order that the same may be employed so far as they will go, in this exigency.
>
> As a further reason for which, I * * * now offer you the * * * encouragement * * * that for every one of such arms, as any of your men shall bring with them, and that may be spoiled or lost in actual service, I will pay at the rate of twenty-five shillings a firelock.
>
> Magazines of provisions shall also be established * * * , to provide for your forces on their march to the rendezvous; officers shall likewise be appointed at those respective places, to pay them the four pences in lieu of provisions, from the days of their several enlistments, to that of receiving the King's provisions; and the same allowance that was made last year, for the transportation of those troops that shall be hereafter directed to come by water, shall also be made this.
>
> From all these several encouragements, and your known fidelity and attachment to His Majesty, I have no doubt of your exerting yourself to the utmost on this great occasion, where the future safety and welfare of America are so nearly concerned.{EN-2089}

The salient characteristic of these letters is their utter lack of a peremptory tone of command—and of the least suggestion that either civilian or military authorities in Britain could unilaterally order Rhode Island to impress men or arms for a military campaign in Canada. Secretary Pitt, for instance, urged Governor Hopkins to "use your utmost endeavors and influence with the Council and Assembly of your province, to induce them to raise * * * at least as large a body of men as they did for the last campaign"—thus recognizing sotto voce that without such efforts the desired "body of men" might not be forthcoming. To this, he added a touch of snobbish bribery, "leav[ing] it to [Hopkins] to issue commissions to * * * gentlemen of your province"—so as to align the personal interests and appetites for honors of a nascent Colonial aristocracy with the imperialistic policies of the Mother Country. For the common Rhode Islanders who were to slog out the campaign in the ranks, he promised "to furnish * * * arms, ammunition, and tents, as well as * * * provisions"—although he must have been aware that all Rhode Islanders capable of serving as Colonial troops were already enrolled in the Militia, with most of them under the personal duty to supply themselves with firearms and ammunition. To the General Assembly, which was initially responsible for "the levying, clothing and pay of the men", he offered the financial assurance that "strong recommendations will be made to Parliament * * * to grant a proper compensation for such expenses * * * , according as the active vigor and strenuous efforts of the * * * province[ ] shall justly appear to merit". Perhaps most revealing, he urged Hopkins, "with particular diligence, immediately [to] collect, and put into the best condition, all the arms * * * that can be found within your government, in order that the same may be employed, as far as they will go, in this exigency", but represented only that "a reasonable supply of arms will be sent from England, to replace such as may have been lost, or that become unfit for future service"—thus intimating that, as far as the Colonial forces were concerned, the success of the campaign could largely depend upon the Local availability of arms.

In a similar vein, in his first letter to Hopkins, General Amherst "renew[ed] * * * [his] most earnest solicitations for * * * moving [the General] Assembly to make immediate provision for the [ensuing campaign]"—illustrating that his continuing problem was to convince and cajole, not simply to command and coerce, Hopkins to act expeditiously. In his second letter, Amherst reiterated his "request that [Hopkins] exert [his] utmost endeavors to incite and encourage [the General] Assembly to the full and due executions of the King's commands"—apparently concerned that, in America, "the King's commands" were neither self-executing nor sure to be executed in full by the Colonial authorities. Then he "recommend[ed] to [Hopkins] the collecting and putting into a proper condition, all the arms which can be in any way rendered serviceable"—only "recommend[ed]", rather than "ordered", even though arms were essential for the success of the entire enterprise, and apparently were in short supply. In addition, he offered the "encouragement * * * that for every one of such arms, as any of [Rhode Island's] men shall bring with them, and that may be spoiled or lost in actual service," he would "pay at the rate of twenty-five shillings a firelock"—hardly an inducement which would have been necessary had the British been able to impress the arms directly, or to impress the men along with their arms; and surely a tacit admission that Britain could not supply enough arms herself in time. All of this importuning and wheedling came forth, too, under circumstances in which, because "the future safety and welfare of America [we]re so nearly concerned", the British imperialists would likely have impressed the Colonies' men and equipment directly if they could have cobbled together any plausible legal theory licensing them to do so.

In short, Britain's political and military leaders did little more than coax, cajole, try to convince, and promise to assist Rhode Island. No one suggested, let alone threatened, that, should the Colony's coöperation be deemed insufficient, the Mother Country would impress either men or matériel.

(c) As the British Colonial period abruptly ended, giving way to independence and then civil war, Rhode Island raised regular troops on her own account:

> • [1775] "[T]he fifteen hundred men ordered to be raised by this colony, [shall] be formed into one brigade * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> " * * * [E]ach able bodied, effective man, who shall enlist into the service, and find himself a small arm, bayonet and other accoutrements, shall be allowed and paid forty shillings, as a bounty; and each able bodied, effective man, not finding himself a small arm, bayonet and other accoutrements, shall receive twenty-four shillings, as a bounty.
>
> "And * * * each officer and soldier shall receive * * * [various amounts of] monthly wages, while in the service * * *
>
> * * * * *
>
> "And * * * each officer and soldier [shall] be paid his wages * * * as soon as may be; and * * * one month's wages [shall] be paid in advance, before the troops march out of the colony."
>
> " * * * [E]ach soldier [shall] be enlisted, by signing the following statement, to wit:
>
> "Form of the Oath of Enlistment.
>
> "'I * * * hereby solemnly engage and enlist myself as a soldier in His Majesty's service, and in the pay of the colony of Rhode Island, for the preservation of the liberties of America, from the day of my enlistment, to the last day of December next, unless the service admit of a discharge sooner, which shall be at the discretion of the General Assembly * * * .'"{EN-2090}
>
> • [1775 and 1776] "[F]ive hundred men * * * [shall] be enlisted, raised and embodied, with all expedition and dispatch, and be formed into one regiment * * * .
>
> * * * * *

" * * * [E]ach able bodied man, who shall enlist into the service, and find himself a small arm, bayonet and other accoutrements, shall be allowed and paid sixteen shillings, therefor.[3913]

" * * * [E]ach officer and soldier shall receive * * * [various amounts of] monthly wages, while in the service, to wit:

* * * * *

"Each private man, forty shillings per month; and that his first month's wages be advanced at the time of his enlistment.[3914]

* * * * *

" * * * [E]ach soldier [shall] be enlisted by signing the following enlistment, to wit:

"Form of Enlistment.

*"I * * * hereby solemnly engage and enlist myself as a soldier, in the pay of the colony of Rhode Island, for the preservation of the liberties of America, and the defence of the United Colonies in general, and of this colony in particular, from the day of my enlistment for one year, unless the service admit of a discharge sooner, which shall be at the discretion of the General Assembly * * * ."*{EN-2091}

•[1776] "Whereas, our enemies have invaded this state, with a powerful armament, and are now in the possession of Rhode Island, whereby we are imminently exposed to still more hostile attacks, which renders it necessary that a considerable addition be made to the forces of this state,—

" * * * [T]hat two regiments of infantry, * * * also a regiment of artillery, * * * be immediately raised, for the defence of the United States, in general; and of this state, in particular.

* * * * *

" * * * [E]ach able bodied, effective man, who shall enlist himself * * * shall be furnished with * * * a gun, bayonet, cartouch-box and * * * be allowed £6 * * * as a bounty.

"And if any man * * * shall furnish himself with a gun, bayonet, cartouch-box * * * he shall be allowed * * *

"Eighteen shillings for a gun, bayonet, and cartouch-box * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [E]very person who shall enlist as a soldier * * * shall be allowed and paid as wages, £3, per month.

" * * * [E]ach able-bodied man, who shall enlist himself * * * shall be allowed twelve shillings per week, after enlistment, and before the[regiments] shall be embodied; and * * * they [shall] be embodied within one week after they shall be enlisted.

---

[3913] The Act of 1776 increased this bounty by providing that such an enlistee "shall receive two months pay advance, at the time of enlisting".

[3914] The Act of 1776 increased a common soldier's monthly wage to £2.

" * * * [T]he officers and soldiers engaged * * * shall receive their pay monthly.

"That each soldier be paid one month's wages in advance, upon enlistment * * * .

" * * * [T]he officers and soldiers, when embodied, * * * shall be under the same rules, orders and regulations as those of the Continental army * * * .

" * * * [E]ach soldier be enlisted by signing the following enlistment, to wit:

"Form of Enlistment for the Soldiers.

"'I * * * hereby solemnly engage and enlist myself as a soldier, in the pay of the state of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, for the preservation of the liberties of America, and the defence of the United States in general, and of this state, in particular, from the day of my enlistment during the term of fifteen months, unless sooner discharged by this General Assembly; and I hereby promise to submit myself to all the orders and regulations of the army * * * .'"{EN-2092}

•[1777] "[T]hat five hundred effective men be raised by the several towns within this state (excepting the towns of Newport, Portsmouth, New Shoreham and Middletown) for filling the Continental battalions raising by this state * * * ; that they be proportioned to the several towns, according to the number of polls * * * in the following manner, that is to say:

"The whole number already enlisted, who are proper inhabitants of, or that belong to, the respective towns to which said men are to be proportioned, be added to the number of five hundred; and the proportion be formed upon that total, giving credit to each town for those already enlisted from such town.

" * * * [T]hat each town be empowered to give such a sum, over and above the bounties already allowed, as they can agree for, with the men enlisting, not exceeding the sum of £22 * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [I]f any town shall advance the said bounties to any person enlisted by them, who shall not pass muster, the loss, thereof, shall be borne by such town.

* * * * *

" * * * [E]ach town * * * which shall be deficient in raising its proportion of men * * * shall pay as a fine to, and for the use of, this state, £10, for every soldier they shall be deficient in[.]"{EN-2093}

• [1777] "Whereas, the calling forth the militia for defence of this state, greatly prevents the carrying on necessary husbandry, and is attended with many other inconveniences,—

"It is voted * * * , for the filling up the brigade ordered to be raised by this state for fifteen months, that a bounty of £6 * * * be * * * paid to each non-commissioned officer and private, who shall enlist into the same within fifteen days after the rising of this Assembly, in addition to the bounty heretofore allowed; after which time, this additional bounty shall cease.

* * * * *

" * * * [A]s soon as any town shall have raised its proportion assigned by this act, or any number of men as part of their quota, not less than five, and the same shall have joined the army, that then so many of the militia, alarm men, and independent companies, of such town upon duty, shall be dismissed by lot, and shall be discharged from doing duty upon the shores, except in case of such an alarm as shall occasion the whole force of the state to be called out[.]"{EN-2094}

• [1777] "Whereas, our enemies have invaded this state with a powerful armament, and are now in possession of the island of Rhode Island, whereby we are imminently exposed to still more hostile attacks,—

" * * * [T]wo battalions, each consisting of six hundred men, * * * also a regiment of artillery, consisting of three hundred men, * * * be immediately raised for the defence of the United States in general, and of this state in particular * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [E]ach able-bodied man, who shall enlist himself * * * shall * * * be furnished with a * * * gun, bayonet, cartouch-box * * * , to be returned or accounted for, at the expiration of his service; and that he be allowed as a bounty, £20 * * * .

* * * * *

"And * * * the officers * * * and the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who shall enlist * * * [shall] be entitled to the same wages and rations as officers and soldiers in the Continental service.

" * * * [E]ach able-bodied man who shall enlist himself * * * [shall] be allowed twenty shillings per week, after enlistment, and before he is embodied * * * .

"And * * * the said officers and soldiers shall receive their pay monthly * * * .

"And * * * the officers and soldiers, when embodied * * * , shall be under the same rules, orders and regulations, as those of the Continental army * * * .

"And * * * each soldier be enlisted by the following enlistment, to wit:

"Form of Enlistment of the Soldiers.

> "'I * * * hereby solemnly engage and enlist myself as a soldier, in the pay of the state of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, for the preservation of the liberties of America, and the defence of the United States in general, and this state in particular, from the day of my enlistment until the 16tth day of March, * * * 1779, unless sooner discharged by this Assembly; and I hereby promise to submit myself to all the orders and regulations of the army * * * .'"{EN-2095}

• [1778] "Resolved, that eight hundred and thirty-nine effective men be raised by the several towns within this state (excepting the towns of Newport, Portsmouth, New Shoreham, Middletown and Jamestown), for filling the battalions and regiment of artillery raising by this state * * * .

"That they be proportioned to the several towns * * * , to wit:

"The proportion of each town according to the last tax assessed upon it by the General Assembly * * * shall be computed, and then the proportion of each town, according to the number of fencible men,[3915] * * * shall be also computed.

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he men who may be raised * * * [shall] be allowed the same bounty and wages as have been allowed to the persons who have heretofore enlisted into said battalions and regiment * * * [.]

* * * * *

" * * * [E]ach town in this state, which shall be deficient in raising its proportion of men, * * * shall pay as a fine, to and for the use of this state, £30 * * * for every soldier they shall be deficient in[.]"{EN-2096}

• [1779] "WHEREAS our Enemies have invaded this State with a powerful Armament, and are now in Possession of the Island of Rhode-Island, whereby we are exposed to still more hostile Attacks:

"BE it therefore Enacted * * * , That Two Battalions of Infantry, each consisting of Five Hundred and Eighty-five Men * * * , and a Regiment of Artillery, consisting of Three Hundred and Thirty Men * * * , be immediately raised for the Defence of the United States in general, and of this State in particular * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * That each able-bodied Man who shall enlist * * * shall be furnished with a Gun, Bayonet, Cartouch-Box * * * the Three former to be returned or accounted for at the Expiration of the Service; and shall [3915] The adjective "fencible" means "[c]apable of defence". S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions. Accord, N. Webster, An American Dictionary, ante note 15, definition 1. As a noun, "fencible" means "[a] soldier capable of bearing arms". Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, ante note 11, at 552. See also Webster's Third New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 837, definition 1a.

---

also receive as a Bounty Forty-five Pounds lawful Money: And that for their better Subsistence the following Sums to be allowed them Monthly, to wit: * * * each Private Six Pounds.

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he Officers * * * and the non-commissioned Officers and Privates inlisting * * * shall, in Addition to the Allowances herein before made, be entitled to the same Wages and Rations as Officers and Soldiers in the Continental Service; and shall receive their Pay and Allowance for Subsistence Monthly: That every able-bodied Man who shall inlist * * * shall be allowed Twenty-four Shillings per Week, for his Billet * * * .

"AND * * * That every Soldier entering into the said Service shall be enlisted by the following Inlistment, to wit.

"I * * * do hereby solemnly inlist myself as a Soldier in the Pay of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, for the Preservation of the Independency and Liberties of America, and the Defence of the United States in general and this State in particular, from the Day of my Inlistment for one Year, unless sooner discharged by the General Assembly of this State. And I hereby promise to submit myself to all the Orders and Regulations of the Army * * * .

"AND * * * the Officers and Soldiers of the said Brigade, when embodied, shall be under the same Rules, Orders and Regulations, as the Continental Army[.]"{EN-2097}

• [1780] "That Two Hundred and Twenty able-bodied effective Men be inlisted to serve in the Battalion of this State, for the Defence of the United States: That each Man * * * receive a Bounty of One Hundred Dollars * * * , and Forty Shillings * * * per Month[.]"{EN-2098}

• [1780] "WHEREAS for the Support and Continuance of the present just and necessary War, on the part of the United States of America, * * * it is indispensably necessary that a regular, efficient and permanent Force be immediately engaged in the public Defence: And whereas the Number of Three Hundred and Eight Men, pursuant to a late Resolve of Congress, has been apportioned to this State, as their Quota of the new Army to be raised * * * :

" * * * Three Hundred and Eight able-bodied effective Men * * * [shall] be forthwith raised within this State, to serve during the War, or Three Years; and that the whole Number be apportioned to the several Towns in this State[.]

* * * * *

"AND * * * each and every Person inlisting into this State's Battalion, serving in the Army of the United States * * * shall receive each and every Year * * * [certain] Articles of Cloathing * * *

" * * * and shall also be allowed the Sum of Forty Shillings * * * Wages per Month, and all such other Refreshments and Emoluments whatsoever, as those already engaged in the Rhode-Island Line of the Continental Army[.]"{EN-2099}

• [1781] "Whereas the Safety and internal Security of this State render it necessary that a military Force should be raised and maintained within this State, for the Defence thereof: And whereas it is found by Experience, that drafting or detaching from the Militia of this State, for that Purpose, is attended with a great Expence, and many Inconveniences:

" * * * That One Hundred able-bodied effective Men * * * be immediately raised for the Defence of this State, to do Duty therein (and not to march out of the same) from the Time of their Inlistment until the First Day of April next, unless sooner discharged by this Assembly * * * .

" * * * That each able-bodied Man who shall inlist * * * shall be furnished with a Gun, Bayonet, Cartouch-Box and Canteen, to be returned at the Expiration of his Service; and that in case any of the said Men shall furnish themselves with a Gun, Bayonet and Cartouch-Box, they shall be allowed a further Sum of Twelve Shillings Silver Money each.

" * * * That the Privates be allowed each Forty-eight Shillings Silver Money per Month * * * .

" * * * [A]nd that each Soldier sign the following Inlistment, to wit:

"'I * * * do solemnly engage and inlist myself as a Soldier in the Pay and Service of the State of Rhode-Island, &c. from the Day of my Inlistment until the First Day of April, A.D. 1782, unless sooner discharged by the General Assembly: And I hereby promise to submit myself to all the Orders and Regulations of the Army * * * .'"{EN-2100}

• [1782] "[T]hat two hundred effective men be recruited into the service of the United States, by voluntary enlistment, to serve for the term of three years, or during the war; that each effective man so enlisted, mustered and received * * * shall be entitled to a bounty of one hundred dollars in specie[.]"{EN-2101}

• [1782] "[T]hat two hundred able-bodied, effective men be raised and enlisted within this state, as recruits for this state's Continental battalion, * * * to serve in the army of the United States for the term of three years, or during the war, unless sooner discharged; that each able-bodied man who shall be * * * pass muster, shall be entitled to receive a bounty of one hundred Spanish milled dollars, from this state, over and above the rations, wages, clothing, and other allowances which are made by Congress to the Continental soldiers now in the field[.]"{EN-2102}

• [1782] "[T]hat forty able-bodied, effective men * * * be raised, to do duty in the town of Newport, for the space of four months from the time of their enlistment, unless sooner discharged by this Assembly * * * .

" * * * [T]hat the said men * * * receive the same pay and rations as are allowed the officers and soldiers in the Continental service.

* * * * *

" * * * [T]hat the wages of the * * * men be paid out of the next state tax[.]"{EN-2103}

•[1786] "[T]hat one hundred and twenty men * * * be immediately raised in this state for the service [of the United States]; * * * that they receive the pay, clothing, subsistence, forage, and other allowances provided by Congress; that they be rendezvoused at such place or places, and marched to such place or places within the United States, as the United States, in Congress assembled, or their secretary of war shall direct, or such officer as shall be commander-in-chief of the troops; that the following be the form of enlistment:

"I * * * do voluntarily enlist myself in the service of the United States, as a soldier, for the space of three years * * * , unless sooner discharged, and do engage to submit myself to the rules and regulations of the army already established, or that may be established by Congress * * * ."{EN-2104}

In light of the language the Constitution later used to define the relevant power of Congress—namely, "[t]o raise and support Armies"[3916]—it is revealing that: (i) Almost all of these statutes employed the verb "raise" to describe the process they mandated—such as, "be raised" (1775, 1777, 1778, and 1782), "be immediately raised" (1776, 1777, 1779, 1781, and 1786), "be forthwith raised" (1780), "be raised and enlisted" (1782), "be enlisted, raised and embodied" (1775 and 1776), "shall have raised" (1777), and "raising by this state" (1778). And (ii) all of these statutes provided for voluntary enlistments, never impressments, as plainly appeared from the oaths of enlistment some of the statutes incorporated (1775, 1776, 1777, 1779, 1781, and 1786) and the specific statutory statement that the men were to "be recruited by voluntary enlistment" (1782), as well as from the inducements of pay, bounties, and other allowances the statutes offered to recruits (1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, and 1786).

The statutes provided for voluntary enlistments even though the reasons adduced for raising troops were certainly serious—such as the British invasion and occupation Rhode Island (1776, 1777, and 1779); "the Safety and internal Security of this State" (1781); and "the Support and Continuance of the present just and necessary War, on the part of the United States of America" (1780).

Most importantly, the General Assembly retained control over every aspect of Rhode Islanders' service, including: the number of men to be raised (1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, and 1786); the men's periods of enlistment

---

[3916] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12 (emphasis supplied).

(1775, 1776, 1777, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, and 1786), even when they were being raised specifically to serve with the Continental Army (1777, 1780, 1782, and 1786); when the men might be discharged before their statutory terms of service expired (1775, 1776, 1777, 1779, and 1781); and where the men would serve, whether "out of the colony" (1775), within Rhode Island "and not to march out of the same" (1781), "in the town of Newport" (1782), or only in "places within the United States" (1786). Indeed, in 1776 the General Assembly went so far as to mandate adoption by Rhode Island's troops of the rules and regulations of the Continental Army:

> [W]hereas, this Assembly * * * passed an act, establishing rules and regulations for the forces raised by this colony.
>
> And whereas, the Continental Congress soon after established rules and articles of war, for the Continental army, and have lately made divers additions and alterations thereto, necessary for the well governing of an army, which are better calculated for that purpose than those made by this colony, * * *
>
> * * * all the troops that shall be raised in the colony, shall be governed by the rules, regulations and orders established by the Continental Congress, for the governing of the Continental army[.]{EN-2105}

Which requirement the General Assembly regularly reasserted thereafter: namely, "under the same rules, orders and regulations as those of the Continental army" (1776 and 1777); "to submit * * * to all the orders and regulations of the [Continental] army" (1776, 1777, 1779, and 1781); and "to submit * * * to the rules and regulations of the army * * * established by Congress" (1786). And most indicative that the General Assembly considered itself the supreme authority in the premises was its assertion of a right to prevent Rhode Islanders from joining the Continental Army at all:

> [1777] "Voted and Resolved, That the non-commissioned Officers and Privates in the Train of Artillery, be not permitted in future to inlist into the Continental Battalions[.]"{EN-2106}

Interestingly enough, in one instance Rhode Islanders who volunteered for the State's regular troops were detailed to replace Militiamen who, in contrast, were all impressed into service: "[A]s soon as any town shall have raised its proportion * * * , or any number of men as part of their quota, not less than five, and the same shall have joined the army, * * * then so many of the militia, alarm men, and independent companies, of such town upon duty, shall be dismissed by lot, and shall be discharged from doing duty * * * except in case of such an alarm as shall occasion the whole force of the state to be called out" (1777). This exemplifies the weakness in the common contention that a draft is always necessary because voluntary enlistments are usually insufficient. To be sure, a draft makes voluntary enlistments unnecessary; but, in some circumstances, voluntary enlistments can make a draft unnecessary.

(d) During the pre-constitutional period, Virginia, too, recruited volunteers for her regular Armed Forces:

> • [1746] "WHEREAS his * * * majesty * * * is engaged in a just, and necessary war against the French king; * * * and hath instructed his Lieutenant-governor of this colony, to inlist men with all possible speed * * * : And his majesty hath been pleased to declare, that both officers and men are to enter into his pay, * * * and moreover, that an allowance shall be made for arms and cloaths; this present General Assembly * * * have resolved to give such a sum of money as the circumstances of this colony will allow * * * :
>
> " * * * [T]he treasurer of this colony shall * * * borrow a sum of money * * * and * * * pay the same * * * to [certain named individuals] to be * * * applied towards defraying the expence and charge of inlisting, arming, cloathing, victualling, and transporting the soldiers * * * to be raised in this colony, for his majesty's service * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> " * * * [N]o master of a ship * * * shall incur any penalty or forfeiture, for carrying or transporting any of the persons so inlisted * * * to any place his majesty shall think fit to order, direct and appoint[.]"{EN-2107}
>
> • [1755] The "treasurer shall out of the money raised * * * for the protection of his majesty's subjects, against the insults and encroachments of the French, pay to the * * * lieutenant governor, and commander in chief of this dominion, a sum of money * * * to be laid out for and in the raising and maintaining three companies of men, consisting of fifty men each, with their officers, to be employed as rangers, for the protection of the subjects in the frontiers of this colony, as the governor shall direct from time to time, and shall not be sent out of this colony, nor incorporated with the soldiers now in his majesty's service, or made subject to martial law."{EN-2108}
>
> • [1755] Certain named individuals "shall from time to time with the consent and approbation of the governor, or commander in chief for the time being, direct and appoint how * * * [certain] money shall be applied towards the raising, maintaining, arming and providing for so many men, to be employed for the protection of his majesty's subjects, in the frontiers of this colony, as they shall think necessary, so as that the whole number, so to be raised and employed * * * do not exceed twelve hundred men[.]"{EN-2109}
>
> • [1756] "[W]ithin twenty days after the passing of this act, the county lieutenant, or chief commanding officer of the militia in every county, and of the city of Williamsburg, and borough of Norfolk, except of the county of Hampshire, is * * * required, to summon and hold a council of war * * * at which * * * the several captains of the militia * * * shall deliver in lists * * * of all the single men in their respective muster-rolls * * * ; which council of war shall enter the names of all the able-bodied single men upon a list, and shall * * * appoint a certain day * * * for the said able-bodied single men * * * to meet at the court-house of such county, city, or borough * * * : And the said county-lieutenant, and the field officers and captains of the militia * * * being there met, * * * shall then inlist all such able bodied men as will voluntarily enter into his majesty's service[.]

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he soldiers so * * * inlisted * * * shall be incorporated with, and become soldiers of the Virginia regiment, and shall receive the same pay and rewards, and be entitled to the same immunities and privileges, and be subject to the same government and discipline, as the soldiers of the said regiment, now in the pay of this colony, do receive, and are entitled, and subject to.

" * * * [I]f any such able-bodied single man shall fail to appear at the council of war * * * , without sending sufficient reasons * * * for his non-attendance, * * * such person, and persons, shall thereupon be deemed soldiers duly inlisted in his majesty's service[.]

* * * * *

" * * * [N]othing herein contained, shall extend or be construed to extend to impower the governor or commander in chief, or any other officer, to lead or march the soldiers hereby raised, or cause them to be led or marched out of this colony."{EN-2110}

•[1758] "[T]he forces now in the pay of this colony shall be augmented to two thousand men, exclusive of the rangers formerly directed to be raised. And for the more speedy raising the men * * * , it shall and may be lawful, to and for the officers appointed for that purpose, * * * to inlist so many men as shall be willing to enter into the said service; and every person so inlisting shall receive * * * the sum of ten pounds * * * .

" * * * [T]he men to be raised * * * as well as the soldiers formerly directed to be raised, and now in the pay of this colony, except the rangers, shall and may, by direction of the * * * commander in chief, be united to the forces that shall be sent to our assistance by his majesty or any of the neighbouring colonies, and may be marched to annoy or attack the enemy in such manner as may be thought proper by the commanding officer of his majesty's forces in North-America."{EN-2111}

As in *pre-*constitutional Rhode Island, these Virginia statutes almost always employed the verb "raise" to denote voluntary enlistments: "to be raised" (1746, 1755, and 1758), "raising" (1758), "the raising" (1755), "in the raising and maintaining" (1755), and "towards the raising, maintaining" (1755).[3917]

Also, as in Rhode Island, Virginia's General Assembly asserted a plenary discretion to determine where the troops the Colony raised would be deployed. They might be sent "to any place his majesty shall think fit to order, direct and appoint" (1746), or might "be marched to annoy or attack the enemy in such manner as may be thought proper by the commanding officer of his majesty's forces in North-America" (1758). But not because the General Assembly considered itself bound to acquiesce in the dictates of some ostensibly higher military authority. For sometimes it ordered quite the opposite: that Virginia's troops "shall not be sent out of this colony, nor incorporated with the soldiers now in his majesty's service, or made subject to martial law" (1755); and that no one should "lead or march the soldiers hereby raised, or cause them to be led or marched out of this colony" (1756).

(e) After the break with Britain, Virginia found herself under greater pressure than ever before to raise regular troops.

In 1775, Virginia's newly formed Convention (which had temporarily assumed the authority of the General Assembly under the unsettled political conditions of that time) provided

> [t]hat there shall be forthwith raised, and taken into the pay of this colony, from the time of their enlistment, two regiments complete, to consist of one thousand and twenty privates, rank and file [along with various officers and non-commissioned officers] * * * ; [and] to each of which regiments there shall be allowed a chaplain, a paymaster (who is also to act as muster-master) [,] an adjutant, quarter-master, one surgeon, two surgeons mates, and a serjeant-major.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [T]he soldiers to be raised shall be enlisted on the terms following, to wit: That they shall continue in the service of the publick so long as may be judged necessary by the general convention, but not be compelled to continue more than one year, provided any soldier, or soldiers, do give the commanding-officer three months previous notice, in writing, of his or their desire to be discharged at the end of such period[.]
>
> * * * * *
>
> And whereas it may be necessary, for the public security, that the forces to be raised by virtue of this ordinance should, as occasion may

---

[3917] In one of the statutes, "the soldiers hereby raised" included both those voluntarily enlisted and those drafted (1756). As the passage in which the verb "raised" appeared did not differentiate between the two classes of "soldiers", it is likely that "raised" alone was employed merely for brevity. And the phrases "in the raising and maintaining" (1755) and "towards the raising, maintaining" (1755) are evidently close in meaning to the constitutional language, "[t]o raise and support".

> require, be marched to different parts of the colony, and that the officers should be subject to a proper controul, * * * the officers and soldiers under such command, shall in all things, not otherwise provided by this ordinance, and the articles established for their regulation, be under the controul, and subject to the order, of the general committee of safety.{EN-2112}

And

> * * * That the two regiments formerly raised be augmented; by the addition of three hundred and eighty two men * * * .
>
> * * * That there be likewise immediately raised, and taken into pay from the time of their endorsement, six other regiments complete, to be composed of ten companies of sixty eight men each rank and file
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [I]f any * * * officers * * * shall not recruit the whole number of men for a company * * * , the committee of the county or district * * * may either appoint others * * * or may continue the former officers, if * * * the company may be sooner completed by them than raised by appointing new officers[.]
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [T]he soldiers to be raised shall be enlisted on the terms following, to wit: That they shall continue in the service so long as may be judged necessary by the general congress, or by the general convention or general assembly of this colony, but not be compelled to continue more than two years * * * ;
>
> Provided, Any soldier or soldiers do give the commanding-officer three months previous notice, in writing, of his or their desire to be discharged at the end of such period[.]
>
> * * * * *
>
> And whereas it may be necessary, for the publick security, that the forces to be raised by virtue of this ordinance should, as occasion may require, be marched to different parts of the united colonies, and that the officers should be subject to a proper controul * * * , the officers and soldiers under their command shall, in all things, not otherwise particularly provided for by this ordinance, and the articles established for their regulation, be under the controul, and subject to the order, of the committee of safety.{EN-2113}

As did similar statutes in Rhode Island, these Virginia ordinances employed the verb "raised" with respect to soldiers to be recruited voluntarily, not impressed. And they distinguished among regular soldiers (who were all volunteers), Minutemen (who were all volunteers, too, although otherwise subject to draft as ordinary Militiamen), and ordinary Militiamen (who were all draftees).{EN-2114}

Also noteworthy is that in July of 1775, when fighting in the War of Independence was still localized, the first ordinance asserted Virginia's authority to control her forces that might be "marched to different parts of the colony"; whereas, in December of that year, when fighting was to be anticipated throughout America, the second ordinance asserted Virginia's authority to control her forces even if they might be "marched to different parts of the united colonies".

Thereafter, Virginia enacted further statutes to enlist volunteers into her regular Armed Forces:

> • [1776] "[F]or garrisoning the * * * fortifications, and for the further defence of this country, * * * three battalions of infantry be forthwith raised, to consist of ten companies each of sixty-eight able-bodied men rank and file[.]"{EN-2115}
>
> • [1777] "[A]s our numbers in continental service * * * may for some time be deficient: Be it * * * enacted, That the troops raised for the service of this commonwealth, by an act of assembly passed in [1776] * * * shall be forthwith regimented by the governor and council * * * ; and that a battalion of such troops * * * be marched to join the grand army, there to continue till a sufficient number of recruits may be raised to make good our just proportion, or until the terms of their enlistments shall expire.
>
> * * * * *
>
> "But as an encouragement to persons to enter voluntarily into the said service, and thereby avoid the necessity of making * * * draughts, * * * any justice of peace or magistrate, or a commissioned officer of the militia * * * , as well as such recruiting officers as may be appointed by the governour or the continental commanding officer in this commonwealth, shall have power to enlist any able-bodied men willing to enter into the service, except apprentices and hired servants under written contracts at any iron works, or persons solely employed in the manufacture of fire arms, not having leave in writing from the owner or manager of such works, except also imported servants, and those who are by law obliged to serve to thirty one years of age, and to offer a bounty of ten dollars each from this commonwealth, over and above the continental bounty; to all such as will engage and serve * * * for three years, or during the present war, and to offer a bounty of twenty dollars * * * to such as will engage to serve therein for one year only * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> "And whereas it is of the greatest importance to the American cause to open the ensuing campaign as early as possible, and to render its operations more decisive and effectual, that the army under the command of his excellency general Washington should be reinforced by an additional number of troops to be raised for that purpose in this commonwealth: Be it farther enacted, That every man who shall voluntarily engage to enter into such service, to continue therein for the space of six months * * * , unless sooner discharged, shall receive a bounty of ten dollars * * * . And that each volunteer so serving shall be exempted from any future draughts for the regular service for the space of six months after his discharge * * * .

"And for the greater expedition in raising and collecting the said volunteers, It is farther enacted, That the * * * commanding officer of the militia in each county or corporation shall immediately appoint a general muster * * * , and in the warmest terms represent to them the utility and necessity of strongly reinforcing the continental army, and receive the subscriptions of such as shall be willing to engage in this service[.]"{EN-2116}

•[1778] "That two thousand volunteers rank and file be raised, who are to join the commander in chief of the American army when ordered by * * * the governour * * * of this commonwealth.

" * * * That as an inducement to engage volunteers * * * , a bounty of thirty dollars, and a complete suit of regimentals * * * shall be given to every soldier who obliges himself to serve till of 1st day of January, [1779] * * * , unless sooner discharged by the commander in chief * * * . And that for the farther encouragement of such volunteers, they shall be exempt from all draughts and military duty, except in case of actual invasion of this commonwealth, or insurrection therein, and from payment of any tax on their persons for the space of twelve months, to commence from the day of their obtaining their discharge from the commanding officer * * * of the American army * * * .

"And for the more speedy carrying this act into execution, * * * the commanding officer in [certain named] counties * * * shall call together the militia of his * * * county, * * * and shall then * * * appoint the most proper man or men in the county as officer or officers for the volunteer service. * * *

"The officers being so appointed, shall immediately proceed to enlist volunteers to make up their respective quotas * * * ; and all volunteer officers * * * shall have full liberty to recruit any where within this commonwealth.

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he said volunteers shall be formed into four distinct battalions, * * * and the whole shall be under the command of a brigadier general, who shall be * * * commissioned by the governour. The governour and council shall appoint the field officers, who, with the captains and subalterns, shall be commissioned by the governour.

" * * * [E]very officer * * * shall, on the enlistments of the volunteers under him, obtain their subscription to the following terms, to wit: We do severally enlist to serve in the corps of volunteers now raising to reinforce the continental army, for the time and under the terms directed by [this] act * * * [;] and that the volunteers so raised, when they join the grand army, are to be governed by the like rules, regulations, and articles of war, as govern continental officers and soldiers. The said volunteers when raised, shall, during the time they remain in the commonwealth, be subject to the orders of the governour and council[.]"{EN-2117}

• [1778] "FOR garrisoning the fortifications and batteries erected for the defence of the several ports and harbours within this commonwealth, * * * a battalion of infantry, to consist of eight companies, and each company of sixty eight rank and file, shall be raised within this commonwealth * * * . That the said battalion shall have the same bounty, pay, and rations, as are allowed in the continental service, * * * shall continue in service three years * * * , unless sooner discharged, and shall be subject to the continental rules and articles of discipline and government, save only, that the powers of confirming the sentences of courts martial in capital cases, or of pardon in the same cases, shall be in the governour and council.

* * * * *

"If any person enlisted for the said battalion shall be at any time ordered to march out of the commonwealth, such order shall amount to a discharge. * * *

"And for farther encouragement to those who shall enlist * * * , they shall be free from all draughts, except in case of an invasion of this commonwealth, or insurrection therein, from the time of their discharge, for so long a time as they shall have actually been in the said service."{EN-2118}

• [1778] "FOR preventing the inconveniency of draughting men to make up the deficiencies in the quota of continental troops to be furnished by this state, for giving encouragement to soldiers, and putting our army on a more permanent foundation, * * * the men * * * to be raised in this state for the continental army shall be engaged by voluntary enlistments to serve for three years, or during the war.

* * * * *

" * * * [A] bounty of one hundred and fifty dollars be given to each soldier * * * who shall enlist to serve during the war, and of one hundred dollars to each soldier * * * who shall enlist to serve for three years * * * . Every soldier enlisted shall be furnished, at the publick expense, with [certain articles of clothing] * * * . Provided, that the suit of clothes to be given annually to soldiers by this act shall not be additional to that annual suit which hath been allowed by congress. And if any soldier * * * shall be ordered to march out of this state, without having first received such clothes, such order shall amount to a discharge.

" * * * [A]s a farther encouragement, all soldiers who have enlisted * * * to serve in the army during the war, and shall actually serve that time, shall be exempted from the payment of all levies and taxes, for their own persons, during life * * * ."{EN-2119}

> • [1779] "WHEREAS it is necessary that the state be at all times provided with a force sufficient to repel any hostile invasion, and it being found that the militia, as it is presently constituted, is not sufficient for that purpose, * * * there be immediately raised for the publick service, four thousand five hundred and sixty volunteers, * * * to serve within this commonwealth for the defence thereof during the present invasion * * * ; that the pay, rations, and forage of the officers and soldiers be the same as in the continental army[.]
>
> * * * * *
>
> "And for the defence and protection of the western frontiers * * * , [t]hat two battalions of the said volunteers be raised in the counties lying on that side of the state * * * . The said battalions * * * shall not be compelled to march out of the commonwealth, unless in case of an expedition against the enemy Indians, or in pursuit of an enemy who shall have invaded the frontier."{EN-2120}
>
> • [1781] "[T]he governor, with the advice of council, shall appoint some discreet officer or officers in the respective counties within this state, to recruit, by voluntary enlistments, any number of soldiers, not exceeding three thousand, for the term of two years, or during the war * * * .
>
> " * * * [E]very soldier who shall enlist to serve in the continental army for the term of two years or during the war, shall be allowed the sum of twenty dollars * * * .
>
> " * * * [W]here any person shall furnish one able-bodied man to serve in the continental army for two years or during the war, * * * such person * * * shall be exempted from militia and military duties for and during the term of service of such substitute."{EN-2121}

Once again, these statutes employed the verb "raise" to signify the voluntary recruitment of soldiers, both explicitly in those very terms—"raising * * * volunteers" (1777), "volunteers * * * be raised" (1778 and 1779), "volunteers so raised" (1778), "volunteers now raising" (1778), "volunteers when raised" (1778), and "raised for the publick service * * * volunteers" (1779); and implicitly in context—"be forthwith raised" (1776), "troops raised" (1777), and "troops to be raised" (1777). This, in contradistinction to drafts—"to enter voluntarily into the said service, and thereby avoid the necessity of making * * * draughts" (1777), "raised * * * by voluntary enlistments" in order to "prevent[ ] the inconveniency of draughting men" (1778). Not surprisingly, then, because of the statutes' reliance on volunteers, inducements to enlist for hazardous duty needed to be quite extensive,{EN-2122} even including "exempt[ion] from the payment of all levies and taxes, for the[recruits'] own persons, during life" (1778).

Volunteers raised in Virginia were Virginia's troops which, whenever they were enlisted, Virginia might detach for service strictly within her own borders (1775, 1776, 1778, and 1779), or for service with the Continental Army wherever it might be deployed (1777, 1778, and 1781). Being Virginia's own troops, Virginia decided what rules and regulations were to govern their conduct. Thus, troops assigned to serve solely within Virginia were sometimes put under "the continental rules and articles of discipline and government" (doubtlessly so that they would be prepared for detachment to the Continental Army if necessary)—yet in the most important cases remained ultimately under Virginia's own "governour and council" (1778); whereas "volunteers * * * raised * * * [to] join the grand army, [we]re to be governed by the like rules, regulations, and articles of war, as govern continental officers and soldiers" (1778). Self-evidently, though, in the latter case Virginia could have mandated different "rules, regulations, and articles of war". For if troops despatched from Virginia to "join the grand army" would automatically have come under the "rules, regulations, and articles of war, as govern continental officers and soldiers", Virginia would not have needed to specify as much herself. Even more striking was the provision of one statute that "[e]very soldier enlisted shall be furnished, at the publick expense, with [certain articles of clothing] * * * . Provided, that the suit of clothes to be given annually to soldiers by this act shall not be additional to that annual suit which hath been allowed by congress. And if any soldier * * * shall be ordered to march out of this state, without having first received such clothes, such order shall amount to a discharge" (1778). Apparently, had Congress failed to provide the requisite clothing to Virginia's soldiers, and had Virginia herself been unable to do so, then her soldiers would have been entitled to a full release from service. Thus, Virginia made the continuance of her troops in the Continental service conditional on Congress's compliance with its promise to clothe them. That is, Virginia asserted the authority to withhold her troops in the absence of satisfactory behavior by Congress.

In these statutes, the relationship between Virginia's standing Militia and the volunteers specially "raised" for her regular troops was a subtle one. On the one hand, as a practical matter the volunteers had to come from among men eligible for the Militia—otherwise they would have been rejected as recruits. Several of the statutes made explicit what must have always been understood, that it was necessary "to prevent the enlistment of such men as are unfit for service",{EN-2123} and that "some proper person [should be appointed] to review and pass all soldiers enlisted in this state fit for service"{EN-2124}—and therefore stipulated that "no recruiting officer shall be allowed to enlist * * * any man unless he be five feet four inches high, healthy, strong made, and well limbed, not deaf, or subject to fits";{EN-2125} or that "each soldier [is] to be not less than five feet four inches high, not being a deserter nor subject to fits, of able-body and sound mind, fit for immediate service".{EN-2126} So, not surprisingly, because such men were to be found in the Militia, enlistments were sometimes explicitly sought from the Militia (1777); and the Militia was sometimes explicitly made the focal point for recruitment (1778). On the other hand, even though the reason given in one instance for raising regular troops was that "it is necessary that the state be at all times provided with a force sufficient to repel any hostile invasion, and * * * the militia, as it is at present constituted, is not sufficient for that purpose",{EN-2127} Virginia never treated her Militia as mere pools of men from which volunteers for her regular troops could be drawn, but instead always recognized her Militia and regular troops as separate establishments.{EN-2128}

Virginia's regular Armed Forces were not limited to what the Constitution later called "Troops" (that is, infantry, cavalry, and artillery), but also included "Ships of War" (with sailors and marines).[3918] For example, in 1775 the Convention mandated that, > for the greater security of the inhabitants of this colony from depredations of the enemy by water, * * * the committee of safety shall * * * provide from time to time such and so many armed vessels as they may judge necessary for the protection of the several rivers in this colony, in the best manner the circumstances of the country will admit; and, to that end, to raise and take into pay a sufficient number of * * * sailors and marines, whose pay shall be settled by the committee of safety[.]{EN-2129}

In 1776, another statute provided

> [t]hat the commissioners of the navy * * * provide necessary plank and timber for the building of two frigates, to carry thirty two guns each, and * * * the building of four large gallies, fit for river or sea service, to be mounted with proper cannon.
>
> And for manning the said gallies, as well as the others which are now building, * * * the commissioners * * * may * * * raise any number of men they shall think necessary for the same, not exceeding in the whole one thousand three hundred exclusive of officers, to serve on board the Virginia fleet, for the term of three years * * * . And if any * * * officer shall fail to enlist his quota of men, the governour, by and with the advice of the privy council, shall have power either to continue such officer or appoint another in his stead, as they shall judge best for the publick service.
>
> * * * And for the more speedy manning the said gallies, as well as completing the crews of the other vessels of war in the service of the commonwealth, every seaman and landsman enlisting * * * shall receive a bounty of twenty dollars[.]{EN-2130}

And in 1780, the General Assembly directed

[3918] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

> that the governour, with the advice of council, * * * order the ships Thetis, Tempest, Dragon, together with the brig Jefferson, to be immediately repaired, manned, and made ready * * * ; and that the Henry galley be in like manner immediately repaired, manned, and made ready * * * . And as an encouragement for sailors to enter into the marine service, * * * there shall be paid to every person who shall enlist * * * for the term of three years or during the war, a bounty of one thousand dollars, and two dollars per day * * * . And whereas experience has evinced the great utility of marines, * * * a body of three hundred men be recruited for that purpose * * * . And to the end that recruits raised by virtue of this act may be conveniently received and passed, * * * the commanding officer or county lieutenant of the county * * * shall examine such recruit, and pass a certificate for such and so many as they may judge to be able bodied and sufficient for the purpose. And as an encouragement for marines to enter into said service, * * * there shall be paid to each marine so enlisting for the term of three years or during the war, a bounty of one thousand dollars, and one dollar per day[.]{EN-2131}

These statutes once again exemplify the use of the verb "raise" to indicate voluntarily recruitment, as in "raise any number of men" (1776) and "recruits raised" (1780). In addition, the idiomatic phraseology "provide * * * armed vessels" (1775) and "provide * * * for the building of two frigates" (1776) anticipated the later constitutional language in the power of Congress "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy".[3919]

(3) The Colonies and later the independent States also augmented their regular Armed Forces by means of drafts or impressments by, through, and from their Militia. This, of course, essentially amounted to drafting men from the general population, because all able-bodied adult free males were supposed to be enrolled in the Militia. Yet, no doubt in deference to the Militia, the statutes treated it as a different situation entirely.

(a) In Rhode Island, drafts from her Militia into her regular Armed Forces occurred only in time of war, or to enforce discipline.

During the Colonial period, for example—

> • [1744 and 1766] "[A]fter an Alarm is beaten in any Town in this Colony, no Man whatsoever shall leave or go out of said Town so alarmed, but by Leave or Order from the Commanding Officer there, upon the Penalty of paying to and for the Use of the Colony, the Sum of One Hundred Pounds * * * ;[3920] and in case any Person shall not have sufficient Estate to pay the same, then such Person shall be committed to

---

[3919] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 13.

[3920] The Act of 1766 reduced the fine to "Twelve Pounds".

Goal * * * for the Space of Six Month, or else shall be sent to the Fort, there to serve the Colony as a Soldier for * * * Six Months[.]"{EN-2132}

• [1757] In order to ensure that four hundred and fifty men ordered to be enlisted "for the ensuing campaign against His Majesty's enemies in North America" would be raised, the General Assembly provided that "each respective colonel * * * shall immediately grant forth his warrant to the captain * * * of each of the troops of horse, and of the foot company or companies, in every town that shall be found deficient in enlisting its proper quota, immediately to impress and bring to him so many able bodied men, fit for soldiers, as shall make up each town's proportion * * * .

"And every man so impressed, shall be obliged to serve as a soldier, or find a good, able bodied, effective man to serve in his stead; unless he hath some reasonable or lawful excuse * * * .

"And when any man that hath been impressed, is excused or doth not pass muster, the captain * * * shall * * * impress another, forthwith, in his stead.

"And any man so impressed, upon his paying a fine of £100 * * * to one of the field officers * * * shall be excused; and such field officer shall order another to be impressed in his stead * * * ; and so on, from time to time, as often as any shall be excused, or pay a fine, until the required number of soldiers shall be completed and made up."{EN-2133}

• [1757] "Whereas, a number of men is demanded of this colony, by the commanders of His Majesty's forces, * * * for the relief of Fort William Henry, which is invested by a large body of French and Indians; in compliance with the said demands, and to the end that every thing in the power of this colony may be done for the preservation of the country,—

" * * * one sixth part of the whole militia of this colony, be forthwith raised and sent to Albany, with all possible despatch, to be under the command of the commander in chief of His Majesty's forces, * * * and to continue in the service as long as the immediate preservation of the country requires their stay there, and no longer * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [T]hat His Honor the Governor, forthwith issue his warrants to the proper officers, to call together all the companies * * * in this colony * * * in each respective town * * * .

" * * * [T]hat the names of all persons in the list of each company, shall be written on a scroll of paper * * * then put into a hat or box; and one sixth part thereof, shall be drawn, (unless the company agree that the commissioned officers shall press said sixth part,) and the persons whose names shall be so drawn or pressed, shall go on this service.

"Provided, nevertheless, that any person drawn, who declines going, and shall immediately procure an able bodied, effective man to go in his room, shall be excused; but no person shall be excused without.

> "Provided * * * that no person's name be put into the hat or box, who, through sickness or lameness, cannot go, or who was out of the government before the meeting of this Assembly."{EN-2134}

The language employed in the latter two statutes emphasized the compulsory nature of the process: "to impress * * * so many able bodied men", "every man so impressed", and "the persons whose names shall be so drawn or pressed". Even the second statute, which loosely referred to "one sixth part of the whole militia" to "be forthwith raised", made clear that this would be accomplished by coercion. Of course, one of these statutes allowed for the payment of a fine as the price of an exemption; and both allowed men who were drafted to provide substitutes—so the draft was actually voluntary for anyone who could have paid the fine or found "an able bodied, effective man to go in his room".[3921]

Significantly, in neither of these instances were the men impressed directly by the British Army, or under color of some Act of Parliament. Rather, Rhode Island's General Assembly authorized the process, and directed that it be performed at the Local level, in each Town, by the Militia Companies themselves—in one case, to draft men only if a Town did not meet its quota of recruits through voluntary enlistments; in the other case, to draft only "one sixth part" of the Militia. Moreover, the men were not to be impressed into the British Army or Rhode Island's regular troops generally, but instead were drafted for very specific purposes only: "for the ensuing campaign against His Majesty's enemies in North America", or "for the relief of Fort William Henry" and "to continue in the service as long as the immediate preservation of the country requires their stay there, and no longer".

After the break with Britain, drafts from the Militia were more frequent, because driven by a more desperate situation—

> • [1778] "This Assembly, * * * having ordered Eight Hundred and Thirty-nine Men to be raised * * * for filling up the State's Brigade, * * * and apportioned the same to the several Towns, some of which have not raised the Quota assigned them, * * * Resolved, [t]hat such delinquent Towns shall keep up in the Field so many Men from the Militia, Alarm and Independent Companies, in such Town, as they are deficient in their Quota * * * , until the same shall be compleated: That the Militia so doing Duty shall be entitled to the Continental Wages and Rations only * * * : That the * * * Commanding Officer of the respective Regiments of Militia in this State * * * make Enquiry from Time to Time of the Numbers of Men raised by the several Towns in their respective Districts, * * * and * * * draught a sufficient Number out of the Militia, Alarm and Independent Companies, to make good such Deficiency, who shall do

---

[3921] "[S]ome reasonable or lawful excuse", such as "sickness or lameness", was also accepted as a basis for a man's avoidance of impressment. But there was hardly anything extraordinary about this. See ante, at 249-252.

Duty for Fifteen Days each: That the Men which shall be so draughted do Duty * * * in the Twelve Months Brigade[.]"{EN-2135}

Interestingly, here, because the "delinquent Towns [were to] keep up in the Field so many Men from the Militia, Alarm and Independent Companies * * * as they [we]re deficient in their Quota[s] * * * until the same [were] compleated", Militiamen from those Towns who refused to volunteer for "the State's Brigade", and were not "draught[ed]* * * [to] do Duty for Fifteen Days each * * * in the Twelve Months Brigade", nonetheless might have served for some time in the field.

• [1778 and 1779] "Whereas, sundry persons in the several towns of this state, who were drafted, and required * * * to perform military duty in the late expedition against the enemy upon Rhode Island, were so destitute of public spirit, and regardless of the laws, honor and welfare of their country, as to neglect or refuse to serve in said expedition, in their own proper persons or by hiring others in their places * * * ; and whereas, for supporting just and equal government, it is necessary that every individual, liable to perform military duty, when required thereto, should be impartially obliged to perform his equal proportion thereof,—

" * * * [T]he * * * commanding officers of the several regiments of militia, alarm and independent companies in this state, who were required to serve in said expedition * * * make a true and exact list * * * of the names and places of abode of all persons in their respective regiments, who were delinquent in performing military duty in said expedition, and were not legally excused, or discharged therefrom; and also of all such as left the service without a proper discharge * * * .

" * * * [T]hereupon, all such delinquent persons * * * shall be liable to serve a tour of military duty, without any allowance of bounty or wages from this state, for two months, in one of the state's battalions, in lieu of the time they ought to have served in said expedition, unless such delinquent person shall pay as a fine to and for the use of this state * * * the sum of £45 * * * .

"Provided nevertheless, that any such delinquent persons may have the liberty of hiring other suitable persons to serve in their room, during the said term of two months.

" * * * [I]t is * * * recommended to the * * * commander-in-chief * * * to take effectual measures for bringing into the field, and holding in service, any such delinquent persons for the term of two months * * * who shall not pay said fine * * * or procure a suitable person to serve in their stead[.]"{EN-2136}

• [1780] "Whereas, * * * there appears * * * to be * * * Deficiencies in the Quotas of Men heretofore assigned to the Towns

* * * * *

" * * * wherever the said Deficiencies arise from the Delinquency of the Persons * * * classed, the Persons appointed to class and detach the Quotas of Militia apportioned to, and to be raised by the several Towns within this State, are * * * to detach an able-bodied effective Man from such delinquent Class * * * ; And the Person so detached, shall, in case of Delinquency, be proceeded against * * * .

" * * * [W]herever the said Deficiency shall arise from the Delinquency of any of the said Towns, the Persons * * * appointed to make a Detachment from the Delinquent Classes * * * [shall] form the Inhabitants thereof into Classes * * * ; And that if any * * * of the said Classes shall not furnish an able-bodied Man * * * , the Persons appointed as aforesaid * * * [shall] detach an able-bodied Man from such Class; and, in case of Delinquency, cause him or his Estate to be proceeded against[.]"{EN-2137}

• [1780] "That Two Hundred and Twenty able-bodied effective Men be inlisted to serve in the Battalion of this State, for the Defence of the United States: That each Man * * * receive a Bounty of One Hundred Dollars * * * , and Forty Shillings * * * per Month * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [T]he Delinquents in the last general Alarm, who were bound by Law to appear * * * , shall furnish Recruits for Three Years, or during the War, in the following Proportions, to wit: every Twelve Delinquents shall furnish One Recruit[.]"{EN-2138}

• [1780] "WHEREAS for the Support and Continuance of the present just and necessary War, on the part of the United States of America, * * * it is indispensably necessary that a regular, efficient and permanent Force be immediately engaged in the public Defence: And whereas the Number of Three Hundred and Eight Men, pursuant to a late Resolve of Congress, has been apportioned to this State, as their Quota of the new Army to be raised * * * :

* * * * *

"AND as a further Encouragement to Persons to enter into public Service, and to do the Duty assigned them by Law, * * * every Twelve of the Delinquents upon the last general Alarm, who were bound by Law to appear * * * , and every Twelve of those who deserted from the Service after having joined their respective Corps in said Alarm, shall furnish an able-bodied effective Man, to make up the Deficiency of the Town to which such Delinquents or Deserters respectively belong: * * * That the * * * Committee [in each Town] shall determine the Proportion of the Expence which each Delinquent or Deserter shall pay towards procuring an able-bodied Man * * * , as they the said Committee shall judge just and right[.]"{EN-2139}

• [1780] "[I]f any Person who shall be detached * * * shall absent himself * * * and shall not procure an able-bodied effective Man to do the Duty in his Stead, * * * such a Part of the Estate of the Person so detached shall be taken and disposed of * * * as shall be sufficient to procure an able-bodied Man to do the said Duty * * * : That if such > Person * * * shall not be possessed of a sufficient Estate for that Purpose, the Commanding-Officer of the Regiment to which he belongs shall advertise, in all the public News-Papers of this State, the Person * * * as a Delinquent, and offer a Reward of Three Hundred Pounds * * * to the Person or Persons who shall apprehend such Delinquent: That upon such Delinquent being apprehended, the said Officer is directed to deliver him to some One of the Officers of the * * * Continental Battalions to do Duty as a Soldier therein, for the Space of One Year[.]"{EN-2140}

>
> • [1781] "[I]f any Person belonging to the military Force of this State [that is, the Militia] shall absent himself, in order to elude or evade this Act, or shall refuse to march forward, upon being detached, by himself or Substitute, he shall be sent forward to the Continental Army, to do Duty for Six Months, in the Rhode-Island Battalion, as a common Soldier[.]"{EN-2141}
>
> • [1781] "WHEREAS by [certain] Act[s] of this Assembly * * * the Men who were called forth * * * to do the * * * Month's Tour of Duty, and refused or neglected to do the same, in Person or by Substitute, were directed to be sent forward to the Continental Army, to do Duty as common Soldiers for the Space of Six Months: And whereas a Number of Persons in this State did neglect to do Duty * * * , Part of whom have not as yet been sent forward * * * : And this Assembly being willing to mitigate the Penalty by the said Acts inflicted,
>
> " * * * [I]t is Enacted, That * * * each and every such Delinquent, who hath not been sent forward, * * * shall pay as a Fine the Sum of Nine Pounds Lawful Silver Money * * * : And that in case any Delinquent * * * shall not have sufficient Estate to pay such Fine, he shall be sent forward to Newport, to do Duty as a common Soldier with the Militia of this State, for a Term of Two Months."{EN-2142}

In these statutes as elsewhere, Rhode Island's General Assembly distinguished between voluntary enlistments out of her Militia (or of men eligible for the Militia) and impressments from her Militia—such as between the "Men to be raised" by the Towns according to "the Quota assigned them" and the "Men which shall be * * * draughted" out of the Militia (1778). Here, in addition, the statutes employed the verb "detach" to signify "draft"—such as "to detach an able-bodied effective Man" (1780) and "to class and detach the Quotas of Militia" (1780).

Rhode Island resorted to drafts from her Militia for three purposes: (i) To complete the ranks of her own regular troops—such as "filling up the State's Brigade" by "apportion[ing] the [draft] to the several Towns * * * which have not raised the Quota assigned them" (1778). (ii) To provide the men the Continental Congress "apportioned to this State, as their Quota of the new Army to be raised" (1780). And (iii) to punish Militiamen who seriously defaulted in their duties—such as those who were "required * * * to perform military duty in the late expedition against the enemy upon Rhode Island, [but] were so destitute of public spirit, and regardless of the laws, honor and welfare of their country, as to neglect or refuse to serve * * * in their own proper persons or by hiring others in their places" (1778 and 1779); or "the Delinquents in the last general Alarm" who were required to "furnish Recruits for Three Years, or during the War" at the rate of "One Recruit" for "every Twelve Delinquents" (1780). Yet, in practice, even these drafts were voluntary for those men who could afford to hire substitutes (1778, 1779, 1780, and 1781) or to pay fines (1778, 1779, and 1781).

(b) Virginia conducted drafts from her Militia for the benefit of her regular troops and the Continental Army on the same principles.

During the Colonial period, for example—

> • [1755] "That * * * a sum of money not exceeding two thousand pounds * * * be laid out for and in the raising and maintaining three compa[n]ies of men * * * to be employed as rangers, for the protection of the subjects in the frontiers of this colony, * * * and shall not be sent out of this colony, nor incorporated with the soldiers now in his majesty's service, or made subject to martial law. And in case the * * * men, cannot be raised, by such as will voluntarily enlist * * * chief officer[s] of the militia * * * [may] draft out of the militia * * * such and so many young men * * * who have not wives and children * * * to be employed in the said service."{EN-2143}
>
> • [1755] "[I]n case the * * * [required] number of men cannot be raised, by such as will voluntarily inlist * * * , it shall and may be lawful, for the field officers and captains of the militia * * * to draft out of the militia of their counties * * * such and so many of their militia, who have not wives or children, * * * to be employed in the * * * service[.]"{EN-2144}
>
> • [1756] "[T]he * * * chief commanding officer of the militia in every county, and of the city of Williamsburg, and borough of Norfolk, except the county of Hampshire, * * * [shall] hold a council of war * * * at which * * * the * * * captains of the militia * * * shall deliver in lists * * * of all the single men in their * * * muster-rolls * * * ; which council of war shall enter the names of all the able-bodied single men upon a list, and shall immediately appoint a certain day * * * for the said able-bodied single men * * * to meet at the court-house of such county, city, or borough * * * : And the * * * [various officers] of the militia * * * shall then inlist all such able bodied men as will voluntarily enter into his majesty's service, but in case so many of them will not voluntarily inlist as will make one of every twenty of the militia, then they shall cause so many distinct blank pieces of paper to be prepared, as the number of the able-bodied single men * * * , upon one of which pieces of paper for every twentieth man * * * shall be written the words * * * "This obliges me

immediately to enter his majesty's service," which distinct pieces of paper * * * shall be put into a box * * * , and then the said council of war shall cause all the said able bodied men single men * * * one after another * * * to draw forth one of the said pieces of paper * * * ; and the person * * * whose lot it shall be, to draw forth * * * any of the said papers, so written upon * * * , shall immediately * * * be deemed and taken to be an inlisted soldier[.]"{EN-2145}

• [1757] "[F]or the more speedy raising the men * * * the several justices [of the peace], and field-officers, and captains of their respective counties, city and borough, * * * shall * * * hold a court, and examine and enquire into the occupation and employment of the several inhabitants * * * between the age of eighteen and fifty years * * * : And the said courts are * * * required to prick down all such able-bodied persons * * * as shall be found loitering and neglecting to labor for reasonable wages; all who run from their habitations, leaving wives or children without suitable means for their subsistance, and all other idle, vagrant, or dissolute persons, wandering abroad without betaking themselves to some lawful employment * * * . And in a case a sufficient number of such persons * * * cannot be found * * * , then the said courts are hereby impowered to prick down such able-bodied men, not being freeholders or house-keepers qualified to vote at an election of burgesses, as they shall think proper to make up the same. * * * [A]nd such court shall then proceed to draft out * * * one man for every forty effective soldiers in the militia of each county, city and borough.

* * * * *

" * * * And for the encouragement of persons who may be inclined to inlist voluntarily into the said service, * * * every able-bodied person * * * that shall * * * inlist himself as a soldier * * * shall be entitled to five pounds * * * : And every person so inlisting shall be deemed and taken as one of the number * * * directed to be drafted[.]"{EN-2146}

After independence, Virginia continued to draft men into her regular troops, as well as for the Continental Army—

• [1777] "[F]or the more speedy and certain completion of the * * * new battalions [for the Continental Army], every county, city, and borough [with certain exceptions] * * * , in case the * * * officers by them appointed * * * shall not * * * enlist the quota * * * , shall make up such deficiency by draughts, to be taken from their respective militias in manner following * * * : The * * * [field officers and magistrates in the commission of the peace] * * * shall first ascertain the * * * deficiency * * * , and immediately * * * divide the whole militia of each county, city, and borough * * * into as many lots as there may be men wanting to supply their quota, * * * taking care to allot to each division * * * as many able bodied men as conveniency will admit, having regard to the property of each individual composing such divisions, so as to make the number of able bodied men, and the property in each, as equal as may be; that each of the * * * divisions shall be required to furnish one man; and in case any such division refuse, or neglect to do so * * * then the field officers and magistrates * * * shall fix upon and draught one man, who, in their opinion, can be best spared, and will be the most serviceable, from the division so refusing or neglecting; and the * * * officers and magistrates * * * shall either procure an able bodied man to enlist, or, in default thereof, shall each of them pay the sum of fifty shillings, as an additional bounty to an able bodied man whom the officer appointed to recruit for the deficiency * * * may procure to enlist * * * ; and the person so furnished or draughted shall, to all intents and purposes, be considered as a regular soldier, * * * unless he shall secure an able bodied man to serve in his room."{EN-2147}

•[1777] "WHEREAS it is indispensably necessary that the regiments of infantry raised * * * , on continental establishment, be speedily recruited * * * : Be it therefore enacted * * * , That * * * the said regiments * * * be completed by recruits or draughts * * * .

* * * * *

"It is farther enacted, That * * * a number of men shall be draughted from the single men of the militia of the several counties, and the city of Williamsburg, * * * above eighteen years of age, who have no child * * * .

* * * * *

"And to the end that the draughts * * * may be fairly and equally made, It is farther enacted, That the * * * commanding officer of the militia in each county or corporation shall * * * collect from the muster rolls the names of all the * * * men * * * who have not a wife or child, or who are not exempted by this act, or from militia duty by having a substitute in the army, adding thereto the names of any other such single men as are * * * not enrolled, and who by the militia law ought to be enrolled, and shall direct all such single men to * * * meet * * * to determine, by fair and equal lot, which of them shall enter into the service[.]"{EN-2148}

•[1779] "FOR the better defence of the commonwealth and providing a force sufficient to repel any hostile invasion * * * , That four regiments of infantry be raised * * * . For completing those regiments, each county in this state, and the city of Williamsburg, except the county of Illinois, shall furnish one twenty fifth part of their militia. And for the more speedy and certain mode of raising the said men * * * the county lieutenant or commanding officer of each county * * * shall summon the four senior justices, not being field officers, and the field officers of his county, * * * which said justices and field officers * * * shall proceed to lay off the militia * * * into divisions * * * [and] each division so laid off is * * * required to produce * * * one able bodied man * * * . Every able bodied volunteer enlisting for any division, shall be entitled to a bounty from the division of seven hundred and fifty dollars, to be paid by the individuals therein * * * . If any of the said divisions shall fail to furnish an able bodied man * * * , the said justices and field officers are * * * required, to appoint some reputable diligent man in each of the * * * divisions so failing, to enlist one able bodied volunteer to serve as a soldier * * * , and when any soldier shall have so enlisted, * * * the said county lieutenant or commanding officer shall * * * certify * * * the bounty he is entitled by law to receive, which sum * * * shall be forthwith levied upon every person make and female, within such district, in proportion to the rate of each persons last assessment[.]"{EN-2149}

Thus, the enlistment of troops under this statute was essentially voluntary, because if any "division" did not produce a fund with which to pay a bounty to a volunteer then the taxpayers in general—"every person male and female"—were dunned. No method was established for selecting a draftee.

• [1779] "WHEREAS * * * many counties hav[e] failed to furnish [by voluntary recruitment] one twenty fifth man [for the Continental Army] * * * ; and whereas it is just that the whole community should bear an equal part in publick defence: Be it enacted * * * That the county lieutenant or commanding officer of the militia shall * * * cause his county to be * * * laid off into divisions, * * * each of which divisions shall furnish a man * * * ; and in those counties where, although the militia hath been already laid off in divisions, have failed to furnish a soldier * * * ; every division having so failed, * * * the county lieutenant shall order the said division to assemble * * * and shall there * * * , by fair and impartial lot, draft one man out of such division, to serve as a regular soldier for * * * eighteen months[.]"{EN-2150}

• [1779] "If any non-commissioned officer or soldier [in the Militia] shall refuse to march when ordered into actual service according to his tour of duty, or find an able bodied man in his room, or shall while in service, mutiny, or desert, and thereof shall be convicted before a court-martial, such offender shall serve as a regular soldier in the troops of this state six months, and shall by order of such court-martial be delivered to a recruiting officer for that purpose."{EN-2151}

• [1780] "WHEREAS a dangerous invasion of South Carolina now threatens * * * that state, and the troops engaged in its defence may be overpowered by superiour numbers, if timely aid not be sent to them. And it is incumbent upon this state, on every principle of policy and good neighbourhood, to assist our friends and fellow citizens in distress, as speedily and effectually as possible; Be it enacted * * * That two thousand five hundred infantry be forthwith called into service, in legal rotation, from [certain] counties, and in [certain] proportions[.]

* * * * *

" * * * If any * * * soldier shall fail to attend when summoned, not having a just and reasonable excuse, or refuse to march when ordered into actual service according to his tour of duty, or find an able bodied man in his room, * * * such offender shall serve as a regular soldier in the troops of the state eight months[.]"{EN-2152}

• [1780] "[T]hree thousand men shall be forthwith raised for the purpose of completing this state's quota of continental forces * * * . The several counties and corporations within this commonwealth * * * shall * * * furnish * * * after their militia shall have been laid off into divisions * * * one fifteenth man of such of their militia as exceed the age of eighteen years, including all * * * officers under the age of fifty years * * * . The * * * commanding officer of each county or corporation * * * shall * * * divide the county and militia into as many separate districts and divisions as the number of men required [to be drafted] * * * , in which districts they shall include all the assessable property * * * , and so arrange it * * * as to have as equal a distribution thereof as the nature of the case will admit among the several divisions, which shall consist, as nearly as may be, of fifteen men each. The divisions * * * may collect among themselves any sum of money * * * and deposit it in the hands of some one of their body * * * , who shall * * * recruit a man to serve in the continental army * * * ; and if any division shall then fail to deliver a recruit * * * the * * * commanding officer * * * shall * * * draft an able bodied man by fair and impartial lot out of such division, to serve in the continental army * * * ; who may nevertheless be permitted to procure an able bodied man in his room; and any person who * * * shall enlist an able bodied soldier to serve in his stead during the war, shall * * * be exempted from all future drafts, except in case of actual invasion[.]"{EN-2153}

• [1780] "[W]hereas it has been a practice of many tradesmen to entice their apprentices to enlist as soldiers, and to sell them as substitutes for large sums of money; Be it enacted, That if any tradesman or other person to whom any infant is, or shall be bound as an apprentice, shall directly or indirectly take or receive, or agree to take or receive any money or other gratuity in consideration of such apprentice, his enlisting as a soldier or sailor in any corps whatsoever, every such tradesman or person so offending, * * * being an able bodied man under the age of fifty years, * * * shall be deemed a soldier to serve in this state's quota of continental troops during the war, and shall be by the commanding office of the militia of his county, delivered to some continental officer belonging to this state.

"And whereas a practice has prevailed of enlisting men for small bounties and afterwards selling them * * * for higher bounties * * * ; Be it enacted, That every person guilty of such offence, shall be subject to the same penalties as tradesmen and others enlisting or selling their apprentices[.]"{EN-2154}

• [1781] "Every militia-man ordered into actual service, who shall refuse and neglect to appear at the time and place of rendezvous appointed for the company, corps or detachment to which he belongs, without a reasonable excuse, or find an able bodied man in his room (but no person shall be admitted as a substitute except he belongs to the militia of the same county, and if it shall come to such substitute's tour of duty before he returns, then the person employing him shall be obliged to serve in his room or procure a second substitute) shall * * * be declared a regular soldier for six months, and shall * * * be delivered to a continental officer for that purpose[.]"{EN-2155}

• [1782] "FOR the more speedy recruiting this state's quota of troops in the continental service, Be it enacted, That three thousand men, of able bodies and sound minds, at least five feet four inches high, * * * and between the ages of eighteen and fifty years, shall be forthwith raised * * * : One able-bodied man * * * for every fifteen militia-men. And for effecting that purpose in the most equitable manner,

" * * * [Certain officers] of the militia * * * shall * * * divide each county into as many classes or districts as there are men required * * * , making such classes as equal as may be, having regard as well to an equal proportion of taxable property in the county, including the property of exempts, as the number of able-bodied men. * * *

" * * * [E]ach class or district * * * shall * * * enlist * * * one man * * * to serve as a soldier in the continental army for three years or during the war, * * * or pay a sum equal to one eighth part of the taxes payable by the several persons of which such class shall consist * * * to such person as they * * * shall appoint * * * . And in case of failure of the payment * * * or delivering such soldier * * * the class shall * * * choose a collector * * * to receive the sums payable from the individuals of such class, or to enlist such soldier; * * * and in case the same shall not be paid or such soldier enlisted * * * [the] commanding officer of the company to which [the] delinquents * * * belong * * * [shall] cause one of the * * * able-bodied militia-men to be drafted, by fair and equal ballot[.]"{EN-2156}

• [1782] "[T]he governor shall cause to be delivered to the * * * commanding officers of the militia of such counties as are most exposed to the incursions of the enemy, and to the officers of the militia of the city of Williamsburg, and borough of Norfolk, such a number of arms as he may think necessary, not less than sufficient to arm three tenths of their militia * * * ; who, on having served their tour of duty, shall return their arms, in good order, * * * to be delivered in like manner to such of the militia as stand next in rotation.

* * * * *

" * * * [E]very militia-man to whom arms shall be delivered * * * who shall neglect or refuse to return the same * * * shall forfeit and pay the sum of twelve pounds; and on failing so to do, or giving security to pay > the same in two months, every such militia-man shall be obliged to serve in the continental army the term of three years or during the war."{EN-2157}

In these statutes, Virginia followed much the same pattern as Rhode Island, whether she assembled regular troops for her own forces (1755, 1756, 1757, 1779, and 1780) or for the Continental Army (1777, 1779, 1780, 1781, and 1782). First, when a statute that authorized a draft employed the verb "raise", it also allowed for voluntary enlistments, which only if insufficient were to be supplemented through impressment—"in case the * * * [required] number of men cannot be raised, by such as will voluntarily inlist" (1755); "in case so many of them will not voluntarily inlist" (1756); "in case the * * * officers by them appointed * * * shall not * * * enlist the quota" (1777); "regiments of infantry raised" to "be completed by recruits or draughts" (1777); "[i]f any of the * * * divisions shall fail to furnish an able bodied man" they shall "enlist one able bodied volunteer" (1779); where "the militia * * * have failed to furnish a soldier * * * the county lieutenant shall * * * , by fair and impartial lot, draft one man out of such division" (1779); "if any division shall * * * fail to deliver a recruit * * * the * * * commanding officer * * * shall * * * draft an able bodied man by fair and impartial lot" (1780); and if certain moneys were not paid or a "soldier enlisted", "[the] commanding officer of the company * * * [shall] cause one of the * * * able-bodied militia-men to be drafted, by fair and equal ballot" (1782). The one apparent exception used the phrase "the more speedy raising the men" in reference to a draft, but also provided for voluntary enlistments in lieu of drafts (1757).

Second, Virginia's drafts were usually highly selective—"young men * * * who have not wives and children" (1755); "so many of their militia, who have not wives or children" (1755); "all the able-bodied single men" (1756); "all such able-bodied persons * * * found loitering and neglecting to labor for reasonable wages (1757); all who run from their habitations, leaving wives or children without suitable means for their subsistance, and all other idle, vagrant, or dissolute persons, wandering abroad without betaking themselves to some lawful employment" (1757); "able-bodied men, not being freeholders or house-keepers qualified to vote at an election of burgesses" (1757); men "who * * * can be best spared, and will be the most serviceable" (1777); and "single men of the militia * * * above eighteen years of age, who have no child" (1777). At the height of the War of Independence, the class subject to the draft was broadened to include all "men, of able bodies and sound minds, at least five feet four inches high, * * * and between the ages of eighteen and fifty years"; but only "[o]ne able-bodied man * * * for every fifteen militia-men" was to be called up (1782).

Third, Virginia exposed to impressment in the regular Armed Forces no more than a small proportion of the men eligible for her Militia—"one of every twenty of the militia" (1756); "one man for every forty effective soldiers in the militia" (1757); "one twenty fifth man" (1779); "one fifteenth man * * * of the[ ] militia as exceed the age of eighteen years" (1780); and "[o]ne able-bodied man * * * for every fifteen militia-men" (1782). Even then, selections were made more or less at random—by "draw[ing] forth * * * pieces of paper" (1756); "by fair and equal lot" (1777); "by fair and impartial lot" (1779 and 1780); and "by fair and equal ballot" (1782).

Fourth, impressment into the regular Armed Forces was employed to punish Militiamen who might "refuse to march when ordered into actual service * * * or * * * while in service, mutiny, or desert" (1779); "fail to attend when summoned * * * or refuse to march when ordered into actual service" (1780); "refuse and neglect to appear at the time and place of rendezvous" (1781); or "neglect or refuse to return" arms delivered to them (1782). Impressment was also used to punish "tradesmen" who might "entice their apprentices to enlist as soldiers, and * * * sell them as substitutes for large sums of money" (1780). (It must have been the sale of the apprentices "for large sums of money" that drew the General Assembly's attention at this time, because several of Virginia's earlier statutes explicitly allowed apprentices to be recruited with the written consent of their masters.{EN-2158})

Fifth, many of these statutes explicitly permitted men subject to impressment to hire substitutes—"procure an able bodied man to enlist" (1777), "find an able bodied man in his room" (1779, 1780, and 1781), and "procure an able bodied man in his room" (1780)—effectively rendering the draft voluntary as to them.

(4) Both Rhode Island and Virginia enacted statutes that, in terms, impressed men from their general populations. In effect, however, these amounted to drafts from their Militia, because all of the able-bodied adult free males who might have been suitable for regular "soldiers" were already subject to enrollment in the Militia.

(a) Not surprisingly, in Rhode Island these statutes arose only in times of great peril, which may explain their generality:

> • [1667] "Whereas, information is given to the Councill of eminent dangers approaching, whereby his Majesties Collony is like to be hazarded by the invasion of the common enemy, or by treachery from amongst the natives, whereby his Majesties subjects may be exposed to great extremities; the Councill * * * doe order, that * * * the magistrates of the townes and places within this Collony * * * are * * * empowered to press or cause to be impressed, any person or persons[.]"{EN-2159}
>
> • [1757] "WHEREAS his Excellency the Earl of Loudoun, Commander in Chief of all His Majesty's Forces in North-America, hath demanded of this Colony, an Aid of Four Hundred and Fifty able-bodied effective Men, to be employed in His Majesty's Service, for and during the ensuing campaign in North-America:

" * * * That Four Hundred and Fifty able-bodied effective Men * * * be forthwith raised in this Colony, to be employed in His Majesty's Service, * * * for and during a Term of Time not exceeding one Year[.]

* * * * *

" * * * [I]n Case it shall happen, that the Four Hundred and Fifty Men * * * now ordered to be raised, should not be made up and compleated * * * , the Deficiency shall be proportioned unto the several Towns in this Colony, so that the Number demanded, may be ready to march[.]"{EN-2160}

In practice, however, this statute was enforced through the Militia; so it, too, might be deemed to be another example of drafts from the Militia.{EN-2161}

• [1778] "[W]hen any draught shall be made, * * * every person who shall be so draughted, and shall not appear, or procure an effective man in his room, shall be liable to be called to account, and punished for disobedience * * * in the same manner as officers and soldiers in actual service may be; excepting persons of tender consciences, for whom the town councils * * * shall provide effective men[.]"{EN-2162}

• [1780] "WHEREAS * * * Six Hundred and Ten effective Men were ordered to be raised within this State * * * , and although the same were apportioned to the respective Towns * * * , some of the said Towns have not yet returned a Man, and others are greatly deficient * * * :

"BE it therefore Enacted * * * , That [certain named] Persons * * * are hereby empowered and directed, to form all male Persons whatsoever, of the Age of Sixteen Years and upwards, residing within their respective Towns (Deserters, Indians, Mulattos and Negroes excepted) into Classes, according to the Deficiencies of the said Towns, having Regard to the Number of Polls and Value of Estates of the Persons so to be classed * * * : And each of the said Classes is directed to furnish * * * One able-bodied effective Man * * * .

* * * * *

"IT is further enacted * * * , That if * * * the said Classes shall refuse or neglect to furnish an able-bodied Man * * * , the Persons appointed to class the said Men * * * are empowered and directed * * * to detach from the Class * * * an able-bodied effective Man, to recruit the said Battalions[.] * * *

* * * * *

" * * * [I]f any Person who shall be detached * * * shall absent himself, and not be to be found, and shall not procure an able-bodied effective Man to do the Duty in his Stead, * * * such Part of the Estate of the Person so detached shall be taken and disposed of * * * as shall be sufficient to procure an able-bodied Man * * * : That if such Person so detached shall not be possessed of a sufficient Estate for that Purpose, the Commanding-Officer of the Regiment to which he belongs shall advertise, in all the public News-Papers of this State, the Person * * * as a Delinquent, and offer a Reward of Three Hundred Pounds * * * to be paid by the State, to the Person or Persons who shall apprehend such Delinquent: That upon such Delinquent being apprehended, the said Officer is directed to deliver him to some One of the Officers of the * * * Continental Battalions, to do Duty as a Soldier therein, for the Space of one Year[.]"{EN-2163}

• [1780 and 1781] "WHEREAS for the Support and Continuance of the present just and necessary War, on the part of the United States of America, * * * it is indispensably necessary that a regular, efficient and permanent Force be immediately engaged in the public Defence: And whereas the Number of Three Hundred and Eight Men, pursuant to a late Resolve of Congress, has been apportioned to this State, as their Quota of the new Army to be raised * * * :

" * * * Be it Enacted * * * , That Three Hundred and Eight able-bodied effective Men * * * be forthwith raised within this State, to serve during the War, or Three Years; and that the whole Number * * * be apportioned to the several Towns in this State, agreeable to a mean Proportion between the rateable Polls and the rateable Estates, compared with the whole number of Polls, and the whole rateable Property in the State * * * :

* * * * *

"AND * * * in case the aforesaid Number of Men * * * shall not be raised and inlisted by such Town * * * , the Persons * * * named, as Committees in the Towns * * * are hereby empowered and required, to form all male Persons whosoever, of the Age of Sixteen Years and upwards, residing in their respective Towns (Indians, Mulattoes and Negroes, excepted) into Classes, according to the Deficiency of each Town * * * , that is to say, into as many Classes as there are Men to be inlisted by such Town; * * * class[ing] the whole of the Inhabitants of their respective Towns * * * , as equitably as may be, according to the Number of Polls and the Value of the Estates of the Persons to be classed, mingling the Rich and Poor together, so as to make the Classes in Point of Estate as nearly equal as may be: * * * That each of the said Classes shall * * * procure a good, able-bodied effective Man, to serve during the War, or for Three Years: That in case * * * said Classes shall neglect or refuse to procure their Recruits, * * * such Town is hereby fully authorized and empowered to hire such Recruit for each of the said neglecting Classes, and may assess the said Class, or the several neglecting Individuals thereof, in the same Proportions as the Taxes * * * are assessed in said Town, against the Individuals of such Class; but if it shall happen that the same shall not be assessed, in that Case according to the Proportion of the last preceding State Tax assessed in said Town, double the Sum which such Town shall give to hire said Recruit: * * * And that each and every Town which shall neglect to raise their whole Quota of Men * * * shall forfeit and pay to the Treasurer of this State * * * double the Sum it shall cost upon an Average to procure a Recruit, for each and every Deficiency; to be collected by adding the same to the next State Tax which shall be assessed on said Town. And moreover, that if * * * the said Classes shall neglect or refuse to furnish an able-bodied Man * * * the Persons appointed to class the said Men * * * are empowered and required thereupon to detach * * * from the Class which shall be deficient * * * an able-bodied effective Man, to serve in this State's Battalion in the Army of the United States, during the said Term of Three Years * * * . And in case any one or more Individuals in a Class shall procure a Recruit at his or their Expence, the Expence * * * shall be reimbursed and repaid to the Person or Persons advancing the same, by the said Class upon whom the same shall be assessed * * * and from whom the same shall be collected in the same Proportions as herein before directed[.]"{EN-2164}

• [1782] "That Two Hundred and Fifty-nine able-bodied effective Men * * * , being a Number sufficient to make up this State's Forces to their compleat Complement, in the Army of the United States * * * , be forthwith raised within this State, to serve Nine Months from the Day of their passing Muster; and that the whole Number aforesaid be apportioned to the several Towns in this State * * * [.]

" * * * [I]n case the aforesaid Number of Men * * * shall not be raised and inlisted * * * that * * * Committees in the Towns * * * are empowered and required to form all Persons and their Estates, whether belonging to Absentees or not, within their respective Towns (Indians, Mulattoes and Negroes excepted) * * * into as many Classes as there are Men to be inlisted by such Town * * * , as equitable as may be, according to the Number of Polls, and the Value of the Estates of the Persons to be classed, mingling the Rich and Poor together, so as to make the Classes in Point of Estate as equal as may be: * * * That each of the said Classes shall * * * procure a good, able-bodied, effective Man, to serve Nine Months * * * : That all Costs and Expences of hiring and procuring said Men shall be defrayed and paid by each Class respectively, to be assessed upon them in the same Proportions as the Individuals are taxed in the last preceding State or Continental Tax assessed in the said Town against the Individuals of such Class * * * .

" * * * [I]n case any one or more of the said Classes shall neglect or refuse to procure their Recruits, * * * the said Committee of the Town to which such delinquent Class belongs shall assess such delinquent Class the Sum of Thirty Pounds, Lawful Silver Money * * * .

* * * * *

" * * * [A]ny Person inlisting * * * shall receive the Sum of Forty Shillings, Lawful Money, in Silver or Gold, Wages per Month, in the same Manner as those already engaged in the Rhode-Island Line of the Continental Army * * * .

" * * * [T]he Committees * * * in the respective Towns * * * are empowered to assess and tax any or all Persons above the Age of Sixteen > Years, and under the Age of Twenty One Years, as they shall think ought to contribute in Money towards raising a Recruit * * * ; and that the said Committees be further empowered to levy the same either on the Estates of the Infants (if they have any) or on the Estates of the Parents, Masters or Guardians, as the said Committees may judge proper."{EN-2165}

>
> In effect, this statute raised troops solely by voluntary enlistments; for, if those were not forthcoming initially, the statute drew moneys from the general population in order to pay for "Recruit[s]", rather than draft the particular men themselves.

Here, too, Rhode Island followed the familiar pattern. First, except in one instance in which the law empowered the authorities only "to press or cause to be impressed" (1667), the statutes employed the verb "raise" to indicate voluntary enlistments—"Men * * * be forthwith raised" (1757), "Men * * * ordered to be raised" (1780), and "able-bodied effective Men * * * be forthwith raised" (1780 and 1781)—while using other phraseology to indicate impressment—"the Deficiency * * * proportioned unto the several Towns" (1757), "detach from the Class * * * an able-bodied effective Man" (1780), and "detach * * * from the Class which shall be deficient * * * an able-bodied effective Man" (1780 and 1781). Second, although the statutes exposed essentially every able-bodied free adult male to impressment—"to press or cause to be impressed, any person or persons" (1667), "all male Persons whatsoever, of the Age of Sixteen Years and upwards * * * (Deserters, Indians, Mulattos and Negroes excepted)" (1780 and 1781), or "all Persons * * * (Indians, Mulattoes and Negroes excepted)" (1782)—they required drafts only when voluntary enlistments fell short of established quotas: "in Case it shall happen, that the Four Hundred and Fifty Men * * * should not be made up and compleated" (1757), "if * * * the said Classes shall refuse or neglect to furnish an able-bodied Man" (1780 and 1781), or "in case the aforesaid Number of Men * * * shall not be raised and inlisted" (1782). Third, because substitutes were allowed—"an effective man in his room" (1778), or "an able-bodied effective Man to do the Duty in his Stead" (1780)—many men avoided actual impressment.

(b) Virginia, too, enacted statutes that, in terms, impressed men from her general population:

> • [1740] "WHEREAS, his majesty hath * * * sen[t] instruction * * * to raise and levy soldiers, for carrying on the present war, against the Spaniards, in America * * * ; and taking into * * * consideration, that there are in every county, within this colony, able-bodied persons, fit to serve * * * , who follow no lawful calling or employment:
>
> " * * * [T]he justices of the peace * * * [may] raise and levy such able-bodied men as do not follow or exercise any lawful calling or employment, or have not some other lawful and sufficient support and maintenance, to serve * * * as soldiers * * * .

> " * * * [N]othing * * * shall extend to the taking or levying any person to serve as a soldier, who hath any vote in the election of * * * burgesses, to serve in the general assembly of this colony; or who is * * * an indented or bought servant ."{EN-2166}
>
> • [1754] "WHEREAS his majesty has * * * sen[t] instructions * * * to raise and levy soldiers for carrying on the present expedition against the French on the Ohio * * * ; and * * * there are * * * able bodied persons, fit to serve his majesty, who follow no lawful calling or employment.
>
> " * * * [T]he justices of the peace of every county and corporation within this colony, * * * upon application made to them, by any officer * * * appointed or impowered to enlist men, * * * [may] raise and levy such able bodied men, as do not follow or exercise any lawful calling or employment, or have not some other lawful and sufficient support and maintenance, to serve his majesty, as soldiers in the present expedition * * * .
>
> " * * * [N]othing * * * shall extend to the taking or levying any person to serve as a soldier, who hath any vote in the election of a Burgess or Burgesses to serve in the General Assembly * * * , or who is, or shall be an indented or bought servant, or any person under the age of twenty one years, or above the age of fifty years."{EN-2167}

Revealingly, in referring to the impressments they mandated, these two statutes used the phrase "to raise and levy soldiers". Plainly, if the draftsmen had imagined that "raise" and "levy" were perfect synonyms, and that impressment could find legal expression and justification solely in the verb "raise", they would not have added the extra verb "levy".[3922] Moreover, the second statute added the phrase "the taking or levying any person", indicating that "to raise and levy soldiers" meant to assemble the men by seizure of their persons through the imposition of authority.[3923] In addition, these drafts were highly selective, embracing only "able-bodied men as do not follow or exercise any lawful calling or employment, or have not some other lawful and sufficient support and maintenance"—classes of men which could not have been very large in pre-constitutional Virginia.

(5) Finally, drafts for naval service were employed far less than for land forces. The maritime tradition in England was impressment (often enforced by the notorious "press gangs"). But, as Blackstone pointed out, although "the practice of impressing * * * is of very antient date", "[t]he [legal] power of impressing men for the sea service * * * has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance"—for "this method of impressing * * * is only defensible from public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way".[3924] In the Colonies and then the independent States, "public necessity" for a maritime draft rarely arose, because sailors could usually be enlisted, as in 1759 in Rhode Island: "[A]ll able boded, effective men, that enlist in the service [to complete the manning of His Majesty's ships] * * * shall be allowed and paid as a bounty, out of the general treasury, over and above the King's, of forty shillings sterling[.]"{EN-2168} And when resort was had to impressment, stringent restrictions might be imposed, as in 1777 in Rhode Island: "Capt. John Hopkins * * * of the ship Warren, under the direction of any justice of the peace, in this state, [shall] be empowered to impress, within this state, a sufficient number of men for the present cruise, being seamen, transient, foreign persons, and not inhabitants of this or any of the United States, and not enlisted into the service of this state or the Continent."{EN-2169}

---

[3922] In some circumstances, of course, the two verbs are roughly synonymous; for "levy" can mean "[t]o raise; to bring together men", and "raise" can mean "[t]o collect; to assemble; to levy". S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definitions 1 ("levy") and 19 ("raise") in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

[3923] Compare Black's Law Dictionary, ante note 368, at 1051, with Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 1423, definition 1.

3. The practice under the Articles of Confederation. The statutes analyzed immediately above exemplify how, during the *pre-*constitutional era, the power to draft men into any armed force in America was lodged exclusively in the Colonies and States in three ways: (i) for their Militia, which always were institutions based on near-universal, compulsory service; (ii) for their own troops, which usually were composed of volunteers, but could be augmented by drafts from the Militia or the general population (which in practice amounted to the Militia); and (iii) for soldiers to serve in the Continental Army of the United States. This tripartite structure carried over into the Articles of Confederation. The Continental Congress agreed to the Articles on 15 November 1777.[3925] And they were gradually ratified by the States from 1778 to 1781.[3926]

a. With respect to the Militia, the Articles provided that "every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred"[3927]—which, of course, every State was then doing, and had been doing, as a State or a Colony (with the peculiar exception of Pennsylvania) from the very beginning. The Articles did not define what constituted "a well regulated militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred". Neither did the Continental Congress claim a right, power, or privilege to dictate how the States should "regulate[ ] and discipline[ ]", or in what manner and to what degree the States should "arm[ ] and accoutre[ ]", their Militia. Rather, Congress presumed that the States knew perfectly well what "well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred" were. Even before the Articles were drafted, a Resolution of Congress had suggested how the [3924] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 418-419.

---

[3925] Journals of the Continental Congress, ante note 42, Volume IX (3 October to 31 December 1777), at 907-928.

[3926] Id., Volume XIX (1 January to 23 April 1781), at 213-223.

[3927] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

States should regulate their Militia.[3928] This, of course, was merely a recommendation. And hardly a novel one. For the principles it embodied were not the newfangled products of Congress, but instead conformed to the pattern and practice long-established in the Colonies and then the independent States. So, in essence, the Articles simply affirmed the situation as it then existed, in which all power over the Militia was concentrated in the States.

b. With respect to what the Constitution later denoted the States' "Troops, or Ships of War",[3929] the Articles provided that

> [n]o vessels of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any state, except such number only, as shall be deemed necessary by the united states in congress assembled, for the defence of such state, or its trade; nor shall any body of forces be kept up by any state, in time of peace, except such number only, as in the judgment of the united states, in congress assembled, shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary for the defence of such state[.][3930]

This was more restrictive than the analogous provision in the Constitution, because under the Constitution a State may "keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" for any otherwise constitutional reason that a State (or Congress) might propose and with which Congress (or a State) might agree, not just (as under the Articles) "for the defence of such state, or its trade" ("Ships of War") or "to garrison the forts necessary for the defence of such state" ("Troops").[3931]

In other than a "time of peace", under the Articles the States could "ke[ep] up" such "vessels of war" and "body of forces" as they chose, with no precondition that Congress "deemed" such "vessels" or "forces" "necessary" or "requisite". So, under the Constitution, the power to "keep Troops, or Ships of War in [other than a] time of Peace" is "reserved to the States respectively" to the full extent that they enjoyed that power in pre-constitutional times.[3932]

Importantly, the Articles plainly differentiated such "vessels" and "forces" from the States' Militia: "No vessels of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any state, * * * nor shall any body of forces be kept up by any state, in time of peace *

[3928] See ante, Chapter 26.

[3929] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3930] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[3931] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3. In one particular, however, the Articles were less strict than the Constitution, because, under the Articles, even in a "time of peace" if a State were "infested by pirates" then "vessels of war m[ight] be fitted out for that occasion, or until the united states in congress assembled, shall determine otherwise". Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 5.

[3932] See U.S. Const. amend. X.

* * ; but each state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia".[3933] Thus, the Militia were to remain permanent establishments of the States, over the existence of which the Continental Congress exercised no authority.

c. Withe respect to the States' participation in "war", the Articles paralleled the analogous clause in the Constitution,[3934] albeit with more detailed requirements:

> No state shall engage in any war without the consent of the united states in congress assembled, unless such state be actually invaded by enemies, or shall have received certain advice of a resolution being formed by some nation of Indians to invade such state, and the danger is so imminent as not to admit of a delay till the united states in congress assembled can be consulted: nor shall any state grant commissions to any ships or vessels of war * * * except it be after a declaration of war by the united states in congress assembled, and then only against the kingdom or state and the subjects thereof, against which war has been so declared, and under such regulations as shall be established by the united states in congress assembled[.][3935]

d. As to the Continental Army and Navy, the Articles provided that

> [t]he united states in congress assembled shall have authority * * * to build and equip a navy—to agree upon the number of land forces, and to make requisitions from each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state; which requisition shall be binding, and thereupon the legislature of each state shall appoint the regimental officers, raise the men and cloath, arm and equip them in a soldier like manner, at the expence of the united states; and the officers and men so cloathed, armed and equipped shall march to the place appointed, and within the time agreed on by the united states in congress assembled: But if the united states in congress assembled shall, on consideration of circumstances judge proper that any state should not raise men, or should raise a smaller number of men than its quota, and that any other state should raise a greater number of men than the quota thereof, such extra number shall be raised, officered, cloathed, armed and equipped in the same manner as the quota of such state, unless the legislature of such state shall judge that such extra number cannot be

---

[3933] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4 (emphasis supplied).

[3934] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[3935] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 5. This provision also allowed the States to "grant * * * letters of marque and reprisal * * * after a declaration of war by the united states". But the Constitution prohibited that practice. Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 with § 10, cl. 1. Both the Articles and the Constitution lodged the exclusive power to declare war in Congress. Compare Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 1 with U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

> safely spared out of the same, in which case they shall raise, officer, cloath, arm and equip as many of such extra number as they judge can be safely spared.[3936]

Perforce of this authority, the Continental Congress could "agree upon the number of land forces" and "make requisitions from each state for its quota"—which "requisitions" were "binding" (although no procedure for enforcing them was ever created); but then how the States might choose to "raise the men" was left entirely to them. The Articles delegated to Congress no power to act directly on individuals, by-passing the States' authority over their own citizens. Moreover, although the Articles licensed Congress to decide that a State "should raise a greater number of men than [her] quota", they reserved to "the legislature of such state" the power to "judge that such extra number cannot be safely spared out of the same, in which case they shall raise * * * as many of such extra number as they judge can be safely spared". Presumably, too, any State could have refused to send even her original quota of "land forces", on the ground that the men could not "be safely spared". Importantly as well, the "land forces" the States supplied to Congress for the Continental Army would have retained a large measure of loyalty to the States from which they came, because the Articles allowed that, "[w]hen land forces are raised by any state for the common defence, all officers of and under the rank of colonel, shall be appointed by the legislature of each state respectively, by whom such forces shall be raised, or in such manner as such state shall direct, and all vacancies shall be filled up by the State which first made the appointment".[3937]

This was the practice the Continental Congress adopted even prior to ratification of the Articles. For example, in 1776 it resolved > [t]hat eighty eight batallions be inlisted as soon as possible, to serve during the present war, and that each state furnish their respective quotas in * * * [certain specified] proportions * * * .

>
> That twenty dollars be given as a bounty to each non-commissioned officer and private soldier, who shall inlist to serve during the present war, unless sooner discharged by Congress:
>
> That Congress make provision for granting lands * * * to the officers and soldiers who shall so engage in the service, and continue therein to the close of the war, or until discharged by Congress, and to the representatives of such officers and soldiers as shall be slain by the enemy:
>
> * * * * *

[3936] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5.

[3937] Arts. of Confed'n art. VII.

> That the appointment of all officers, and filling up vacancies (except general officers) be left to the government of the several states[.][3938]

Then, in 1780, it resolved that "in case the full quota of each state, respectively, shall not be enlisted and brought into the field * * * , that until such recruits for the war shall be obtained, the deficiencies be supplied by the states respectively, by men to serve for not less than one year, after they join the army, unless sooner relieved by the recruits inlisted for the war".[3939] Apparently, "the deficiencies [could] be supplied by the states" either through voluntary enlistments or through impressment.

One historian professed to find in the latter Resolution "[t]he key innovation * * * that the drafted men had to serve until replacements arrived. * * * Changing strategic needs, however, never allowed a thorough test of this system."[3940] This "key innovation", however, was really nothing new. For example, in 1777 Virginia's General Assembly had enacted the following statute:

> WHEREAS it is indispensably necessary that the regiments of infantry raised by the laws of this commonwealth, on continental establishment, be speedily recruited, * * * That fourteen of the said regiments * * * be completed by recruits or draughts * * * .
>
> * * * That the officers of the * * * regiments * * * shall use their best endeavours to re-enlist all the men therein whose times of service are near expiring, to serve for three years, or during the present war * * * .
>
> And as our numbers in continental service * * * may for some time be deficient * * * , That the troops raised for the service of this commonwealth * * * shall be forthwith regimented by the governour and council * * * ; and that a battalion of such troops * * * be marched to join the grand army, there to continue till a sufficient number of recruits may be raised to make good our just proportion, or until the terms of their enlistments shall expire. * * *
>
> * * * That, for securing the completion of the said regiments, a number of men shall be draughted from the single men of the militia of the several counties, and the city of Williamsburg, whether officers or privates, above eighteen years of age, who have no child * * * . And * * * each man so draughted shall be entitled to a bounty of fifteen dollars, to be paid by this commonwealth, and be compelled to serve one year, or find an able bodied man to serve in his room * * * . And as well such draughts, as those who enlist * * * , shall after such service be exempted

---

[3938] Journals of the Continental Congress, ante note 42, Volume V (5 June to 8 October 1776), at 762-763.

[3939] Id., Volume XVIII (7 September to 29 December 1780), at 844.

[3940] R. Wright, Jr., The Continental Army, ante note 396, at 158 (footnotes omitted).

> from all other draughts for the regular service, for so long a time after their discharge as they shall have actually served.{EN-2170}

Virginia also employed recruitment for the Continental Army by entirely voluntary enlistments, both before and after the Continental Congress's Resolution of 1780.{EN-2171}

Of most importance, throughout this period the Continental Congress never attempted to build up the Continental Army by imposing impressment on individual Americans directly under color of its own authority, and never purported to order the States to employ impressment for that purpose under their own laws to the exclusion of voluntary enlistments or of drafts that were in effect voluntary because the men initially selected could supply substitutes. Neither did the Continental Congress ever claim any authority to absorb any part of the States' Militia into the Continental "land forces", as if the Militia somehow constituted "reserves" for that purpose.

e. One historian has pointed out that,

> [f]or all practical purposes, the Continental Army reached its maximum size, in terms of units, in 1777. Hereafter the states' role was not organizing new units but rather procuring individual replacements for existing regiments. This change reduced the influence of state governments and increased the military's control over its own destiny.[3941]

Apparently, this author did not realize the incongruity of suggesting, with implicit approval, that the Continental Army should have desired, or been able, or been allowed to exert "control over its own destiny"—when the Army had been formed just a few years earlier; when it had no separate "destiny" even as a military force, because the Militia were organized in every State; when it was not a politically independent establishment entitled to exercise "control over its own destiny"; and especially when it could claim no "destiny" separate from WE THE PEOPLE who authorized their government to create it, and who through their government commanded it. Indeed, the very last thing Americans needed or desired at that time (any more than they need or desire such a state of affairs today) was for the Army to exert "control over its own destiny", or imagine that it had discretion to do so. And the Army's misbehavior proved no less, exemplifying the danger of a "standing army" even when its members were drawn originally from the ranks of patriots.

Notwithstanding that the Continental Army was a "standing army" in only an attenuated sense—because the "checks and balances" in the Articles of Confederation divided effective authority over it between the Continental Congress and the States, and left the Militia entirely under the control of the States—towards the close of the War of Independence the Army's Officer Corps came within a hair's breadth of attempting to threaten the Continental Congress with desertion or mutiny, or to set up some sort of strongman régime through a coup or Putsch. Admittedly, the Army had justifiable grievances of long standing. Congress had made many promises to the Army relating to pay, supplies, pensions, and the like, and had failed to keep many of them. To a large degree, this was because, although Congress was empowered "to ascertain the necessary sums of money to be raised for the service of the united states, and to appropriate the same and apply the same for defraying the public expenses" and "to borrow money, or emit bills on the credit of the united states",[3942] it was incapable of raising revenue itself by taxation, but instead had to depend upon the States. Languishing in a state of penury, the Army became infected with low morale, disillusionment, disappointment, and discontent, which soon festered into bitter frustration, disaffection, disgust, and anger with Congress. Eventually, leading officers began to foment combinations that soon exhibited the dark hues of conspiracies.[3943] Colonel Lewis Nicola, of Pennsylvania, was an outspoken opponent of republican government who held the Continental Congress in low repute and favored instead a constitutional monarchy, probably of a distinctly military cast. He wanted the new government to grant lands on the frontiers to the soldiery, thus creating a class or order of military colonists who owed their distinct place in society to the Army. Major General James M. Varnum, of Rhode Island, was highly critical of the Articles of Confederation, and even denied that Americans were capable of self-government. He advocated some sort of monarchical or military dictatorship. Colonel Theodore Bland, of Virginia, proposed the dissolution of the States' Armed Forces and the establishment of a huge National army, the loyalties of its officers and men to be secured through pensions and some sort of "knighthood". And Alexander Hamilton suggested that, while the war still continued and the Army remained in being, the Commander in Chief, George Washington, should advance the soldiers' claims with "firmness", and thereby intimidate Congress into coming to a financial settlement with the troops. Washington either rejected these suggestions outright or prudently kept silent.

---

[3941] Id. at 119.

Much of this dissension amounted more to talk than to action. But soon words that threatened action were addressed to Congress itself. General Henry Knox, long one of Washington's closest advisors, was the central figure behind the composition of "The address and petition of the officers of the army of the United States" "To the United States in Congress assembled".[3944] In this list of grievances, the Army obsequiously addressed Congress—not the American people—as "the supreme power of the United States", but then ominously observed that

---

[3942] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5.

[3943] These events are well described in their historical context by Charles Rappleye, Robert Morris: Financier of the American Revolution (New York, New York: Simon & Schuster, 2010), Chapter 14; and by William M. Fowler, Jr., American Crisis: George Washington and the Dangerous Two Years After Yorktown, 1781-1783 (New York, New York: Walker Publishing Company, Inc., 2011), at 94-98 (the Nicola episode), 102-103 (the Varnum episode), 136-137 (the Bland episode), 146-158 (the Knox episode), 168-173 (the Hamilton episode), and 174-188 (the Gates episode), all touched on immediately below.

> [o]ur distresses are now brought to a point. We have borne all that men can bear—our property is expended—our private resources are at an end * * * . We, therefore, most seriously and earnestly beg, that a supply of money may be forwarded to the army as soon as possible. The uneasiness of the soldiers, for want of pay, is great and dangerous; any further experiments on their patience may have fatal effects.[3945] > beg[ged] leave to urge an immediate adjustment of all dues; that so great a part as possible be paid, and the remainder put on such a footing as will restore cheerfulness to the army, revive confidence in the justice and generosity of its constituents, and contribute to the very desirable effect of establishing public credit.

On the basis of this unsubtle threat, "the officers of the army"

>
> * * * * *
>
> We regard the act of Congress respecting half-pay [for retired officers], as an honorable and just recompense for several years hard service, in which the health and fortunes of the officers have been worn down and exhausted. * * * [W]e are willing to commute the half-pay pledged, for full pay for a certain number of years, or for a sum in gross, as shall be agreed to by the committee sent with this address. * * *
>
> To the representation now made, the army have not a doubt that Congress will pay all that attention which the serious nature of it requires. It would be criminal in the officers to conceal the general dissatisfaction which prevails, and is gaining ground in the army, from the pressure of evils and injuries, which, in the course of seven long years, have made their condition in many instances wretched. They therefore entreat, that Congress, to convince the army and the world that the independence of America shall not be placed on the ruin of any particular class of her citizens, and will point out a mode for immediate redress.[3946]

In other words, the Continental Congress—which "the officers of the army" had flattered as "the supreme power of the United States"—was not in their eyes "supreme" after all, but instead was subject to being pressured into negotiating a [3944] PAPER No. VII, The memorial from the officers of the army (dated December 1782), Journals of the Continental Congress, ante note 42, Volume XXIV (1 January to 29 August 1783), at 290-293.

---

[3945] Id. at 291 (emphasis supplied).

[3946] Id. at 292-293 (emphasis supplied).

financial settlement with the Army, under pain of possibly "fatal effects" if the representatives of the States refused. That Congress was "entreat[ed] * * * to convince the army and the world that the independence of America shall not be placed on the ruin of any particular class of her citizens", and for this purpose to arrive at a binding understanding with the Army "as shall be agreed to by the committee sent with th[e] address", amounted to what would be recognized today as a demand for "compulsory public-sector collective bargaining". Inherent in that process is a sharing of WE THE PEOPLE'S sovereignty with the party which can require the government to negotiate.[3947] So, if the Army imagined that it could compel Congress to enter into negotiations, it envisioned itself as effectively at least a co-sovereign—and certainly an hostile one of a factional character, because it was the conceded antagonist of the very representative body which the States had established "for their common defence, the security of their Liberties, and their mutual and general welfare".[3948]

The Continental Congress, however, agreed only to pay in coin by installments a pittance of the arrears it owed to the enlisted men, with the officers to receive promissory notes drawn against the personal credit of Robert Morris, the so-called "financier of the revolution". As the primary concern of most soldiers was to avoid being discharged from the Army in a state of abject poverty, this was better than nothing. But many of the Army's officers, along with those civilians who supported the creation of a strong central government, believed that they did not have to settle for nothing better. Rather, Morris, Hamilton, and their political confederates recognized in the Army's plight an opportunity, not only to do some justice to the soldiers, but also and more importantly to establish a permanent centralized scheme of public finance. They intended to play the dangerous gambit of using the seething discontent and looming power of the Army to frighten Congress into asserting (or usurping, depending upon one's point of view) the power to tax; and if Congress refused to act, then to pressure the States into adopting an entirely new constitution which infused a central government with what they considered the necessary powers to tax and borrow. But they had to move quickly. They could not allow the unrest in the Army's ranks to dissipate, because with the coming of peace and the Army's demobilization that uniquely potent source of pressure would disappear.

Shrewdly, Morris advised Knox that the Army should form a political alliance "with the public Creditors of every kind both foreign and domestic" in order

---

[3947] See, e.g., Sylvester Petro, "Sovereignty and Compulsory Public-Sector Collective Bargaining", 10 Wake Forest Law Review 25 (1974); Edwin Vieira, Jr., "To break and control the violence of faction": The challenge to representative government from compulsory public-sector collective bargaining (Arlington, Virginia: Foundation for the Advancement of the Public Trust & Public Service Research Council, 1980).

[3948] Arts. of Confed'n art. III.

to convince Congress and the States' legislatures to establish "general permanent Funds" which could be used, among other purposes, to pay the soldiers.[3949] Thus, Morris sought to employ the temporary military crisis as the rationalization for permanently fastening around Congress's throat the talons of money-lenders, bankers, financiers, and speculators in public debt. His immediate purpose may have been to succor the soldiers and stabilize the public finances; but the inevitable long-term result was to empower and fatten the financiers. This was perhaps the most astute advice ever given for the formation of a "military-industrial complex": On the plea of "national security", "the standing army" would demand ever-increasing appropriations, with the money-lenders and their cronies ready, willing, and able to provide the necessary funds to Congress. Ultimately, the Army would depend upon the financiers for the money, which Congress would borrow from private sources—the money-lenders would depend upon the Army to provide a plausible, even patriotic excuse for a major part of the huge public indebtedness they would assist public officials in amassing—and venal careerists in the government could avoiding political retaliation from the voters in the near term by loading the burden of public debt onto the backs of taxpayers unrepresented in the present but forced to pay in the future. Apparently, an embryonic scheme of this sort had already been in the minds of the authors of "The address and petition of the officers of the army of the United States", as evidenced by the prediction in the memorial that "an immediate adjustment of all dues" would "contribute to the very desirable effect of re-establishing public credit". Of course, in the long run "the military-industrial complex" would not be the only special interest to benefit from the establishment of a financial partnership between politicians and speculators bottomed upon "public credit". Both Morris and Hamilton understood full well that such an arrangement could support essentially any and every special interest with sufficient political influence—with the very special interests of bankers and financiers always to be given top priority. This has certainly been proven true in spades today, with the multiple "bail outs" and "quantitative easings" that the present-day scheme of "public credit" has made available to public creditors and their clients, both domestic and foreign, through the Federal Reserve System and the General Government's Treasury.

The menaces in the petition from "the officers of the army of the United States" having failed sufficiently to overawe Congress, a coterie of officers close to General Horatio Gates proposed more forceful action. Often denoted "the Newburgh Conspiracy", after the location of the Continental Army's encampment in upstate New York, the scheme was openly embodied in the so-called "Newburgh Address", a supposedly anonymous letter "To the Officers of the Army" from "A fellow-soldier" (reputed to have been Major John Armstrong of Gates's staff) who chided them that,

---

[3949] Quoted in W. Fowler, Jr., American Crisis, ante note 3943, at 158.

> [a]fter a pursuit of seven long years, * * * peace again returns to bless—whom? A country willing to redress your wrongs, cherish your worth, and reward your services; a country * * * longing to divide with you * * * those riches which your wounds have preserved! Is this the case? Or is it rather a country that tramples upon your rights, disdains your cries, and insults your distresses? Have you not, more than once, suggested your wishes, and made known your wants to congress? * * * And have you not lately, in the meek language of entreating memorial, begged from their justice, what you would no longer expect from their favour? How have you been answered? * * *
>
> If this, then, be your treatment while the swords you wear are necessary for the defence of America, what have you to expect from peace, when your voice shall sink, and your strength dissipate by division?
>
> When these very swords, the instruments and companions of your glory, shall be taken from your sides, and no remaining mark of military distinction left, but your wants, infirmities, and scars! Can you then consent to be the only sufferers by this revolution, and, retiring from the field, grow old in poverty, wretchedness, and contempt? * * * But if your spirit should revolt at this; if you have sense enough to discover, and spirit enough to oppose tyranny, under whatever garb it may assume, whether it be the plain coat of republicanism, or the splendid robe of royalty; if you have yet learned to discriminate between a people and a cause, between men and principles,—awake,—attend to your situation, and redress yourselves. If the present moment be lost, every future effort is in vain; and your threats then, will be as empty as your entreaties now. * * * If your determination be in any proportion to your wrongs, carry your appeal from the justice to the fears of government; change the milk and water style of your last memorial,—assume a bolder tone—decent, but lively, spirited and determined; and suspect the man, who would advise to more moderation and longer forbearance. * * * Tell [Congress], that though you were the first, and would wish to be the last, to encounter danger; though despair itself can never drive you into dishonour, it may drive you from the field; * * * and that the slightest mark of indignity from congress now must operate like the grave, and part you for ever; that in any political event, the army has its alternative—if peace, that nothing shall separate you from your arms but death;—if war, * * * you will retire to some unsettled country * * * . But let it represent also, that, should they comply with the request of your late memorial, it would make you more happy, and them more respectable: that while the war should continue, you would follow their standard into the field, and when it came to an end, you would withdraw into the shade of private life, and give the world

> another subject of wonder and applause—an army victorious over its enemies—victorious over itself.[3950]

If perhaps not an open call to immediate desertion or rebellion, "the Newburgh Address" certainly threatened and encouraged such action in the near future.

As much as Washington sympathized with the soldiers, and foresaw fearful consequences if the Continental Congress demobilized them without largely making up their arrears in pay, he discountenanced the Army's meddling in politics even more. So when he became aware of the Address, he called for his officers to meet in order to discuss the matter. In their midst, he assured them that > it can scarcely be supposed, at this last stage of the war, that I am indifferent to [the Army's] interests. But how are they to be promoted? The way is plain, says the anonymous addresser. If war continues, remove into the unsettled country * * * [.] "If peace takes place, never sheath your swords * * * until you have obtained full and ample justice." This dreadful alternative, of either deserting our country in the extremest hour of her distress, or turning our arms against it, which is the apparent object, unless congress can be compelled into instant compliance, has something so shocking in it, that humanity revolts at the idea.

>
> * * * * *
>
> While I give you these assurances * * * to exert whatever ability I am possessed of in your favour let me entreat you * * * not to take any measures, which * * * will lessen the dignity and sully the glory you have hitherto maintained. Let me request you to rely on the plighted faith of your country, and place a full confidence in the purity of the intentions of congress * * * ; and that they will adopt the most effectual measures in their power to render ample justice to you, for your faithful and meritorious services. And let me conjure you * * * to express your utmost horror and detestation of the man who wishes, under any specious pretences, to overturn the liberty of our country, and who wickedly attempts to open the floodgates of civil discord, and deluge our rising empire in blood.[3951]

When he had finished (so the story goes), Washington began to read from a letter which confirmed his confidence that Congress would eventually do justice to the Army. Finding it difficult to focus on the words, he took out a new pair of spectacles, apologizing to his audience that "I have grown gray in your service and now find myself growing blind". At this, the incipient mutiny drowned in his officers' tears of self-reproach. Had it not been for that humble gesture from that remarkable man at that unique moment, Heaven alone knows by what centripetal or centrifugal political forces the nascent American Republic might have been overwhelmed—perhaps squeezed to death in the vice of a military dictatorship, or torn asunder by civil war, or dissolved altogether into a gaggle of mutually hostile independent States.

---

[3950] Quoted in David Ramsay, The Life of George Washington (London, England: Luke Hanford & Sons, 1807), at 208-215 note.

[3951] Id.

That this episode ended without a National calamity should not minimize the lessons it teaches. In this case, the men in "the standing army" were, as individuals, justified in their grievances, albeit not in the means many of their leaders employed in their attempts to redress them. In their impersonal corporate capacity as a "standing army", however, they imagined themselves capable of intimidating Congress—and, when threats failed, of plotting to punish the whole country through desertion, or to seize power through mutiny. Ambitious politicians who wanted to create a strong central government with themselves at the helm sought to capitalize on the disaffection among the soldiery as a reason for replacing the Articles of Confederation. And the money-lenders recognized the crisis as a context propitious for promoting a permanent system of "public credit" through which private bankers, financiers, and speculators could ally with public officials to the mutual benefit of both classes—proving the wisdom of Thomas Jefferson's belief that "banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies",[3952] inasmuch as "standing armies" almost never create "banking establishments", but "banking establishments" almost universally support "standing armies". And nothing has changed since then.

C. Impressment under the Constitution. The powers of Congress "[t]o raise and support Armies", "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy", and "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers"[3953] supposedly provide the constitutional grounds for the General Government's impressment of individuals into the regular Armed Forces of the United States. If the verbs "raise" and "provide" are construed so broadly as to admit of no limitation, personnel for both "Armies" and "a Navy" could be supplied in three ways: (i) by direct interaction between the General Government and individuals, through voluntary recruitment; (ii) by direct interaction between the General Government and individuals, through a draft; and (iii) by interaction within the federal system between the General Government and the States, in the course of which the General Government sets quotas for or makes other arrangements with the States, leaving them to determine whether and how to assemble the necessary men by voluntary recruitment or impressment. The first of these requires no analysis. As will appear anon, the third should be the preferred method for manning the regular Armed Forces of the United States. The second, however, presents a multifaceted constitutional problem. This is because the apologists for the General Government's authority to impress individuals for service in the regular Armed Forces have given scant consideration to how seriously their misconstruction of Congress's three powers clashes with

---

[3952] Letter from Thomas Jefferson to John Taylor, 28 May 1816, in The Works of Thomas Jefferson, Paul L. Ford, Editor (New York, New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, Federal Edition, Twelve Volumes, 1904-1905), Volume XI, at 533.

[3953] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12, 13, and 18.

> • the powers of Congress "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions", and "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress";[3954]
>
> • the authority and responsibility of the President as the "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States", who "shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed";[3955]
>
> • the requirement that "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, * * * or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay";[3956]
>
> • the Second Amendment, which declares that "[a] well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed"; and
>
> • the Tenth Amendment, which mandates that "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people".

Apparently, Americans are expected to believe that hidden within the verbs "raise" and "provide" lurks a plenary power that Britain never claimed the authority to exercise in the Colonies throughout the pre-constitutional period—a power that the States did not delegate to the Continental Congress under the Articles of

---

[3954] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3955] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 and § 3.

[3956] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

Confederation—and a power which, when the independent States themselves exercised it prior to ratification of the Constitution, almost invariably involved recruiting men by voluntary enlistments, as opposed to the power the States also exercised to "draft" (or "draught"), "impress", and "levy" men, all of which verbs denoted compulsory service. Apparently, too, Americans are expected to believe that the Constitution delegated to Congress a supreme power to draft individuals directly, without any involvement whatsoever of the individual States in the process—notwithstanding that the Constitution only prohibited the States "without the Consent of Congress" from using their preëxisting power to draft for the purpose of "keep[ing] Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace", and allowed them to draft without reference to any Congressional "Consent" in time of "War" or when "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay". And, most implausible of all, apparently Americans are expected to believe that, in delegating to Congress a power to draft individuals into the Armed Forces, the Constitution thereby empowered Congress to reduce "the Militia of the several States" to impotence, if not nonexistence, even while building up a huge "standing army" within a vast "military-industrial complex".[3957]

1. In this as in every other question of constitutional interpretation, to advert to the relevant rules of construction must be the first order of business.

a. Whether the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" encompasses the power to impress individuals directly into "Armies", and whether that power negates the power to draft which the States exercised before the original Constitution was ratified, cannot simply be assumed. Rather, "[t]he burden of establishing a delegation of power to the United States or the prohibition of power to the states is upon those making the claim".[3958] This burden, moreover, is not easily carried. For "when a legislative power is claimed for the national government the question is whether that power is one of those granted by the Constitution, either in terms or by necessary implication".[3959] And "necessary implication" requires more than just "conjecture, supposition, or mere reasoning on the meaning or intention of the writing".[3960]

b. In addition, the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" (or any other power or disability, for that matter) cannot be analyzed in isolation. For "[t]he Constitution

---

[3957] Hereinafter, for the sake of simplicity, analysis will focus solely on the meaning of the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies". The existence of a power to draft for the Navy might be a closer question, for two reasons: (i) Throughout the pre-constitutional era Britain had asserted a power to impress men for the Senior Service. And (ii) during that era no one considered that a "standing navy" (if such a term was ever used) could possibly pose the dangers a "standing army" always did.

[3958] Bute v. Illinois, 333 U.S. 640, 653 (1948).

[3959] Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U.S. 46, 83-84 (1907).

[3960] Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U.S. (12 Peters) 657, 723 (1838).

is an organic scheme of government to be dealt with as an entirety".[3961] "[I]n arriving at any conclusion" as to what a constitutional provision means, one should "refer to * * * the entire frame and scheme of the instrument, and the consequences naturally attendant upon the one construction or the other".[3962] "[E]ach [provision of the Constitution] must be considered in light of the other[s]".[3963] And no one provision of the Constitution may "be so enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other".[3964] In sum, > no one provision of the Constitution is to be segregated from all the others, and to be considered alone, but * * * all the provisions bearing upon a particular subject are to be so interpreted as to effectuate the great purposes of the instrument. If, in following this rule, it be found that an asserted construction of any one provision of the Constitution would, if adopted, neutralize a positive prohibition of another provision of that instrument, then * * * such asserted construction is erroneous, since its enforcement would mean, not to give effect to the Constitution, but to destroy a portion thereof.[3965]

c. Although interpretation of the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" cannot proceed from the premiss that the other relevant powers and disabilities listed above can be disregarded, and although all of these powers and disabilities must be mutually harmonized within the framework the Constitution establishes, nonetheless "harmonization" does not mean that, in particular circumstances, some other power or disability should not be emphasized, its fulfillment recognized as having priority, and consistency with its requirements made the controlling factor in the construction of the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies". For in this area, after all, the Constitution does just that.

Repetitively, the Constitution asserts that the Militia, on the one hand, and the regular Armed Forces—whether the "Armies" and "Navy" of the United States, or the "Troops, or Ships of War" of the States, or all of them combined—on the other hand, are not of perfectly equal dignity. The Militia are the most important, because:

•The Militia preëxisted the Armed Forces of the Union by decades and even generations, not just before the Constitution but before the Articles of Confederation and the Declaration of Independence as well.

[3961] Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 44 (1957) (opinion of Frankfurter, J.).

[3962] Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429, 558 (1895).

[3963] Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corporation, 377 U.S. 324, 332 (1964).

[3964] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[3965] South Dakota v. North Carolina, 192 U.S. 286, 328 (1904) (White, J., dissenting).

• The Militia are required to be composed of "the body of the people, trained to arms";[3966] whereas the Armed Forces are composed of only small segments of the population.

• "[T]he Militia of the several States" are establishments the Constitution incorporates as permanent components of its federal system; whereas the Armed Forces are merely contingent, and in the case of "Armies" suspect, organizations.[3967]

• The Constitution assigns explicit authority and responsibilities to the Militia; whereas it assigns no explicit authority or responsibilities to the Armed Forces.[3968]

• The Constitution allows the Militia to be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for three purposes only, none of which entails their absorption within the regular Armed Forces—rather, when "called forth" they are to serve as Militia.[3969]

• The Militia are "necessary to the security of a free State"; whereas "standing armies" are likely to pose a danger to "a free State".[3970]

• As the ultimate "checks and balances" against rogue "standing armies", the Militia obviously cannot be compelled to reinforce the latter to the point at which the whole system of "checks and balances" breaks down. And,

• Perhaps most directly relevant here, because the Militia are establishments based upon near-universal compulsory service, whereas the Armed Forces could be (as they are today) composed entirely of volunteers and mercenaries, the Militia have a claim on impressment prior and always superior to any that the Armed Forces might assert.

Thus, it is no exaggeration to conclude that *a construction of the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" which licenses Congress to draft individuals without limit neutralizes or even negates the Militia powers and disabilities of the Constitution, and thereby disjoints, if it does not entirely dismantle, the federal system, the most important of the Constitution's "checks and balances", and the very possibility of maintaining "the security of a free State" anywhere within America.* This result alone should suffice to refute such a construction.

2. Nonetheless, even more systematic analysis would not be amiss in order to prove that point beyond cavil.

[3966] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3967] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

[3968] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13 with cl. 15.

[3969] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[3970] Compare U.S. Const. amend. II with Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

a. The first precept to be applied is that "[w]e are bound to interpret the Constitution in the light of the law as it existed at the time it was adopted".[3971] At the end of the *pre-*constitutional period, the Articles of Confederation provided that:

> No vessels of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any state, except such number only, as shall be deemed necessary by the united states in congress assembled, for the defence of such state, or its trade; nor shall any body of forces be kept up by any state, in time of peace, except such number only, as in the judgment of the united states, in congress assembled, shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary for the defence of such state; but every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred[.][3972]

> The united states in congress assembled shall have authority * * * to build and equip a navy—to agree upon the number of land forces, and to make requisitions from each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state; which requisition shall be binding, and thereupon the legislature of each state shall * * * raise the men * * * : But if the united states in congress assembled shall * * * judge proper that any state should not raise men, or should raise a smaller number than its quota, and that any other state should raise a greater number of men than the quota thereof, such extra number shall be raised, * * * in the same manner as the quota of such state, unless the legislature of such state shall judge that such extra number cannot be safely spared out of the same, in which case they shall raise * * * as many such extra number as they judge can be safely spared.[3973]

So, when the Constitution was being drafted—

• The States were required to maintain their Militia, which of course they had always done on their own as independent States or as Colonies throughout the earlier part of the *pre-*constitutional period.

• "[I]n time of peace" the States were not allowed to "ke[ep] up" "vessels of war" or "any body of forces", except for certain specific limited purposes the Continental Congress approved.

• The Continental Congress could "make requisitions from each state for its quota" of "land forces". These were "binding", in that "the legislature of each state" was required somehow to "raise the men". In the nature of things, any men whom

---

[3971] Mattox v. United States, 156 U.S. 237, 243 (1895).

[3972] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[3973] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5.

a State "raise[d]" for the "land forces" of the United States had to come from the set of men eligible for her Militia. Yet, if the Continental Congress determined that a "state should raise a greater number of men than the quota thereof", the State could have refused to comply had her "legislature * * * judge[d] that such extra number c[ould]not be safely spared out of the [state]"—perhaps because such a detachment would have excessively weakened the State's Militia. Presumably, too, the selfsame grounds for refusing to comply must have been implicitly allowable with respect to a requisition even of a State's normal quota, because whether the men could "be safely spared" depended upon how many were subject to requisition, not whether that number happened to be the State's normal quota or some greater number.

• Each State possessed a general power to impress all able-bodied free males into her Militia, and through that power to draft men into her own "body of forces" or into the "land forces" of the Continental Army. A draft for the regular Armed Forces was always effectively a draft from the Militia, because everyone who was capable of being a soldier was already enrolled as a matter of law in the Militia. But the States never employed their power to draft so as to absorb their Militia into the regular Armed Forces, or even seriously to deplete their Militia for that purpose—instead, only small percentages of Militiamen were ever impressed into the regular forces; and even those percentages were minimized by the right of draftees to provide substitutes.

• The Continental Congress neither exercised nor even claimed a power to draft individuals directly from the general population into the Continental Army. And,

• Although the Militia were often held to be inferior to regular troops as a matter of fact, this was largely on the basis of anecdotal evidence, as opposed to a study of the big picture; for, from the latter perspective, "the militia played a very important role in the War of American Independence. Its political functions probably were indispensable, and as a military institution, supported by state troops, it continued to meet its traditional colonial responsibilities for local defense and for providing a general emergency reserve."[3974] In any event, the notion that the regular Armed Forces, whether of a State or of the United States, were somehow superior to the Militia as a matter of law had no currency.

The question then becomes: Did the Constitution change any of these principles of military federalism and organization so as to empower Congress to draft [3974] R. Wright, Jr., The Continental Army, ante note 396, at 183. Noteworthy is the confusion in this passage, typical of modern commentators who erroneously treat the Militia as an unitary organization ("it") rather than as a set of establishments as numerous as the several States themselves. Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied): "such Part of them [that is, the Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States".

---

an unlimited number of individuals directly into the General Government's "Armies"?

b. A power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" by impressment cannot be derived—as it were, by legal osmosis—from the undoubted power of the States to impress every able-bodied adult for their Militia, and the undoubted duty of every able-bodied adult to serve in some fashion in those Militia.

True, the power to draft individuals to serve in "[a] well regulated Militia"[3975] is inherent in the very concept of such a Militia, because that is how "[a] well regulated Militia" comes into being in the first place. But the Constitution delegates to Congress no power whatsoever to create a "Militia of the United States", "well regulated" or otherwise. The only Militia the Constitution recognizes are "the Militia of the several States",[3976] which during pre-constitutional times always were, and by this constitutional denotation today remain, the States' establishments. So, inasmuch as Congress lacks the power to create a "Militia of the United States", it must also lack the power to draft men for a "Militia of the United States", and (as a necessary consequence of that) must lack the further power "to draft upon a draft" by impressing persons out of an imaginary "Militia of the United States" for service in the General Government's regular Armed Forces. A fortiori, because the Militia are "the Militia of the several States", Congress lacks the power to impress anyone into those Militia in the first place; and therefore must lack the further power "to draft upon a draft" by impressing persons out of any of the States' Militia for service in the General Government's regular Armed Forces.

Also true, the Constitution authorizes Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia".[3977] But a power "[t]o provide for organizing" is not a power to draft. The obligation of all eligible individuals to participate in the Militia justifies the draft that in fact creates the Militia, "composed of the body of the people, trained to arms".[3978] It is the basis upon which the Militia are "settled" in the first instance, as opposed to being "regulated" thereafter.[3979] This obligation exists independently of any action by Congress or the States. It is not the product, but the source, of the various powers that the States and Congress exercise with respect to the Militia. And it would exist—even if the States and Congress did not—wherever Americans sought to live in "a free State", because "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State".[3980] But an individual

---

[3975] U.S. Const. amend. II (emphasis supplied).

[3976] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[3977] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3978] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[3979] See ante, Chapters 3 (Rhode Island) and 14 (Virginia). See also ante, at 100-102.

[3980] See U.S. Const. amend. II.

who is drafted into the Militia perforce of his own duty as a citizen is not thereby "organized" in any way. After the simple assembling of individuals for the Militia, another step is required: namely, for those individuals to be "trained to arms", which requires "organiz[ation]" according to certain constitutional principles that pertain to "arms", to "training", and to other aspects of "discipline". This, however, is "organiz[ation]" within and for the purposes of the Militia, not for Militiamen's compulsory service in the regular Armed Forces.

No less true, the Constitution does delegate to Congress the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"[3981]—but this is not a general power to draft, only to "call[ ] forth the Militia" from the States in which they subsist, so that they may be "employed in the Service of the United States", and then only for one or more of those three specific purposes. For Militiamen to serve in the regular Armed Forces is not one of them. To the contrary: Every one of these purposes presumes that "the Militia" "call[ed] forth" will serve as Militia only—otherwise, the Constitution would not assign to Congress the power "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States",[3982] separate from its power "[t]o make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces".[3983]

c. The Constitution delegates to Congress no explicit power "[t]o draft" or "[t]o impress" individuals into the General Government's regular Armed Forces, only the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies". So proponents of a power "[t]o draft" or "impress" must establish that such a power is implied in "raise" in the special constitutional sense that "Laws" which "draft" or "impress" are "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o raise * * * Armies".[3984]

d. Self-evidently, however, not just anything that might be merely imagined to be "necessary and proper" for "rais[ing] * * * Armies" can legitimately be implied from that power. For example, the powers "[t]o lay and collect Taxes",[3985] "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States",[3986] and "[t]o coin Money"[3987] would materially assist execution of the power "[t]o raise and support Armies". If the old saying be true that "gold is the sinews of war", such that the Power of the Sword depends upon the Power of the Purse, then without the former three powers

---

[3981] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3982] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[3983] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14.

[3984] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[3985] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[3986] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2.

[3987] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5.

the latter one would be feckless.[3988] Indeed, without the three former powers, all other governmental powers the exercise of which required the expenditure of money would be of extremely limited usefulness. That being so, apparently the three former powers never needed enumeration in the Constitution, because they could be implied as always "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution [most or even all of] the [other] Powers". Yet enumerated they were and are. So these appearances are deceptive. Inasmuch as "'[i]n expounding the Constitution * * * every word must have its due force, and appropriate meaning; for it is evident from the whole instrument, that no word was unnecessarily used, or needlessly added'",[3989] the unavoidable conclusion must be that the power "[t]o raise and support Armies" does not imply every other imaginable power that might functionally assist in its execution, if countervailing constitutional considerations—such as the existence of separate enumerated powers addressed specifically to those subjects—obtain.

And where an implied power "[t]o draft" or "[t]o impress" is concerned, other compelling countervailing considerations do exist.

e. Prudent construction of a Constitution intended to create a government of powers limited by their very definitions requires that practices which even Blackstone opined were "not * * * any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of [England]", and which were "only defensible from public necessity",[3990] should not be read into the Constitution as "necessary and proper" without the strongest linguistic and historical foundation, and even then should be employed only after all possible alternatives have been exhausted.

Both linguistically and historically, the verb "raise" does not necessarily imply "draft" or "impress". As detailed immediately above, in *pre-*constitutional usage "raise" usually connoted voluntary enlistment, as contrasted with "draught" ("draft"), "impress", or "levy", which denoted compulsion; and when "raise" was employed in a statute which also provided for "draughts", it referred to voluntary enlistments, which if insufficient were to be supplemented by "draughts".

Yet the Articles of Confederation used the verb "raise" to encompass all possible means by which the States could bring men into the field to meet their quotas for the Continental Army: "The united states * * * shall have authority * * * to make requisitions from each state * * * , and thereupon the legislature of [3988] Actually, of course, the reverse is true. For "gold alone will not procure good soldiers, but good soldiers will always procure gold". Niccolò Machiavelli, Discourses on the First Ten Books of Titus Livius (1531), Second Book, Chapter X, in The Historical, Political, and Diplomatic Writings of Niccolo Machiavelli, Christian E. Detmold, Translator (Boston, Massachusetts: James R. Osgood and Company, 1882), Volume 2, at 252. But analysis can profit from taking arguendo the common misconception as its premiss.

---

[3989] Williams v. United States, 289 U.S. 553, 572-573 (1933).

[3990] Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 412, 419.

each state shall * * * raise the men".[3991] And the Continental Congress doubtlessly presumed that the States would employ their full panoply of powers—including both voluntary enlistments and "draughts"—for that purpose. So some plasticity must be accorded to this use of "raise": for example, that "shall * * * raise" imposes a mandate on the States to do something, but allows them to choose what to do.

f. No ambiguity exists, however, as to the rule that "draft" or "impress" can be implied in "raise" only if "Laws" for drafting or impressing are both "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o raise * * * Armies". As all drafts for the regular Armed Forces must, in the final analysis, be taken from the Militia, such "Laws" would be "necessary and proper" only if the Armed Forces were superior to the Militia in terms of their relative constitutional "necess[ity]". That, however, is not the case.

First, the argument in favor of unlimited powers "[t]o raise * * * Armies" was expressed most facilely by the great exponent of centralized government, Alexander Hamilton:

> The authorities essential to the common defense are these: to raise armies; to build and equip fleets * * * . These powers ought to exist without limitation, because it is impossible to foresee or to define the extent and variety of national exigencies, and the correspondent extent and variety of the means which may be necessary to satisfy them. The circumstances that endanger the safety of nations are infinite, and for this reason no constitutional shackles can wisely be imposed on the power to which the care of it is committed. This power ought to be coextensive with all the possible combinations of such circumstances; and ought to be under the direction of the same councils which are appointed to preside over the common defense.
>
> * * * * *
>
> Whether there ought to be a federal government intrusted with the care of the common defense is a question in the first instance open to discussion; but the moment it is decided in the affirmative, it will follow that that government ought to be clothed with all the powers requisite to complete execution of its trust. And unless it can be shown that the circumstances which may affect the public safety are reducible within certain determinate limits * * * , it must be admitted * * * that there can be no limitation of that authority which is to provide for the defense and protection of the community in any matter essential to its efficacy—that is, in any manner essential to the formation, direction, or support of the NATIONAL FORCES.[3992]

[3991] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5.

[3992] The Federalist No. 23 (emphasis in the original).

Hamilton, however, did not take into consideration that, although it may be "impossible to foresee or to define" all "the circumstances which may affect the public safety", it is not difficult to predict the dangers posed by "standing armies" in particular. Indeed, the Constitution takes these dangers into account by authorizing more than one establishment to "provide for the common defence": "the Army and Navy of the United States" (together with such "Troops, or Ships of War" as the States receive "the Consent of Congress" to "keep"), on the one hand, and "the Militia of the several States", on the other. When the Militia are "called into the actual Service of the United States" alongside the regular Armed Forces, then all of these forces together constitute the totality of "the NATIONAL FORCES". With all of these forces available to it, "the [General G]overnment * * * [is] clothed with all the powers requisite to complete execution of its trust". As far as "Armies" and "Troops" are concerned, though, "available to it" does not mean always in actual existence. For the Constitution foresees the possibilities that the House of Representatives could determine that "Armies" were unnecessary or even dangerous, and therefore would refuse "Appropriations of Money to that Use", or that Congress could withhold its "Consent" for the States to "keep Troops".[3993] So the question is never which forces should be "unlimited" or "limited" in the abstract, but instead how to conform the composition of "the NATIONAL FORCES" to the actual pattern the Constitution prescribes.

Second, in contrast to the Militia, the Constitution attaches to the regular Armed Forces no imprimatur of "necessity"; whereas the Second Amendment declares "well regulated Militia" to be "necessary to the security of a free State".

Third, inasmuch as all eligible adults are always subject to compulsory membership in "the Militia of the several States", no sizeable portion of the population suitable for military service remains to be drafted into the Armed Forces. The absence of a significant number of subjects for such a draft indicates the unlikelihood of an implied Congressional power for that purpose. It would be useless to argue that Congress, in the exercise of its power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia"[3994] could simply exempt large numbers of individuals from "the Militia of the several States" for the very purpose of drafting them into the "Armies" of the United States. For, to be constitutional, any exemption from the Militia must first and foremost be consistent with maintenance of the Militia as viable forces, not aimed at stripping them of their necessary manpower.

Fourth, an implied power to drain the Militia of manpower through a general draft in favor of the regular Armed Forces would deprive Congress of the substance through which it could exercise its power "[t]o call forth the Militia to execute the [3993] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12 and art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

---

[3994] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[3995] and would deny the President the explicit constitutional means by which he can "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed".[3996] One power of Congress, however, cannot "be so enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other",[3997] let alone so as to frustrate the performance of the President's foremost duty.[3998] Similarly, for such an implied power to exist would require either: (i) that "[a] well regulated Militia" is not "necessary to the security of a free State", in comparison to the "Armies" of the United States, and therefore may be subordinated thereto through a draft whenever Congress deems it expedient; or (ii) that even if "[a] well regulated Militia" remains "necessary to the security of a free State", Congress may deem the "Armies" of the United States "necessary" to something politically more important than maintaining "a free State"—such as launching aggressive foreign military adventures, establishing a domestic para-military domestic police state, and so on. Both of these alternatives, however, contradict the Second Amendment. But Congress's power "[t]o raise and support Armies"cannot contradict the Second Amendment.

Fifth, implication of a Congressional power to draft Americans into the Armed Forces ad libitum would license rogue Congressmen to extract from "the Militia of the several States" the cannon fodder sufficient for a massive "standing army", the very establishment against which the Militia are to serve as "checks and balances". Patriotic Americans of the constitutional era were agreed that "[i]t is against sound policy for a free people to keep up large military establishments and standing armies in time of peace", not least because of "the facile means which they afford to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people".[3999] And in keeping with this understanding, the Second Amendment declares "well regulated Militia", not the regular Armed Forces, "necessary to the security of a free State". Moreover, suspicion of a "standing army" appears even in the original Constitution, which enables any newly elected House of Representatives effectively to disestablish all "Armies", by providing that "no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years".[4000] Nowhere does the Constitution contain an equivalent provision applicable to the Militia. In addition, the Constitution explicitly delegates to the Militia, not to the regular Armed Forces, the responsibility and authority "to execute the Laws of the Union"[4001]—which would be of critical importance if aspiring usurpers and tyrants

---

[3995] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[3996] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[3997] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[3998] Compare U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 7 with art. II, § 3.

[3999] J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646.

[4000] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12. See also U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4001] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

attempted to recruit rogue elements of the Armed Forces to overthrow the Constitution. Conversely, nowhere does the Constitution delegate any authority to the Armed Forces to execute any law against the Militia—doubtlessly because the Militia, being composed of WE THE PEOPLE themselves, would never undertake "to throw off" the Constitution, unless under the principles of the Declaration of Independence that "Form of Government [had] become[ ] destructive of the[ ] ends" for which it had been instituted, in which event THE PEOPLE would be entitled under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" "to alter or to abolish it" and "to provide new Guards for their future security", no matter what the Armed Forces thought about the matter.

To serve as an effective "check and balance" against rogue Armed Forces, however, the Militia must always command at least such strength as will suffice to deter aspiring usurpers and tyrants, or to resist them if deterrence fails. This was the premiss of the argument James Madison put forward against "the visionary supposition" that the General Government "may previously accumulate a military force for the projects of ambition", and with that force bring about "the downfall of the State governments":

> That the people and the States should, for a sufficient period of time, elect an uninterrupted succession of men ready to betray both; that the traitors should, throughout this period, uniformly and systematically pursue some fixed plan for the extension of the military establishment; that the governments and the people of the States should silently and patiently behold the gathering storm and continue to supply the materials until it should be prepared to burst on their own heads must appear to everyone more like the incoherent dreams of a delirious jealousy, or the misjudged exaggerations of a counterfeit zeal, than like the sober apprehensions of genuine patriotism. Extravagant as the supposition is, let it, however, be made. Let a regular army, fully equal to the resources of the country, be formed; and let it be entirely at the devotion of the * * * [General G]overnment: still it would not be going too far to say that the State governments with the people on their side would be able to repel the danger. The highest number to which, according to the best computation, a standing army can be carried in any country does not exceed * * * one twenty-fifth part of the number able to bear arms. This proportion would not yield, in the United States, an army of more than twenty-five or thirty thousand men. To these would be opposed a militia amounting to near half a million of citizens with arms in their hands, officered by men chosen from among themselves, fighting for their common liberties and united and conducted by [State] governments possessing their affections and > confidence. It may well be doubted whether a militia thus circumstanced could ever be conquered by such a proportion of regular troops.[4002]

The defense which Madison presumed a properly proportioned Militia could mount, though, would not be possible if usurpers and tyrants under color of law could simply draft into the Armed Forces enough Militiamen to reduce the remainder of the Militia to impotence. It would be useless to contend that the General Government's Treasury could not afford such a draft. For why should usurpers and tyrants, intent on destroying the country's fundamental law, be deterred simply by the monetary price of obtaining absolute power, when they would expect to impose the costs of their oppression upon its victims? Of course, a draft would not necessarily be required to bring about this result. As of this writing, the stage for "the project of ambition" has been set in another way: by effectively disestablishing the Militia through the creation of the oxymoronic "unorganized militia", together with the maintenance of large regular Armed Forces and *para-*militarized police recruited on a voluntary basis. But a draft would surely provide significant assistance to usurpers and tyrants in the course of a political crisis in which a large proportion of the adults capable of Militia service opposed them.

g. Inasmuch as the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" is not explicitly limited in any way, if "raise" implied "draft" or "impress" then anyone and everyone from the pool of adults capable of performing some military service could be drafted. This, of course, constitutes the very pool of individuals who make up the Militia. So the claim that "Laws" providing for a general draft would be "necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the * * * Power[ ]" "[t]o raise * * * Armies"[4003] cannot be entertained, because the power "[t]o make [such] Laws" would be capable of destroying, if not always intentionally employed to destroy, the Militia. It is, of course, irrelevant that such an extensive draft might not be imposed tomorrow, or even the day after. For "the legality of [any governmental] power must be estimated not by what it will do but by what it can do".[4004] As America's Founding generation knew, "in government what may be done will be done".[4005]

By way of analogy, a power to draft for the Armed Forces would amount to a "tax in manpower" on all other activities in which the individuals to be impressed might be employed. So, just as "the power to tax involves the power to destroy" the things or activities taxed, and thereby "the power to destroy may defeat and render

---

[4002] The Federalist No. 46.

[4003] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[4004] Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, 162 (1921) (McKenna, J., dissenting).

[4005] John Francis Mercer, Address to the Members of the Conventions of New York and Virginia (1788), quoted in The Antifederalist Papers, Morton Borden, Editor (East Lansing, Michigan: Michigan State University Press, 1965), at 176.

useless the power to create",[4006] a power to draft would "involve[ ] the power to destroy" the Militia in fact, and thereby "defeat and render useless" the safeguards the Constitution mandates in law through the Militia. "[T]he Militia of the several States" are State governmental establishments, however. And just as no State may tax the General Government or any of its instrumentalities,[4007] Congress may not tax a State or a State's instrumentalities.[4008] This must be especially true when the States' instrumentalities are themselves permanent components of the federal system which being "necessary to the security of a free State" "promote the general Welfare[ ] and secure the Blessings of Liberty",[4009] and upon which the Constitution explicitly depends to "establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, [and] provide for the common defence".[4010]

Therefore, Congress should be disabled from "rais[ing] * * * Armies" through an unlimited draft imposed directly on the population comprising the Militia. Indeed, any such unlimited "tax in manpower" levied upon the Militia in favor of the General Government's "Armies" should be constitutionally inconceivable, because: (i) the Militia are the primary "checks and balances" on a "standing army"; and (ii) a draft would build up "the standing army" necessarily at the expense of the Militia, thus transmogrifying the "checks and balances" into means for increasing the power of the very institution they were meant to constrain.

h. The foregoing analysis compels the conclusion that, if Congress may "raise * * * Armies" through any form of compulsory service, its power to do so must be stringently constrained in some effective manner, so that the numbers of Americans subject to any form of "draft" or "impressment" always remain small in relation to the numbers subject to service in the Militia—such as the "one twenty-fifth part of the number able to bear arms" which Madison believed was "[t]he highest number to which, according to the best computation, a standing army can be carried in any country" in his time.

(1) Whatever that number might be today, the best way to ensure a limitation on any draft would be to counterpose a countervailing power to the

---

[4006] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 431 (1819).

[4007] E.g., McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316 (1819).

[4008] See Indian Motorcycle Co. v. United States, 283 U.S. 570 (1931). Contrast Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 75 U.S. (8 Wallace) 533 (1869). The circulating notes of State banks should have been declared unconstitutional "Bills of Credit" which "[n]o State shall * * * emit". U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1. Congress had to employ its power to tax in order to drive those notes out of circulation only because the Supreme Court had erroneously refused on several occasions to condemn them as "Bills of Credit". See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 391-454. After the Civil War, Congress could also have banned State bank notes directly, on the grounds that their emission "abridge[d] the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States". U.S. Const. amend. XIV, §§ 1 and 5.

[4009] Compare the exact coincidence of ends between U.S. Const. amend. II and preamble.

[4010] Compare the exact coincidence of ends between U.S. Const. preamble and art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

power of Congress—that is, some institution with constitutional authority, independent of Congress, which must exercise some effective say in how and to what extent a draft operates.

Within the General Government, this institution is unlikely to be the Supreme Court.[4011] Arguably, it could be the Presidency. As the dual "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the Militia of the several States",[4012] with a duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed",[4013] the President labors under a constitutional responsibility to insure that, whatever may be done for "the Army and Navy", the Militia always retain sufficient manpower to be so "well regulated" that they can provide "the security of a free State" against all enemies, both foreign and domestic.[4014] Therefore he cannot, on the one hand, accept excessive augmentation of "the Army and Navy" at the expense of the Militia, such that he becomes the titular "Commander in Chief" of a dangerous "standing army", while, on the other hand, he allows that expansion to occur, so that thereby he loses the ability as the Militia's "Commander in Chief" to interpose them as effective "checks and balances" against rogue elements in "the standing army". Of course, since 1903, no President has ever taken this responsibility seriously (or perhaps even realized that it exists). So it would be politically unrealistic to expect any change in the attitude of the Executive Branch on this score in the foreseeable future.

The States, too, have a palpable concern with any draft the General Government might direct at the members of their Militia, because the Militia are "the Militia of the several States", and "[a] well regulated Militia"—which means one with sufficient strength of numbers—is "necessary to the security of a free State". Moreover, if the Tenth Amendment is correct, and "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively", then to be sure that a power to draft which has not been "delegated to the United States" as a matter of law is actually "reserved to the States respectively" as a matter of fact, the States themselves must take appropriate action to "reserve[ ]" it. Certainly they cannot depend upon rogue officials in the General Government to admit that a power to draft has "not [been] delegated to the United States" to the excessive degree which those officials desire. The practical problem, though, is that the States' civilian governmental institutions would not find it easy to interpose themselves against a draft which Congress aimed at the general population and despatched agents of the General Government to enforce directly against individuals.

[4011] See post, at 1807-1835.

[4012] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4013] U.S. Const. art. II, § 3.

[4014] U.S. Const. amend. II.

At the sharp end of the stick where the point of any draft is felt, the Militia would be the logical and practical choices to exercise the necessary effective countervailing power. Not just their members as individuals, but as well the Militia as institutions would be the targets of any draft. Moreover, they would labor under a constitutional responsibility to oppose any draft that trenched too deeply upon their ability to perform their primary duty of providing each of their States with "the security of a free State". So they should refuse to release men to "the standing army" above some maximum percentage. And they could make their refusal effective: For, if properly revitalized, they would deploy the physical power necessary and sufficient to oppose the actual impressment of their members, individual by individual; from that physical power, they would derive the political power to interpose themselves against the draft, because "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'";[4015] and at all times they would enjoy the legal power to act, perforce of the Constitution. After all, because the Constitution secures "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" so that they will be capable of serving in "well regulated Militia", that "right" is as well a "right of the people" to participate in such Militia. Indeed, the two are inextricably related. So, just as "the right * * * to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed", the right to participate in the Militia must "not be infringed" either.[4016] Any draft for the General Government's "Armies" beyond whatever proportion the Constitution allows necessarily infringes on each and every draftee's right to participate in the Militia. Therefore, any of "the people" eligible for the Militia, either as individuals or arrayed institutionally in the Militia, can lawfully oppose such a draft.

The point of departure for analysis, then, is to adopt as a working hypothesis that Congress may not draft individuals directly, but may "raise * * * Armies" by a process which involves the States and their Militia as active participants, capable of functioning as effective "checks and balances". This procedure is firmly grounded in legal history. As observed above, when the Articles of Confederation used the verb "raise"—"[t]he united states * * * shall have authority * * * to make requisitions from each state * * * , and thereupon the legislature of each state shall * * * raise the men"[4017]—they doubtlessly understood that the States would employ both voluntary enlistments and "draughts" for that purpose. And that is precisely what the States did. That being so, in construing Congress's power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" according to the rule that "[w]e are bound to interpret the Constitution in the light of the law as it existed at the time it was adopted",[4018] the wisest course would be to follow as closely as possible what was actually done under the Articles,

---

[4015] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[4016] See ante, Chapter 45.

[4017] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5.

[4018] Mattox v. United States, 156 U.S. 237, 243 (1895).

as a sure guide to what was actually meant both there and later on in the Constitution. For it is hard to imagine that WE THE PEOPLE intended to delegate to Congress under the Constitution significantly less authority "[t]o raise * * * Armies" than the Continental Congress enjoyed under the Articles of Confederation. Yet, inasmuch as whatever additional power the Constitution may have delegated to Congress had to be taken from the States, any such delegation and restriction need to be proven in unmistakable terms, not simply assumed.

(2) Under the foregoing hypothesis, Congress could "raise * * * Armies" in three ways.

(a) Congress could seek voluntary enlistments from the general population. The Articles did not provide for this; but the verb "raise" certainly encompasses it.

(b) Following the procedure adopted in the Articles, which the phrase "[t]o raise * * * Armies" certainly does not exclude, Congress could simply make requisitions from the States according to a system of fair quotas, leaving to legislators in each State the determination of how to enlist the requisite number of individuals. Even "in time of Peace" such action would not fall afoul of the prohibition that "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops * * * in time of Peace",[4019] because those whom the States enlisted would never become part of the States' own "Troops", but instead would be assigned and delivered directly to the General Government's "Armies". And because the requisitions would be worked through the States' governments, rather than through drafts of individuals directly by Congress, the States could function as effective "checks and balances", because the General Government could seek to enforce its requisitions only against the States themselves, which would resist its excessive demands.

(c) Another, more complicated, arrangement is also possible. The Constitution imposes the restriction that "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops * * * in time of Peace", whether the soldiers are volunteers or draftees. But Congress may grant its "Consent" for that purpose—and may condition that "Consent" upon whatever otherwise constitutional requirements it deems expedient.[4020] Congress may even permit the States to enact legislation of their own in order to implement the terms of its "Consent".[4021] This amounts to a significant relaxation of the similar limitation embodied in the Articles of Confederation, which permitted the Continental Congress to allow a State to "ke[ep] up" no "body of forces * * * except such number only, as in the judgment of the united states, * * * shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary

---

[4019] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4020] See Arizona v. California, 292 U.S. 341, 345 (1934) (interstate compact).

[4021] See De Veau v. Braisted, 363 U.S. 144, 153-155 (1960).

for the defence of such state".[4022] So, for example, Congress may give "Consent" for the States to use any or all of their *pre-*constitutional powers—including the power to draft—to bring "Troops" into the field, upon the condition that those "Troops" be made available for duty with the General Government's "Armies" by direct incorporation, or as reserves or supplements, whenever Congress so orders. Thus, upon their enlistments, these forces would become, not simply the States' "Troops", but also effectively part of "the * * * land Forces" of the United States.[4023] This hermaphroditic character as State "Troops" at birth but with an ineradicable commitment to serve in or alongside the General Government's "Armies" is doubtlessly the constitutional basis (if any exists) upon which the modern National Guard rests (rather than the absurd notion put out for popular consumption that the National Guard is some form of "militia").[4024]

Thus, by coupling its power to give its "Consent" for the States to "keep Troops" with its power "[t]o raise * * * Armies", Congress would create a truly federal process for achieving both of those purposes simultaneously. Congress's employment of its power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" would be necessary, because its "Consent" for the States to "keep Troops" would not, by itself, necessarily cause those "Troops" to be recruited or made available for the General Government's service, inasmuch as, without such a condition on those "Troops'" enlistments, the States could retain them as exclusively their own, within their own territories, for their own defense.

Of course, the willingness of the States to coöperate with Congress in effectuating such a plan would be required. For "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" is not "by the compulsion of Congress". "Consent", after all, means "[c]oncord; agreement; accord; unity of opinion" and "joint operation".[4025] Congress may allow the States to enlist voluntarily, or even to draft, "Troops" for themselves, for the General Government, or for both, relying in every instance upon the States' agreement and coöperation; but it may not command the States to do so over their objection in any instance.

(d) All three of these alternatives for "rais[ing] * * * Armies" would have to be constrained in two ways:

First, from the purely legal perspective, neither Congress nor the States can prevent "the body of the people"—that is, "[t]he main part; the bulk"[4026]—from

---

[4022] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[4023] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14.

[4024] See ante, at 786-793.

[4025] S. Johnson, Dictionary, ante note 50, definitions 2 and 4, in both the First (1755) and the Fourth (1773) Editions.

[4026] Id., definitions 9 in the First Edition (1755) and 8 in the Fourth Edition (1773).

exercising "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" within "well regulated Militia".[4027] For the Militia must always remain effective establishments under WE THE PEOPLE'S control through THE PEOPLE'S direct participation en masse. So neither Congress nor the States can: (i) disestablish the Militia, directly or indirectly; or (ii) take any other action—such as by rendering the Militia incapable of performing their functions through depletion of their personnel or equipment—which prevents either Congress from being able to call forth the Militia for one or more of the three purposes the Constitution specifies or the States from deploying their Militia for those purposes (if Congress should default on its obligations) or for any other purposes related to each particular State's own "homeland security". Now, inasmuch as any voluntary enlistments by Congress, as well as enlistments or drafts by the States, in aid of building up the General Government's "Armies" would necessarily deprive the Militia of personnel, the Constitution must require: (i) that some proportion of the Militia can never be safely spared for that purpose; and therefore (ii) that Congress may never enlist, requisition, or agree with the States to recruit or levy so many individuals for the General Government's "Armies" as to trench upon that proportion, and the States may never agree to, facilitate, acquiesce in, or fail to oppose any such excessive drain of manpower from their Militia.

To be sure, the problem of an "excessive" draft in any particular instance reduces to one of relative numbers, which leaves some room for reasonable debate. Yet what might constitute an excessive proportion could never be left for empirical determination—because, if the proof of the proportion's being excessive were the effective destruction of the Militia, it might be established too late to rectify the situation. Beyond doubt, because "a well regulated militia" is "composed of the body of the people" and "a majority of the community hath an indubitable, unalienable, and indefeasible right, to reform, alter, or abolish [a bad government]",[4028] a draft for the General Government's "Armies" or a State's "Troops" that attempted to take a majority or more of Militiamen would be unconstitutional. Even a lesser number of draftees, though, might so weaken a State's Militia in a particular set of circumstances that it could not perform its function as "the proper, natural, and safe defence of a free state".[4029] As the Commonwealth's statutes of 1780 and 1782 evidence, Virginians of that era believed that a draft consisting of one-fifteenth of the enrollment of her Militia was sufficient during wartime and otherwise safe.[4030] Which suggests that a draft of any greater percentage would be presumptively invalid.

[4027] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13 and U.S. Const. amend. II.

[4028] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) arts. 13 and 3.

[4029] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[4030] See ante, at 1761-1762.

Second, from the political perspective, Congress cannot be allowed to enlist as volunteers or to requisition or otherwise draw from the States so many individuals for the General Government's "Armies" as to cause Americans to fear the erection of an excessively large and independent "military-industrial complex". So the States should refuse to meet quotas that Congress might set, or to agree to make their "Troops" available for the General Government's "Armies", or even to allow members of their Militia to enlist in those "Armies", if such arrangements trenched too deeply upon their Militia. After all, if sufficiently large percentages of Militiamen were absorbed directly into the "Armies" of the United States or into the "Troops" of the States that might be incorporated within those "Armies", the residue of able-bodied adults eligible for the Militia would no longer represent "the body of the people"—and therefore could constitute no true Militia at all. Obviously, a draft by the States from their Militia, ostensibly predicated on the States' original power to draft for their Militia, but employed for the specific purpose of building up a "standing army" not simply at the expense but even tending towards the destruction of the Militia, would be at least doubly deficient: On the one hand, it would be legally self-contradictory—for no power can be invoked in order to destroy that very power's primary object. On the other hand, it would be politically suicidal—for, unless prevented from coming into being, or deterred, or resisted by WE THE PEOPLE themselves through their Militia, "standing armies" afford "facile means * * * to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people".[4031] Inasmuch as maintaining "the security of a free State" is the purpose of the Militia, and impressing men in excessive numbers from the Militia into possibly rogue "standing armies" self-evidently subverts that security, any such draft could not conceivably be constitutional. And no putative Congressional requisition or "Consent" directed to apparently willing States could make it so.

What, though, if rogue public officials in the States, in league with equally villainous officeholders in the General Government, attempted to impress too many Militiamen into the States' "Troops", ultimately for service with the General Government's "Armies"? Then fulfillment of the duty of constitutional interposition would fall to WE THE PEOPLE themselves. At that point, Militiamen would need to refuse en masse to enter both the States' "Troops" initially and the General Government's service derivatively, on the grounds that: (i) such an excessive draft from the Militia for the States' "Troops" is unconstitutional in and of itself; and (ii) the Militia may be "call[ed] forth" into "the Service of the United States" for three constitutional purposes only, none of which involves performing any duty in the "Armies" of the United States.[4032]

[4031] J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646.

[4032] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

Precisely how large the requisition or draft would have to be to pose trouble would entail the somewhat subjective judgment as to exactly when the growth of "the military-industrial complex" finally threatened "to reduce the[People] under absolute Despotism".[4033] That was undoubtedly not the case in the aftermath of the Civil War (except perhaps in some parts of the South during Reconstruction)—it became problematic in principle after World War I, because of the precedent of militaristic centralization the Wilson Administration imposed on this country during that conflict[4034]—it burgeoned in practice in World War II—in continued during what was legally peacetime, under color of "the Cold War" and the large-scale military operations in Korea and Vietnam[4035]—until today, rationalized by the ersatz but apparently eternal "war on terrorism", it has fastened an iron grip around this country's throat. So the proper judgment would not be too difficult to make today.

(3) In time of war, distinguishably, the States are constitutionally on their own with respect to putting regular Armed Forces into the field. They do not require "the Consent of Congress" to "keep Troops"—for inasmuch as "[t]he [only] power[ ] * * * prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States" is the power "to keep Troops * * * in time of Peace" "without the Consent of Congress", the power "to keep Troops" at any other time must be "reserved to the States respectively", "without the Consent of Congress" and free from its interference.[4036] And if a State were "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as w[ould] not admit of delay", she would be entitled even to "engage in War", certainly with her Militia and presumably with whatever "Troops" she managed to "keep".[4037] Plainly enough, then, the reserved authority to "keep Troops" other than "in time of Peace" must include the authority to enlist "Troops" in the first instance, by whatever methods the States had been wont to employ during the pre*-constitutional period—for nothing in the Constitution restricts them in that regard*—or else how would any "Troops" appear in the first instance in order to enable the States to "engage in War"?

[4033] Declaration of Independence.

[4034] See, e.g., the synopsis in ORDER OF BATTLE OF THE UNITED STATES LAND FORCES IN THE WORLD WAR (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1931, Reprint of 1949), Volume 3, Zone of the Interior, Part 1, Organization and Activities of the War Department, at 2-12. A key piece of legislation which facilitated the erection of this structure—and set the tone for the Presidential Caesarism that was to become the dominant theme in every subsequent episode of America's international military involvement—was An Act Authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government, Act of 20 May 1918, CHAP. 78, 40 Stat. 556.

[4035] The cessation of hostilities in World War II was proclaimed on 31 December 1946. See Proclamation No. 2714, 61 Stat. 1048. Since then, Congress has failed, neglected, or refused "[t]o declare War" as the predicate for any of the international operations the Armed Forces of the United States have conducted, no matter how extensive and prolonged. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.

[4036] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 (emphasis supplied) with amend. X.

[4037] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

Under these circumstances, the federal system of "checks and balances" might work somewhat differently. If a State attempted to assemble so many "Troops" in her own "standing army" that her Militia were in danger of becoming seriously debilitated, the General Government would be entitled to intervene, because: (i) each State must maintain a Militia sufficient in all respects to be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for the three purposes the Constitution specifies;[4038] and (ii) any State which assembled so many "Troops" at the expense of her Militia as to turn her territory into a "garrison state" would draw into question whether she had thus set aside her "Republican Form of Government".[4039] If the General Government did not intervene, however, then the people of that State, in and through whatever remained of their Militia, would have to take matters into their own hands.

(4) Nay-sayers, of course, will contend that such arrangements for "rais[ing] * * * Armies" are unrealistic and impractical, because they will not provide "enough" personnel for the "Armies" of the United States. The critical question, however, is: "Enough for what?" For chauvinistic National aggrandizement through aggressive military imperialism—in conflict with "the genius and character of our institutions"?[4040] To supply "cannon fodder" in subservience to the special interests of foreign nations or supra-national organizations—in violation of the Declaration of Independence? Or to "provide for the common defence" as the Preamble to the Constitution understands that phrase?

Whatever the answers to such questions, even nay-sayers cannot deny that, since America's misadventure in Vietnam ended, the General Government's Armed Forces have been composed entirely of volunteers who have proven to be "enough" for whatever military endeavors have been mounted throughout the world.[4041] Indeed, these forces may have been and may now be "too many" for what the Constitution understands to be the true "common defence",[4042] because they have enabled rogue officials in the General Government to maintain military bases and engage American forces in combat operations and other forms of intervention all over the world, usually under a cloak of "peacekeeping" that conceals highly dubious ends.

Were more individuals justifiably required for the regular Armed Forces than could be recruited from volunteers alone, requisitions from the States along the narrow lines outlined above would surely suffice. For example, if revitalized

---

[4038] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[4039] See U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4.

[4040] See Fleming v. Page, 50 U.S. (9 Howard) 603, 614 (1850).

[4041] On the background to this, see Bernard Rostker, I Want You! The Evolution of the All-Volunteer Force (Santa Monica, California: The RAND Corporation, 2006).

[4042] See U.S. Const. preamble and art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

"Militia of the several States" enrolled simply every adult able-bodied male from sixteen to sixty years of age, a draft on even the modest scale of Virginia's in the 1780s, taking only one-fifteenth of the Militia's total complements (some 6.67%), would generate millions of soldiers in addition to all of the volunteers already enlisted or who would enlist in the Armed Forces.[4043] Moreover, should a massive "Invasion" of the United States ever occur, the General Government could always "call[ ] forth the Militia" in their entireties to supplement the regular Armed Forces. In preparation for such dire circumstances, a patriotic and prudent Congress should and would "provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" to the degree necessary to render them suitable for dealing with whatever reasonably predictable contingencies they might face. Why this has not already been done remains the question that the nay-sayers must answer. Public officials' ignorance of the constitutional requirements for "organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", coupled with their sloth, may explain the situation in part. Another—perhaps the larger—part of the explanation, though, can be traced to the arrogance, avarice, ambition, and appetite for abusive powers that drive all too many officials, politicians, and their clients and controllers in factions and special-interest groups. For leaving the Militia *un*prepared to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities provides "facile means * * * to ambitious and unprincipled rulers to subvert the government or trample upon the rights of the people".[4044] That is, these individuals would rather jeopardize true National security than risk the loss of their offices, political power, accumulated wealth, inflated social status, and other perquisites were WE THE PEOPLE, reorganized in revitalized Militia, to reassert their control over this country. These individuals implicitly subscribe to the motto "rule or ruin", blind to the inevitable consequences that their "rule" will lead inexorably to this country's "ruin", and that with its "ruin" must come the end of their "rule", too.

(5) Finally, the construction of Congress's power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" which limits that power to voluntary enlistments, requisitions, and coöperation with the States—but excludes direct drafts from the general population—cannot be excluded as a matter of law. Read through the lens of the Articles of Confederation and all relevant pre-constitutional law and practice, the terms of the Constitution fully justify it. So it could have been what WE THE PEOPLE had in mind, had they wanted to improve incrementally on the Articles, rather than create a wholly new system that centralized in Congress more power to set up a "standing army" than [4043] E.g., according to USA QuickFacts from the U.S. Census Bureau (reported as of 10 July 2009), the population of the United States in 2008 amounted to some 304,059,724. Of these, 49,746,248 were disabled, leaving 254,313,476. Of these, 24.5% were under 18 years of age, leaving 192,006,674. Of these, 12.6% were over 65 years of age, leaving 167,813,733. Of these, 50.7% were female, leaving 69,051,476 eligible males. And, of these, one-fifteenth (or 6.67%) totaled 4,603,565, certainly not an inconsiderable number.

---

[4044] J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, ante note 576, Volume 2, § 1897, at 646.

even Parliament had ever claimed. Certainly no application of the Constitution by Congress during the immediate *post-*constitutional period exists to gainsay this construction.[4045] And that Congress never actually "raise[d] * * * Armies" in the way posited here during the early years of the Republic provides no counterargument, either, because the United States had no occasion to assert any sort of power to draft until the Civil War and then World War I.[4046]

Admittedly, all of this rather starkly contradicts the misconstruction of the Constitution the Supreme Court has set forth on these matters (discussed immediately below). But this conflict merely illustrates once again that the doctrine of "judicial supremacy" through "judicial review" which now mesmerizes America's legal profession is a humbug.[4047]

D. The Supreme Court's disastrously erroneous decision in the Selective Draft Law Cases. During the first seventy-five or so years of the Constitution's existence, Congress never attempted to draft anyone into the "Armies" of the United States, directly or indirectly. The very first statute providing for a modern form of impressment was enacted only in 1863, at the height of the Civil War.[4048] But it never found its way to the Supreme Court for "judicial review".[4049] Rather, the Court first handed down an opinion on this subject only in 1917, almost one hundred and thirty years after ratification of the Constitution, when Congress purported to enact a National draft during World War I.

1. In pertinent part, the Act of 1917 provided

> [t]hat in view of the existing emergency, which demands the raising of troops in addition to those now available, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—
>
> First. Immediately to raise, organize, officer, and equip all or such number of increments of the Regular Army provided by the national defense Act [of] * * * nineteen hundred and sixteen,[4050] or such parts thereof as he may deem necessary * * * .

[4045] See, e.g., Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 174-175 (1926) (and cases there cited); Marshall Field & Company v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649, 691 (1892).

[4046] See, e.g., Lake County Commissioners v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 671-672 (1889).

[4047] See, e.g., Edwin Vieira, Jr., How To Dethrone The Imperial Judiciary (San Antonio, Texas: Vision Forum Ministries, 2004).

[4048] An Act for enrolling and calling out the national Forces, and for other Purposes, Act of 3 March 1863, CHAP. LXXV, 12 Stat. 731, discussed in historical context post, at 1823-1829.

[4049] Not unlikely, however, is that in the political atmosphere of the time, still redolent with gun smoke, the Court would have rationalized the draft as a unavoidable "emergency" measure, just as it upheld the Union Congress's emission of legal-tender United States Treasury Notes—and doubtlessly on no less flimsy reasoning. See Knox v. Lee, 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 457 (1871), discussed in E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, at 561-666.

[4050] An Act For making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, Act of 3 June 1916, CHAP. 134, 39 Stat. 166.

Second. To draft into the military service of the United States, organize, and officer, in accordance with * * * section one hundred and eleven of said national defense Act * * * , any and all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserves, and said members so drafted into the military service of the United States shall serve therein for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged: Provided, That when so drafted the organizations or units of the National Guard shall, so far as practicable, retain the State designations of their respective organizations.

Third. To raise by draft * * * , organize and equip an additional force of five hundred thousand enlisted men, or such part or parts thereof as he may at any time deem necessary * * * : Provided, That the organization of such force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organizations of the Regular Army * * * .

Fourth. The President is further authorized * * * to raise and begin the training of an additional force of five hundred thousand men organized, officered, and equipped, as provided for the force * * * in the preceding paragraph of this section.

Fifth. To raise by draft, organize, equip, and officer, as provided in the third paragraph of this section, in addition to and for each of the above forces, such recruit training units as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of such forces at the maximum strength.

* * * * *

SEC. 2. That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the Regular Army and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, at the maximum legal strength * * * , shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or if and whenever the President decides that they can not effectually be so raised and maintained, then by selective draft; and all other forces hereby authorized, [with one exception] * * * , shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively * * * . Such draft * * * shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens, or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years * * * as the President may prescribe * * * . Quotas for the several States * * * shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit shall be given to any State * * * for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard * * * or who have * * * entered the military service of the United States from any such State * * * either as members of the Regular Army or the National Guard. All persons drafted into the service of the United States * * * shall * * * be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army * * * .

SEC. 3. * * * [N]o person liable to military service shall * * * be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; nor shall any > substitute be received, enlisted, or enrolled in the military service of the United States; and no such person shall be permitted to escape such service or to be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his term of service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from military service or liability thereto.[4051]

a. Apparently, Congress was unsure of its constitutional authority to institute a direct draft of Americans into the regular Armed Forces of the United States, because it invoked "the existing emergency, which demands the raising of troops". This excuse, of course, was balderdash. For the Constitution contains no "emergency powers", or "emergency expansions" of the powers it does grant, or "emergency dispensations" from the disabilities it imposes, whether public officials honestly believe that conditions "demand" such action or are generating such a rhetorical smokescreen in order to usurp authority.[4052]

b. Congress's claim of power "[t]o draft into the military service of the United States * * * any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserves * * * for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged" exemplified the dangerous ambiguity in the statutes supposedly concerning the Militia which Congress had enacted in 1903, 1914, and 1916. In 1903, Congress had decreed "[t]hat the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States * * * , and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than eighteen and less than forty-five years of age, and shall be divided into two classes—the organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the State * * * , and the remainder to be known as the Reserve Militia".[4053] This was the first time since 1792 that Congress had purported to give any part of the Militia a name other than "Militia", or to divide the Militia into separate components, in this case an "organized militia" (the National Guard) and a "Reserve Militia" consisting of everyone else.[4054] Then, in 1914, Congress had declared "[t]hat the land forces of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the organized land militia while in the service of the United States, and such volunteer forces as Congress may [4051] An Act To authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, Act of 18 March 1917, CHAP. 15, §§ 1, 2, and 3, 40 Stat. 76, 76-77, 77-78.

---

[4052] See ante, at 1420-1423.

[4053] An Act To promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, Act of 21 January 1903, CHAP. 196, § 1, 32 Stat. 775, 775. Continued, An Act To further amend the Act entitled "An Act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January twenty-first, nineteen hundred and three, Act of 27 May 1908, CHAP. 204, § 1, 35 Stat. 399, 399.

[4054] Contrast An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271; Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, § 1625, 18 Stat. 285, 285.

authorize".[4055] On the one hand, Congress's use of the terminology "the organized land militia while in the service of the United States" aped the constitutional language applicable to the Militia;[4056] yet, on the other hand, inclusion of "the organized land militia" within "the land forces of the United States" contradicted the meaning of that language, because being "employed in the Service of the United States" (as the Constitution describes the general situation) is decidedly different from being incorporated as an integral component within "the land forces of the United States" (as the statute described the particular situation). Finally, in 1916, Congress had provided

> [t]hat the Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the Volunteer Army, * * * the National Guard while in the service of the United States, and such other land forces as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * The militia of the United States shall consist of all able-bodied male citizens of the United States and all other able-bodied males who have or shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, who shall be more than eighteen years of age and * * * not more than forty-five years of age, and said militia shall be divided into three classes, the National Guard, the Naval Militia, and the Unorganized Militia.
>
> * * * The National Guard shall consist of the regularly enlisted militia between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [T]he organization of the National Guard, including the composition of all units thereof, shall be the same as that which is or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular Army * * * .
>
> * * * No State shall maintain troops in time of peace other than as authorized in accordance with the organization prescribed under this Act: Provided, That nothing contained in this Act shall be construed as limiting the rights of the States * * * in the use of the National Guard within their respective borders in time of peace * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * When Congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States, for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those in the Regular Army, the President may * * * draft into the military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve. All persons so drafted

---

[4055] An Act To provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, Act of 25 April 1914, CHAP. 71, § 1, 38 Stat. 347, 347.

[4056] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

> shall * * * stand discharged from the militia, and shall * * * be subject to such laws and regulations for the government of the Army of the United States as may be applicable to members of the Volunteer Army, and shall be embodied in organizations corresponding as far as practicable to those of the Regular Army * * * .[4057]

So, when drafted, the National Guard was to be completely absorbed into "the Army of the United States", thereby losing whatever character it might have had as a "militia". If, therefore, the National Guard in each State had constituted "Militia" in the true constitutional sense, the draft authorized in 1916 and put into effect in 1917 must have been unconstitutional, because (for one thing) it resulted in the extinction of the only "organized" component of the supposed "Militia" for the direct benefit of the "standing army". Whereas, if the National Guard was never in any sense a constitutional "Militia", but instead consisted of such "Troops" as the States may "keep in Time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress"[4058]—which its hermaphroditic designation as part of the oxymoronic "militia of the United States", as well as Congress's allowance for the States to "maintain troops in time of peace other than" the National Guard both plainly implied—then Congress's mandates for drafts as to the National Guard in the Acts of 1916 and 1917 were apparently constitutional (all other things being equal), as conditions Congress had affixed to its "Consent" for the States to "keep [such] Troops" in the first place.[4059]

c. Those men enrolled in the National Guard were not the only Americans subject to being drafted into the General Government's "Armies" under color of the Act of 1917, however. Also authorized was a draft of a total of more than one million enlisted men. The "organization of [these] force[s]" was to "be the same as that of the corresponding organizations of the Regular Army"; and "[a]ll persons drafted into the service of the United States" were to "be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army". So, inasmuch as perforce of the Constitution all men not somehow enlisted in "the Regular Army" or the States' "Troops" must be members of the Militia; and inasmuch as the Acts of 1903, 1914, and 1916 themselves recognized that such men were members of the "Reserve Militia" or the "Unorganized Militia"; then this part of the Act of 1917 purported to draft men directly from "the Militia of the several States" into the Army, without their passing through the stage of being incorporated into the "Troops" of any State. Eventually, the draft was extended to all men from eighteen to forty-five years of [4057] An Act For making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, Act of 3 June 1916, CHAP. 134, §§ 1, 57, 58, 60, 61, and 111, 39 Stat. 166, 166, 197, 198, 211. The Act defined the "Naval Militia" as "such part of the militia as may be prescribed by the President for each State". § 117, 39 Stat. at 212.

---

[4058] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4059] See ante, at 786-793.

age.[4060] In all, some 24,234,021 Americans registered for the draft, of which 2,810,296 (some 11.6%) were drafted. Draftees supplied some sixty percent of the total enlistment in the Armed Forces of 4,683,826. On the presumption that all of the men drafted were eligible for enrollment in proper Militia, the draft took one hundred seventy three percent of the proportion believed safe by Virginia in 1780s (11.6% versus 6.7%), and two hundred ninety percent of the proportion believed safe by James Madison (11.6% versus 4.0%).[4061] And therein lay the primary constitutional objections to the statute.

Interestingly enough, although the Act of 1917 followed the pattern established in the Articles of Confederation by requisitioning quotas from the several States, it rather sharply deviated from all *pre-*constitutional tradition, with respect to both regular troops and Militia, by absolutely disallowing the use of substitutes, through either the provision of an individual or the payment of money. This doubtlessly formed the basis for a further constitutional objection.

2. The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Act of 1917 in the Selective Draft Law Cases.[4062] Unfortunately, in the light of its glaring weaknesses, the unanimous opinion of the Justices amounted, not to a sincere elucidation of applicable constitutional principles, but to a studied obfuscation penned for the political purpose of bolstering public support for the war.

a. The Court first cavalierly observed that, "[a]s the mind cannot conceive an army without the men to compose it, * * * the objection that [the Constitution] does not give power to provide for such men would seem to be too frivolous for further notice".[4063] But inasmuch as no one had ever contended that Congress's authority "[t]o raise * * * Armies" "does not give power to provide for * * * men" in some way, but only that a direct and unlimited draft of Americans is not proper, this snide comment amounted to nothing more than camouflaging the real issue and [4060] Joint Resolution Providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States and all male persons residing in the United States who have, since the fifth day of June, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and on or before the day set for registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of twenty-one years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the Act approved May eighteenth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, entitled "An Act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States", S.J. Resolution 124, CHAP. 79, 40 Stat. 557; An Act Amending the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May eighteenth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, Act of 31 August 1918, CHAP. 166, 40 Stat. 955.

---

[4061] See ante, at 1761-1762 and 1795-1796. Not valid is the objection that the figures cited in the text are somewhat inflated to the detriment of the draft, because the draft reached men only from 18 to 45 years of age, whereas proper Militia would also have enrolled men from 16 to 18 and from 45 to 60 years of age. For the matter in issue is the drain on the Militia for the purpose of building up an effective "standing army" at the expense of Militia which otherwise would be effective in opposing that "standing army". Obviously, men from 18 to 45 years of age would be more far more likely to become effective soldiers (or Militiamen) than younger or especially older men.

[4062] 245 U.S. 366 (1918) (opinion of White, C.J., for the Court).

[4063] Id. at 377.

begging the question. It set the illogical and supercilious tone for all that followed, however.

The Court then disposed of the contention that "the right to provide [men for the Army] is not denied by calling for volunteer enlistments, but it does not and cannot include the power to exact enforced military duty by the citizen". "This", the Court objected, "but challenges the existence of all power, for a governmental power which has no sanction to it and which therefore can only be exercised provided the citizen consents to its exertion is in no substantial sense a power."[4064] On the very face of the Constitution, though, the Court's objection was exposed as nonsense. Many powers exist that do not "include the power to exact enforced * * * duty" (that is, compulsory compliance as opposed to voluntary coöperation); yet no one has ever imagined any of them to be "in no substantial sense a power". For example, the power of Congress "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States"[4065] does not embrace a power to compel anyone to loan "Money" to the United States.[4066] The power "[t]o regulate Commerce"[4067] does not license Congress to force anyone to engage in "Commerce" in order that he might be "regulate[d]"—otherwise, the power "[t]o regulate Commerce" would be a power to engage in the most comprehensive "central economic planning" of the economy imaginable, and thus actually to destroy much of "Commerce" in the guise of "regulat[ing]" it.[4068] The power "[t]o promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts"[4069] does not entitle Congress to impress scientists and artists into some sort of Stakhanovite intelligentsia: The maxim is ars artis gratia not ars respublicae gratia. Congress also enjoys the power "[t]o constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court"[4070]—and one "cannot conceive" of such "Tribunals" "without the men to compose them"—but who would be so bold as to assert that therefore Congress may draft Americans learned in the law to serve as judges? Or is Congress's power "[t]o exercise * * * Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be"[4071] "in no substantial sense a power", because it depends upon "the Consent of the Legislature of the State" before it can be exercised in relation to those particular "Places"? And what, especially, of Congress's power to give its "Consent" for a State to "keep Troops * * * in Time of

---

[4064] Id. at 377-378.

[4065] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2.

[4066] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 155-164, 632-635.

[4067] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

[4068] See National Federation of Independent Business v. Sebelius, No. 11-393, ___ U.S. ___, ___ (2012) (Roberts, C.J., announcing the judgment of the Court) (arguably dicta), Slip Opinion at 16-30, and id. at ___ (Scalia, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 4-16.

[4069] U.S. Const. art, I, § 8, cl. 8.

[4070] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9. See U.S. Const. art. III, § 1.

[4071] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17.

Peace"[4072]—is this power empty because the State must also agree to "keep [those] Troops"? "[R]ais[ing] * * * Armies" through a draft which operated solely on the "Troops" a State may "keep * * * in Time of Peace" "with[ ] the [joint] Consent of Congress [and the States]" would be an exercise of that very power. And a power that can be exercised in the very manner the Constitution explicitly provides can hardly be dismissed as "in no substantial sense a power".

b. Not satisfied with proffering the childish sophistry that powers of these kinds are effectively not powers at all, the Court attacked the assumption > that the authority to raise armies was intended to be limited to the right to call an army into existence counting alone upon the willingness of the citizen to do his duty in time of public need, that is, in time of war. But the premise of this proposition is so devoid of foundation that it leaves not a shadow of ground upon which to base the conclusion. Let us see if this is not at once demonstrable. It may not be doubted that the very conception of a just government and its duty to the citizen includes the reciprocal obligation of the citizen to render military service in case of need and the right to compel it.[4073]

The first fallacy in this passage is that a draft for the purpose of "rais[ing] * * * Armies" which relied upon the States' power to "keep Troops" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" would "count[ ] alone upon the willingness of the citizen". Because the States could draft the "Troops" and assign them to duty with the General Government's "Armies", "the willingness of the citizen[s]" to be selected for service would be irrelevant. The second fallacy is that, although the conclusion is true that each and every citizen labors under an "obligation * * * to render military service" which can be compelled, "the premise" that Congress cannot compel such service by a direct draft for the Regular Army is "devoid of foundation". For the question remains, how is the "obligation of the citizen to render military serve" rightfully to be compelled by "a just government" within the constraints of the Constitution? Service in the Militia, after all, has always been compulsory for all eligible able-bodied adults at all times. And Congress can compel the fulfillment of this obligation as to such "Part" of the Militia as it sees fit, by exercising its powers "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" and "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" for one or more of the three constitutionally permitted purposes (albeit only for those purposes).[4074] Moreover, "with[ ] the Consent of Congress", the States may draft a safe proportion of individuals out of their Militia and into their "Troops", and then detach those

---

[4072] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4073] 245 U.S. at 378.

[4074] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 15.

"Troops" to the General Government for service in or with its "Armies". Thus, no inexorable legal logic demands that Congress's power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" be construed so as to license it to draft as many individuals as it desires directly out of the general population.

c. The Court than attempted to shore up its baseless conclusion that Congress must have the power to compel "the citizen to render military service" through a direct draft, by referring to "the almost universal legislation to that effect now in force" in England and numerous other foreign countries.[4075] Apparently, the Court's idea of "just government[s]" included Tsarist Russia, as well as monarchist Germany and Austria-Hungary, against which two the United States fought World War I ostensibly because "[t]he world must be made safe for democracy" (those two empires being the supposed enemies of "democracy" at that time).[4076] Then and now, the short answer to the Court's reliance on those foreign laws was and remains that "[t]he government of the United States was born of the Constitution";[4077] and "[i]ts power and authority have no other source".[4078] "In this respect we differ radically from nations where all * * * power, without restriction or limitation, is vested in a * * * body subject to * * * the discretion of its members."[4079] For this reason, constitutional analysis has neither need nor right to refer to "all the powers which usually belong to the sovereignty of a nation";[4080] to any "implied attribute of sovereignty possessed by all nations";[4081] to "the law of nations" in general,[4082] the "laws or usages of other nations" in particular,[4083] or "the law of any other country whatever";[4084] or to "decisions * * * by the Courts of any other country".[4085] For "no laws or usages of other nations * * * can enlarge the powers of the government or take from the citizens the rights they have reserved".[4086]

d. Turning at last to the only relevant body of law, the Articles of Confederation and the Constitution, the Court then observed that [4075] 245 U.S. at 378-379 & note 1 on each page.

---

[4076] Woodrow Wilson, War Message of 2 April 1917, Senate Document No. 5 (Serial No. 7264), 65th Congress, 1st Session.

[4077] Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 288 (1901) (White, J., concurring).

[4078] Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 5-6 (1957) (opinion of Black, J., announcing the judgment of the Court) (emphasis supplied).

[4079] United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 63 (1936).

[4080] Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393, 401 (1857) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

[4081] Afroyim v. Rusk, 387 U.S. 253, 257 (1967).

[4082] Fleming v. Page, 50 U.S. (9 Howard) 603, 617 (1850).

[4083] Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393, 451 (1857) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

[4084] Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 466 (1793) (opinion of Cushing, J.).

[4085] Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 22 U.S. (9 Wheaton) 738, 851 (1824).

[4086] Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 Howard) 393, 451 (1857) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

> [i]n the Colonies before the separation from England * * * the right to enforce military service was unquestioned. * * * And this exact situation existed also after the separation. Under the Articles of Confederation it is true Congress had no such power, as its authority was absolutely limited to making calls upon the States for the military forces needed to create and maintain the army, each State being bound for its quota as called. * * * While it is true that the States were sometimes slow in exerting the power in order to fill their quotas * * * that fact serves to demonstrate * * * the existence of the authority. * * *
>
> * * * In supplying the power [to Congress to "raise * * * Armies"] it was manifestly intended to give it all and leave none to the States, since besides the delegation to Congress of the authority to raise armies the Constitution prohibited the States, without the consent of Congress, from keeping troops in time of peace or engaging in war.[4087]

The Court's conclusion that "it was manifestly intended to give [Congress] all [power over the Nation's Armed Forces] and leave none to the States" both begged the question and misstated what should have been obvious on the face of the Constitution. For, plainly, not "all" power was delegated to Congress and withheld from the States.

First, Congress received the power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" simpliciter, not a power "[]to raise * * * Armies by all possible means to the exclusion of any power in the States". Relying upon the common usage in the pre-constitutional era—which differentiated between "raise", on the one hand, and "draught" ("draft"), "impress", and "levy", on the other[4088]—it is perfectly plausible to read the verb "raise" as referring to voluntary enlistments by Congress itself, as well as to requisitions from the States. Yet, if so, the Constitution did delegate to Congress more power than did the Articles of Confederation, because the Articles did not allow the Continental Congress itself to enlist "land forces" directly from the general population, but empowered it only "to make requisitions from each state for its quota".[4089]

Second, the Constitution did not "leave no[power over the Armed Forces] to the States". To the contrary: The States may "keep Troops, and Ships of War in time of [War]" even "without the Consent of Congress", and may "keep Troops, and Ships of War in time of Peace" with such "Consent".[4090] That "Consent", moreover, may extend farther than did the parallel provision of the Articles, which allowed the Continental Congress to permit a State to "ke[ep] up" only such "body

---

[4087] 245 U.S. at 379-381.

[4088] See ante, e.g., at 1739, 1742-1743, 1744, 1748, 1751, 1756, 1768, and 1769.

[4089] Arts. of Confed'n art. IX, ¶ 5. Distinguishably, the same provision of the Articles did authorize the Continental Congress "to build and equip a navy" itself.

[4090] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

of forces" as "shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary for the defence of such state".[4091] In comparison to the Articles, in this particular the Constitution expanded the powers of both Congress and the States. Therefore, in this way the Constitution did supply to some degree what the Court called "the want of power in [the Continental] Congress to raise an army and the dependence upon the States for their quotas",[4092] but without necessarily delegating to Congress any further—and utterly novel—power to draft individuals directly from the general population into the regular Armed Forces of the Union.

e. The Court then adverted to the "argu[ment] that as the state authority over the militia * * * embrace[s] every citizen, the right of Congress to raise an army should not be considered as granting authority to compel the citizen's service in the army", yet "does not exclude the right of Congress to organize an army by voluntary enlistments". "[I]f th[is] proposition be true", the Court countered, "the right of the citizen to give consent would be controlled by the same prohibition which would deprive Congress of the right to compel unless it can be said that although Congress had not the right to call because of state authority, the citizen had a right to obey the call and set aside state authority if he pleased to do so."[4093] That is, supposedly no citizen eligible for the Militia could voluntarily enlist in the "Armies" of the General Government without thereby violating his duty to serve in the Militia.

On its face, the Court's position was nonsensical, both legally and historically. An individual eligible for service in "[a] well regulated Militia" may be entitled to an exemption on various grounds—most of which relate to some choice which the individual himself makes, such as serving in public office, following a particular trade or profession, or adhering to a religion that preaches pacifism.[4094] These choices do not "set aside state authority if [the individual] please[s] to do so"; instead, they implement the "state authority" which provides for exemptions. After ratification of the Constitution, one of the grounds for exemption became an individual's voluntary service in public office or employment for the United States—if Congress in the exercise of its power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" so determined.[4095] So, with Congress's approbation, an individual who voluntarily enlists in the General Government's "Armies" may be entitled to an exemption from service in the Militia, no less than if (say) he successfully seeks election to Congress. "With Congress's approbation" is the key qualification, though. For example, in the first Militia Act under the Constitution, Congress provided that

---

[4091] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[4092] 245 U.S. at 381.

[4093] Id.

[4094] See ante, Chapters 11, 22, and 36.

[4095] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 and art. VI, cl. 2.

> [t]he Vice President of the United States; the officers judicial and executive of the government of the United States; the members of both Houses of Congress, and their respective officers; all custom-house officers with their clerks; all post-officers, and stage drivers, who are employed in the care and conveyance of the mail of the post-office of the United States; all ferrymen employed at any ferry on the post road; all inspectors of exports; all pilots; all mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; and all persons who now are or may hereafter be exempted by the laws of the respective states, shall be, and are hereby exempted from militia duty[.][4096]

Being the "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia", the President obviously could not have been exempted in any case.[4097] But even if "the officers * * * executive of the government of the United States" included the other officers of the Army and Navy, this provision did not exempt the enlisted men, all of whom served voluntarily. Yet Congress must have presumed that the States would have recognized that those men were entitled to exemptions from all Militia duty as a consequence of their voluntary enlistments in the Army—or no Army the rank and file of which were independent of the Militia could have been "raise[d]" at all. Thus, Congress's very first action in this area refuted the Court's contention.

f. Worse yet, even as it condemned "[t]he fallacy of * * * confounding the constitutional provisions concerning the militia with that conferring upon Congress the power to raise armies", which "treats them as one, while they are different", the Court did no less:

> The right on the one hand of Congress under the Confederation to call on the States for forces and the duty on the other of the States to furnish when called, embraced the complete power of government over the subject. When the two were combined and were delegated to Congress, all government power on the subject was conferred, a result manifested not only by the grant made, but by the limitation expressly put upon the States on the subject. The army sphere therefore embraces such complete authority.[4098]

Self-evidently, however, the power of the Continental Congress "to call on the States for forces and the duty * * * of the States to furnish when called, [did not] embrace[ ] the complete power of government over the subject"—for there remained the plenary power of each State over her own Militia, which the Articles

---

[4096] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 2, 1 Stat. 271, 272.

[4097] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4098] 245 U.S. at 382.

of Confederation themselves recognized as separate and independent from any power over "vessels of war", "a navy", "any body of forces", or "land forces".[4099] The powers of Congress and the States over the regular Armed Forces were rearranged in the Constitution;[4100] but, as well, "the Militia of the several States" were permanently incorporated as components of the Constitution's federal system, with some powers over the Militia delegated to Congress and the President, and the remainder reserved to the States.[4101] Therefore the Constitution itself howled down in ridicule the Court's notion that "the army sphere * * * embraces * * * complete authority".

Yet, almost incredibly, on the basis of that notion the Court stumbled into an even more serious error:

> [T]he duty of exerting the power [in "the army sphere"] thus conferred in all its plenitude was not made at once obligatory but was wisely left to the discretion of Congress as to the arising of the exigencies which would call it in part or in whole into play. There was left therefore under the sway of the States undelegated the control of the militia to the extent that such control was not taken away by the exercise by Congress of its power to raise armies. This did not diminish the military power or curb the full potentiality of the right to exert it but left an area of authority requiring to be provided for (the militia area) unless and until by the exertion of the military power of Congress that area had been circumscribed or totally disappeared. This, therefore, is what was dealt with by the militia provision. It diminished the occasion for the exertion by Congress of its military power beyond the strict necessities for its exercise by giving the power to Congress to direct the organization and training of the militia (evidently to prepare such militia in the event of the exercise of the army power) * * * . It further conduced to the same result by delegating to Congress the right to call on occasions which were specified for the militia force, thus again obviating the necessity for exercising the army power to the extent of being ready for every conceivable contingency. * * * But because * * * the power was given to call for specified purposes without exerting the army power, it cannot follow that the latter power when exerted was not complete to the extent of its exertion and dominant.[4102]

Thus, even though the Court admitted that the Militia Powers and the Army Power are "different" and that to "confound[ ] th[os]e constitutional provisions" amounts to a "fallacy", the Court treated the two sets of powers as effectively one, by [4099] Compare and contrast Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4 with art. IX, ¶ 5.

---

[4100] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 12 and § 10, cl. 3.

[4101] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16; art. II, § 2, cl. 1; and amends. II and X.

[4102] 245 U.S. at 382-383 (emphasis supplied).

contending that "the militia area" is supplementary to, subordinate to, and subject to being overridden by and submerged within the "army sphere" at any time Congress flaunts its "discretion" to do so. That is (according to the Court), exercises of Congress's power over the "army sphere" can cancel or at least render nugatory "the militia area", to the point at which "the militia area * * * ha[s] * * * totally disappeared"—in violation of the fundamental rule of constitutional construction that all "fundamental [constitutional] principles are of equal dignity, and n[o one] m[ay] be so enforced as to nullify or substantially impair [any] other".[4103] Yet, just a few lines further on in its opinion, the Court condemned itself with the observation that, "[b]ecause * * * the power granted to Congress to raise armies in its potentiality was susceptible of narrowing the area over which the militia clause operated, affords no ground for confounding the two areas which were distinct and separate to the end of confusing both the powers and thus weakening or destroying both"![4104] So on this point the Court's opinion was not only glaringly anti-constitutional, but also by its own implicit admission shamelessly illogical.

g. Not satisfied with expatiating on that egregiously erroneous constitutional theory, the Court proceeded to lay out a thoroughly duplicitous misrepresentation of American history.

First, the Court claimed, "[e]xcept for one act formulating a plan by which the entire body of citizens (the militia) subject to military duty was to be organized in every State * * * which was never carried into effect, Congress confined itself to providing for the organization of a specified number [of Militiamen] distributed among the States according to their quota to be trained as directed by Congress and to be called by the President as need might require".[4105] In fact, the so-called "one act formulating a plan"—the Militia Act of 1792[4106]—was "carried into effect". For example, in An ACT to organize the Militia of this State, passed in 1794, Rhode Island's General Assembly first recited the entire text of the Militia Act of 1792, and then both carried through the latter Act's mandates and dealt with that State's own particular requirements in detail.{EN-2172} Similarly, in Virginia in 1792.{EN-2173}

Moreover, not one of the seven Acts of Congress the Court cited provided for any specific "organization" or "train[ing]" of Militiamen. Six of them authorized the President "to require of the executives of the several states, to take effectual measures, as soon as may be, to organize, arm and equip, according to law, and hold in readiness to march at a moment's warning" certain numbers of "effective

---

[4103] Dick v. United States, 208 U.S. 340, 353 (1908).

[4104] 245 U.S. at 384.

[4105] Id. at 384 & note 1 (citing various statutes) (emphasis supplied).

[4106] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, 1 Stat. 271.

militia".[4107] But Congress did not specify what those "effectual measures" might have been—because, of course, it did not have to, the matter having already been spelled out "according to law" in the Militia Act of 1792 (and, presumably, the further statutes the States enacted for implementation and supplementation of the latter Act). The seventh Act of Congress simply authorized the President, "whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of an invasion * * * to call forth such number of the militia of the state, or states, most convenient to the place of danger"; or, "in case of an insurrection in any state, against the government thereof, * * * to call forth such number of the militia of any state or states * * * sufficient to suppress such insurrection"; or, "whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed * * * by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings * * * , to call forth the militia of such * * * state or states, as may be necessary to suppress such combinations".[4108] It said nothing whatsoever about organizing or training the Militiamen to be detached.

As the title of the statute last cited and the text of all of them made clear, every one of these Acts constituted an exercise, not of Congress's power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia", but instead of its power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia", which (as the Constitution explicitly provides) allows Congress to "call[ ] forth", not necessarily all, but "such Part of the[Militia]" alone as Congress determines needs to "be employed in the Service of the United States".[4109] The Acts all presupposed that the Militia had theretofore been organized, armed, equipped, trained, and otherwise disciplined—or else six of them would not have included in their titles references to "a detachment from the Militia". A part cannot be "detach[ed] from" the whole unless the whole exists. Moreover, five of the statutes explicitly provided "[t]hat the detachments" or "detachment" "of militia * * * shall be officered out of the present militia

---

[4107] An Act directing a Detachment from the Militia of the United States", Act of 9 May 1794, CHAP. XXV, § 1, 1 Stat. 367, 367. Identical or similar language in An Act authorizing a detachment from the Militia of the United States", Act of 24 June 1797, CHAP. IV, § 1, 1 Stat. 522, 522; An Act directing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, and for erecting certain Arsenals, Act of 3 March 1803, CHAP. XXXII, § 1, 2 Stat. 241, 241; An Act authorizing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 18 April 1806, CHAP. XXXII, § 1, 2 Stat. 383, 383; An Act authorizing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 30 March 1808, CHAP. XXXIX, § 1, 2 Stat. 478, 478-479; An Act to authorize a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 10 April 1812, CHAP. LV, § 1, 2 Stat. 705, 705-706.

[4108] An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; and to repeal the Act now in force for those purposes, Act of 28 February 1795, CHAP. XXXVI, §§ 1 and 2, 1 Stat. 424, 424. See also An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions, Act of 2 May 1792, CHAP. XXVIII, §§ 1 and 2, 1 Stat. 264, 264.

[4109] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16. One statute provided that "the militia employed in the service of the United States, shall be subject to the same rules and articles of war, as the troops of the United States". Act of 28 February 1795, § 4, 1 Stat. at 424. This, however, was not a matter of "organizing" the Militia, but rather an exercise of Congress's separate power "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States". U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

officers".[4110] How there could have been "present militia officers" in 1794 through 1812 if the Militia Act of 1792 had not been "carried into effect" during at least those years passes understanding.

Second, the Court then rehearsed how,

> [w]hen the War of 1812 came * * * [the Militia and the regular Army, consisting of volunteers,] composed the arm[ed forces] to be relied upon by Congress to carry on the war. Either because [these forces] proved to be weak in numbers or because of insubordination developed among the forces called and manifested by their refusal to cross the border [with Canada], the Government determined that the exercise of the power to organize an army by compulsory draft was necessary * * * . A bill was introduced [in Congress] giving effect to the plan. Opposition developed * * * . Peace came before the bill was enacted.
>
> * * * In th[e Mexican War], however, no draft was suggested * * * .
>
> So the course of legislation from that date to 1861 affords no ground for any other than the same conception of legislative power which we have already stated.[4111]

Therefore, the Court expected its readers to believe, although from 1788 to 1861 Congress actually enacted no legislation whatsoever which purported to impose a direct draft on Americans, nonetheless Congress surely possessed, and everyone somehow understood it to possess, such a power to draft all the while! One would have thought that the total absence of legislation predicated upon some supposed power of Congress could not possibly constitute evidence on behalf of that power,[4112] especially inasmuch as no legislature in America may arrogate to itself unconstitutional powers even through the actual enactment of purported statutes, no matter how many times repeated.[4113]

In the Wonderland of "judicial review", though, black is sometimes said (and perhaps even believed) to be white, and white black—in this case, in order to

---

[4110] An Act directing a Detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 9 May 1794, CHAP. XXV, § 2, 1 Stat. 367, 367; An Act directing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, and for erecting certain Arsenals, Act of 3 March 1803, CHAP. XXXII, § 2, 2 Stat. 241, 241; An Act authorizing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 18 April 1806, CHAP. XXXII, § 3, 2 Stat. 383, 384; An Act authorizing a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 30 March 1808, CHAP. XXXIX, § 3, 2 Stat. 478, 479; An Act to authorize a detachment from the Militia of the United States, Act of 10 April 1812, CHAP. LV, § 2, 2 Stat. 705, 706.

[4111] 245 U.S. at 384-385 (footnote omitted).

[4112] See, e.g., Federal Power Commission v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, 337 U.S. 498, 513 & note 20 (1949); Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 905, 907-910 (1997).

[4113] See, e.g., Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 491 (1966); Smyth v. Ames, 169 U.S. 466, 527 (1898); Fairbank v. United States, 181 U.S. 283, 311 (1901); Williams v. Illinois, 399 U.S. 235, 239 (1970).

convince careless readers of the Court's opinion that: (i) "[T]he Militia of the several States" were always establishments with at best ad hoc existences. (ii) The "Armies" of the United States were always considered superior to the Militia, not just militarily but also constitutionally. And (iii) impressments to fill the ranks of those "Armies", necessarily from the ranks of the Militia, were always recognized as constitutionally legitimate alternatives to "call[ing] forth" the Militia or enlisting volunteers, and were never actually employed only because circumstances never actually demanded it. Yet, for all of those propositions, no historical or legal evidence exists.

h. The Court then adverted to the draft which the Union Congress imposed during the Civil War[4114]—but in so sketchy a fashion that a more detailed recitation of the relevant history is warranted here.

From the perspective of the Union, the Southern rebellion was never a matter of "seceding States"; rather, from its inception and in its entirety "the Confederate States of America" was a completely illegal insurrectionary enterprise.[4115] The Constitution, of course, explicitly took into account the possibility of just such a situation, by empowering Congress "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union" and "suppress Insurrections".[4116] In reliance on that authority, in 1792 and 1795 Congress enacted legislation aimed at such an eventuality:

> [W]henever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the [United States] marshals * * * , it shall be lawful for the President * * * to call forth the militia of such state, or of any other state or states, as may be necessary to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed; and the use of the militia so to be called forth may be continued, if necessary, until the expiration of thirty days after the commencement of the next session of Congress.[4117]

Shortly after the Southern "secession" began, Union President Abraham Lincoln issued a Proclamation, declaring that,

---

[4114] 245 U.S. at 385-387.

[4115] See Texas v. White, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 700, 718-726 (1866); Thorington v. Smith, 75 U.S. (8 Wallace) 1, 7-11 (1869); Hanauer v. Doane, 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 342, 347 (1871); Sprott v. United States, 87 U.S. (20 Wallace) 459, 464-465 (1875).

[4116] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[4117] An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; and to repeal the Act now in force for those purposes, Act of 28 February 1795, CHAP. XXXVI, § 2, 1 Stat. 424, 424, superseding An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions, Act of 2 May 1792, CHAP. XXVIII, § 2, 1 Stat. 264, 264.

> WHEREAS the laws of the United States have been for some time past, and now are opposed, and the execution thereof obstructed, in [certain Southern] States * * * by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by law:
>
> Now, therefore, I * * * hereby do call forth[ ] the militia of the several States of the Union, to the aggregate number of seventy-five thousand, in order to suppress said combinations and to cause the laws to be duly executed.[4118]

This, of course, was a "draft", in the fullest sense of that term, because all of "the militia of the several States" were organizations founded upon compulsory service, and subject to being "call[ed] forth" at any time for the purposes stated in the Proclamation. This was true even in a State such as Massachusetts, which had earlier begun the process of political decomposition of her Militia by making day-to-day participation voluntary. In 1840, Massachusetts had provided that "[e]very able-bodied white male citizen, resident within this Commonwealth, who is or shall be of the age of eighteen years, and under the age of forty-five years, excepting [certain persons] * * * , shall be enrolled in the militia"—but that, "[t]he militia, thus enrolled, shall be subject to no active duty whatever, except in case of war, invasion, or to prevent invasion", and that "[t]he active militia * * * shall consist and be composed of volunteers".{EN-2174} So, even as to this largely "voluntary militia", compulsory service was mandated "in case of war". And rather than being ineffective overall, Lincoln's call brought somewhat more than 75,000 Militiamen into the field.[4119] Moreover, there could have been no question that this draft was perfectly constitutional in every particular.

Shortly thereafter, Congress enacted a statute which provided

> [t]hat whenever, by reasons of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impractical, in the judgment of the President * * * , to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States within any State or Territory * * * , it shall be lawful for the President * * * to call forth the militia of any or all of the States of the Union * * * to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress such rebellion in whatever State or Territory thereof the laws of the United States may be forcibly opposed, or the execution thereof forcibly obstructed.
>
> * * * * *

[4118] Proclamation of 15 April 1861, 12 Stat. 1258, 1258. See The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, ante note 30, Volume IV, at 331-332.

[4119] See Report of the Secretary of War (1 July 1861), Senate Executive Document No. 1, 37th Congress, 1st Session, at 21. See also Robert S. Chamberlain, "The Northern States Militia", 4 Civil War History 107 (1958).

> * * * [T]he militia so called into the service of the United States shall be subject to the same rules and articles of war as the troops of the United States, and be continued in the service of the United States until discharged by proclamation of the President: Provided, That such continuance in service shall not extend beyond sixty days after the commencement of the next regular session of Congress, unless Congress shall expressly provide by law therefor * * * .
>
> * * * [E]very officer, non-commissioned officer, or private of the militia, who shall fail to obey the orders of the President * * * shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one year's pay, and not less than one month's pay, to be determined and adjudged by a court-martial; and such officer shall be liable to be cashiered * * * ; and such non-commissioned officer and private shall be liable to imprisonment * * * on failure of payment of the fines adjudged against him, for one calendar month for every twenty-five dollars of such fine.[4120]

This, too, was a true "draft", enforced by serious punishments for any Militiaman who disobeyed the President in his capacity as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States".[4121] Here as well, there could have been no question that this draft was perfectly constitutional.

About a year later, Congress mandated

> [t]hat whenever the President * * * shall call forth the militia of the States, to be employed in the service of the United States, he may specify in his call the period for which such service will be required, not exceeding nine months; and the militia so called shall be mustered in and continue to serve for and during the term so specified, unless sooner discharged by command of the President. If by reason of defects in existing laws, or in the execution of them, in the several States, or any of them, it shall be found necessary to provide for enrolling the militia and otherwise putting this act into execution, the President is authorized in such cases to make all necessary rules and regulations; and the enrollment of the militia shall in all cases include all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, and shall be apportioned among the States, according to representative population.[4122]

[4120] An Act to provide for the Suppression of Rebellion against and Resistance to the Laws of the United States, and to amend the Act entitled "An Act to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union," &c., passed February twenty-eight, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, Act of 29 July 1861, CHAP. XXV, §§ 1, 3, and 4, 12 Stat. 281, 281-282.

[4121] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4122] An Act to amend the act calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections, and repel Invasions, approved February twenty-eight, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, and the Acts amendatory thereof, and for other Purposes, Act of 17 July 1862, CHAP. CCI, § 1, 12 Stat. 597, 597 (emphasis supplied).

The President could certainly have fulfilled Congress's delegation of authority "to make all necessary rules and regulations" (presumably in conformity with Congress's own Militia Act of 1792) to correct "defects in existing [Militia] laws, or in the execution of them, in the several States". For those "laws" were easily accessible. And the President had the means to ferret out any serious "defects * * * in the execution of them", in that Congress had already provided for "an adjutant general appointed in each state" whose duty it was: (i) "to receive from the several officers of the militia * * * throughout the state, returns of the militia * * * , reporting the actual situation of their arms, accoutrements, and ammunition, their delinquencies, and every other thing which relates to the general advancement of good order and discipline"; and (ii) to "make a return of all the militia of the state to the commander-in-chief of the said state, and a duplicate of the same to the President of the United States".[4123] Thus, this statute provided for a draft more severe than what had preceded it, not only because it extended the period of compulsory service, but especially because the President was to enforce it directly against the States, as well as against individual Militiamen, through his exercise of the statutory mandate "to make all necessary rules and regulations". Although the President's authority in that particular could have extended only to the baneful effects of various States' laws on the employment of the Militia "in the actual Service of the United States", as the "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia" he could have subjected to courts-martial any of the Governors or other officers who commanded the States' Militia for their failures, neglects, or refusals to correct such "defects" or to obey such "rules and regulations". Yet this draft, too, was constitutional.

Congress also authorized the President "to accept the services of volunteers" for the regular Army.[4124] So, even without a draft for the Union's "Armies", a huge force was quickly—and constitutionally—assembled. In the vernacular, Congress had thus provided, in principle at least, a satisfactory means "to raise armies", by both impressment through the Militia and voluntary enlistments. Inasmuch as there were some 3,167,936 men enrolled in "the Militia of the several States" in 1861,[4125] reliance on even the Militia alone could likely have proven satisfactory in practice had not Congress, the States, and the American people themselves suffered the Militia to fall into such disrepair and even disrepute during the several decades

---

[4123] An Act effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, §§ 6 and 10, 1 Stat. 271, 273, 274.

[4124] See, e.g., An Act to authorize the Employment of Volunteers to aid in enforcing the Laws and protecting Public Property, Act of 22 July 1861, CHAP. IX, 12 Stat. 268; An Act to amend the act calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections, and repel Invasions, approved February twenty-eight, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, and the Acts amendatory thereof, and for other Purposes, Act of 17 July 1862, CHAP. CCI, §§ 3 and 4, 12 Stat. 597, 598. "Volunteers" were temporary additions to the "Armies", who expected to be demobilized immediately the conditions that warranted their enlistments ceased.

[4125] See "Returns of Militia", House Executive Document No. 53 (Serial No. 1100), 36th Congress, 2d Session, at 5.

preceding the Civil War that they could not be restored to war-time competence as quickly as the Union's political and military leadership professed to believe necessary.[4126]

Whatever the motivation of its Members may have been, just a year later Congress essentially set all of its previous work aside, by enacting a general draft. The statute directed

> [t]hat all able-bodied male citizens of the United States, and persons of foreign birth who shall have declared their intention to become citizens * * * , between the ages of twenty and forty-five years, except as * * * excepted, are hereby declared to constitute the national forces, and shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States when called out by the President of the United States.
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * [T]he President * * * is hereby authorized and empowered, during the present rebellion, to call forth the national forces, by draft[.][4127]

Notwithstanding that this passage echoed the constitutional language pertaining to the Militia—"in the service of the United States when called out" "during the present rebellion", in similitude to "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States" to "suppress Insurrections"—its substance differed radically from its appearance. The Constitution, after all, nowhere employs, let alone defines, the ambiguous term "the national forces". So, here, a Congress apparently well aware of the constitutional infirmities of its position chose to inject into the law a deceptive neologism doubtlessly intended to gull the unwary as to how the draft struck at the heart of the Militia—just as later on other Congresses imported the terms "National Guard", "Reserve Militia", and "Unorganized Militia" into other statutes in order to camouflage their reduction to impotence, if not nonexistence, of the true constitutional Militia.[4128] For the draft was intended, not "to call forth the national forces" in the form of "the Militia of the several States" in order for them to "suppress Insurrections" "in the service of the United States", but instead to flesh out the General Government's "Armies", because "all persons drafted * * * shall be assigned by the President to military duty in such corps, regiments, or other branches of the service as the exigencies of the service may require", rather than specifically to duty in units of the Militia.[4129]

[4126] See generally J. Mahon, The History of the Militia and the National Guard, ante note 1695, Chapters 4 through 6.

[4127] An Act for enrolling and calling out the national Forces, and for other Purposes, Act of 3 March 1863, CHAP. LXXV, §§ 1 and 33, 12 Stat. 731, 731, 736.

[4128] See ante, at 786-793 and 1809-1811.

[4129] Contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 with Act of 3 March 1863, § 34, 12 Stat. at 736.

In keeping with the principles of military service followed in pre-constitutional times in both the Colonies' and then the independent States' Militia and regular "Troops", the statute did grant certain exemptions, however—and one exclusion which had no pre-constitutional antecedent: "[N]o person who has been convicted of any felony shall be enrolled or permitted to serve in said forces."[4130] More importantly, it allowed: (i) "[t]hat any person drafted * * * may * * * furnish an acceptable substitute to take his place in the draft; or he may pay * * * [a] sum, not exceeding three hundred dollars, * * * for the procuration of such substitute * * * ; and thereupon such person so furnishing the substitute, or paying the money, shall be discharged from further liability under the draft"; and (ii) "[t]hat any person enrolled and drafted * * * who shall furnish an acceptable substitute, shall thereupon receive * * * a certificate of discharge from such draft, which shall exempt him from military duty during the time for which he was drafted".[4131] So, distinguishably from the draft of 1917, actual service in the "Armies"pursuant to the draft of 1863 was, to a large extent, voluntary.

Revealingly, even as it created this scheme for building up a huge "standing army" at the expense of the Militia, the Union Congress professed what was undeniable: that "the duty of the government [is] to suppress insurrection and rebellion, to guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and to preserve the public tranquillity"; that "for these high purposes, a military force is indispensable, to raise and support which all persons ought willingly to contribute"; and that "no service can be more praiseworthy and honorable than that which is rendered for the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union, and the consequent preservation of free government".[4132] Apparently its Members had forgotten, though, that the only "military force[s]" the Constitution considers "indispensable" "for the preservation of free government" are those "well regulated Militia" which the Second Amendment declares to be "necessary to the security of a free State"—and that, without "the security of a free State" as its goal, "suppression of insurrection and rebellion" which involved nothing more than Southern "secession" was largely pointless, if not positively dangerous.

The only practical rationale ever advanced for the Act of 1863 was that drafts for the Union's "Armies" proved more efficient in assembling large, well-trained forces than drafts within and for the Militia would have proven. One must wonder, though, to what extent criticism of the Militia as effective forces could have been warranted. For it is hard to imagine that anyone might honestly have [4130] Act of 3 March 1863, § 2, 12 Stat. at 731.

---

[4131] Act of 3 March 1863, §§ 13 and 17, 12 Stat. at 733, 734. Such a "certificate of discharge from such draft", however, would not have exempted an individual from his preëxisting and otherwise permanent duty to serve in his own State's Militia for that State's own purposes.

[4132] Act of 3 March 1863, preamble, 12 Stat. at 731.

believed the Constitution needed to be set aside on the grounds that training individuals drafted promiscuously from the population into "Armies" was so much more efficient than training Militiamen who, already drafted within the Militia, needed only to be "call[ed] forth" to "the Service of the United States", in which they could be trained to the same standards as was the regular Army. It is equally difficult to comprehend how anyone might have believed that a serious problem lay in foot-dragging by the States—the old bugaboo under the Articles of Confederation—when Congress enjoyed the authority, and had recently demonstrated its willingness, to empower the President "to make all necessary rules and regulations" to correct "defects in existing [Militia] laws, or in the execution of them, in the several States". Besides, in order to administer the draft, the statute created a huge bureaucratic machine which could not possibly have been less cumbersome than "all necessary rules and regulations" which the President might have devised, or Congress might have enacted, to perfect the Militia.[4133]

In any event, the Supreme Court in 1917 considered the draft of the Civil War as some sort of conclusive evidence of Congress's power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" by means of direct impressment:

> It is undoubted that the men * * * raised by draft were treated as subject to direct national authority * * * . It would be childish to deny the value of the added strength which was thus afforded. * * * [I]t was the efficient aid resulting from the forces created by the draft at a very critical moment of the civil strife which obviated a disaster which seemed impending and carried that struggle to a complete and successful conclusion.[4134]

In form and intent, this was the very same argument—in each case, resting ultimately upon the logical fallacy post hoc ergo propter hoc[4135]—which the Supreme Court had earlier employed in order to rationalize the constitutionality of the legal-tender Treasury Notes (the so-called "Greenbacks") the Union Congress had emitted during the Civil War.[4136] By 1917, however, the Court had conveniently lost sight of the admission of its own former Chief Justice, Salmon P. Chase, who as Union Secretary of the Treasury under Lincoln had promoted the Greenbacks, only [4133] See Act of 3 March 1863, §§ 4 through 16, 12 Stat. at 732-734.

---

[4134] 245 U.S. at 387.

[4135] "After this therefore on account of this"—or, temporal sequence establishes causation.

[4136] An Act to authorize the Issue of United States Notes, and for the Redemption of Funding thereof, and for Funding the Floating Debt of the United States, Act of 25 February 1862, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 12 Stat. 345, 345. In Knox v. Lee, the Court contended that, "[i]f it be held * * * that Congress has no constitutional power, * * * in any emergency, to make treasury notes a legal tender for the payment of all debts (a power confessedly possessed by every independent sovereignty other than the United States), the government is without those means of self-preservation which, all must admit, may, in certain contingencies, become indispensable". 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 457, 529 (1871). Were "draft" substituted for "treasury notes", this argument would be just as invalid. See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 602-605.

to apologize for his participation in their emission when the question of their unconstitutionality came before him on the Court:

> It is not surprising that amid the tumult of the late civil war, and under the influence of apprehensions for the safety of the Republic almost universal, different views, never before entertained by American statesmen or jurists, were adopted by many. The time was not favorable to considerate reflection upon the constitutional limits of legislative or executive authority. * * * Many who doubted yielded their doubts; many who did not doubt were silent.[4137]

Admittedly, "[i]t would be childish to deny" that the draft "added strength" to the Union's "Armies". Nonetheless, it would be even more "childish", because patently illogical, to conclude that a constitutional plan for "rais[ing] * * * Armies"—which was never fully tried, let alone perfected—could not possibly have sufficed to "carr[y] th[e] struggle to a complete and successful conclusion". After all, the draft created no new "forces" ex nihilo. Rather, the men who were drafted necessarily came originally from the ranks of those already eligible for Militia service. And those men did not need to be drafted by some new law to be held to perform that service.

As ludicrous as it is shocking, in a display of veritable intellectual desperation, the Court then relied upon the purported "laws" of the Southern Confederacy to bolster its opinion:

> [A]s further evidence that the conclusion we reach is but the inevitable consequence of the provisions of the Constitution as effect follows cause, we * * * recur to events in another environment. The seceding States wrote into the constitution which was adopted to regulate the government which they sought to establish, in identical words the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which we here have under consideration. And when the right to enforce under that instrument a selective draft law which was enacted, not differing in principle from the one here in question, was challenged, its validity was upheld, evidently after great consideration, by the [secessionist] courts of Virginia, of Georgia, of Texas, of Alabama, of Mississippi and of North Carolina[.][4138]

Apparently, by 1917 the Court had conveniently forgotten its earlier emphatic rulings that there had never been any "seceding States" as such, only illegal insurrections within various Southern States during the course of which those [4137] Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U.S. (8 Wallace) 603, 625 (1870) (emphasis supplied). See also Chase's more-extensive treatment of the matter in Knox, 79 U.S. at 575-576 (dissenting opinion).

---

[4138] 245 U.S. at 388 (citing various judicial decisions).

States had nonetheless always retained their formal memberships in the Union,[4139] and that "the Confederate States of America * * * cannot * * * be regarded in this Court as having [had] any legal existence".[4140] And, of course, because "the Confederate States" as a whole had been without "legal existence", any decisions of their courts which had furthered the rebellion had been (and would always remain) devoid of any legal authority.[4141] Indeed, by supporting the Confederates' military effort, such decisions had themselves constituted acts of "Treason".[4142] For "if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are actually leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors"[4143]—judges included.

Beyond that, the Supreme Court sidestepped in silence the objection, as obvious as it was decisive, that, even if the Confederate constitution and the United States Constitution did often employ "identical words", the very fact that Southern "secessionists" had been so devoid of understanding that they had construed the United States Constitution as allowing for "secession", when "secession" had actually amounted to a criminal insurrection, had demonstrated that none of their courts' interpretations of the "identical words" in the Confederate constitution could possibly have been treated as a reliable reading of the United States Constitution.

Moreover, the interpretation of the Confederate constitution upon which the Supreme Court professed to rely had not gone unchallenged within the Confederacy. In words that the Court would have approved, the President of the Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, had recommended enactment of a draft on the grounds that "[t]he right of the State to demand, and the duty of the citizen to render, military service, need only to be stated to be admitted".[4144] And the statute enacted by the Confederate Congress had appealed to "the exigencies of the country, and the absolute necessity of keeping in the service our gallant Army, and of placing in the field a large additional force to meet the advancing columns of the enemy".[4145] Shortly thereafter, Davis had entered into correspondence with Joseph Brown, the secessionist Governor of Georgia, concerning the validity of the draft.

[4139] Texas v. White, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 700, 718-726 (1866).

[4140] Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U.S. 176, 182 (1877).

[4141] See id. at 191-192.

[4142] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1.

[4143] Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75, 125-126 (1807) (emphasis supplied).

[4144] Message of 28 March 1862, in THE WAR OF THE REBELLION: A COMPILATION OF THE OFFICIAL RECORDS OF THE UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES, Series IV, Volume I (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1900), at 1031.

[4145] An ACT to further provide for the public defense, Act of 16 April 1862, in THE WAR OF THE REBELLION, ante note 4144, Series IV, Volume I, at 1095.

As did the Supreme Court in 1917, Davis had taken the position that "[t]he constitutionality of the act * * * is clearly not derivable from the power of the militia, but from that to raise armies".[4146] After a further exchange of letters,[4147] Brown had admonished Davis that the draft amounted to "a bold and dangerous usurpation by [the Confederate] Congress of the reserved rights of the [Southern] States and a rapid stride towards military despotism". "Suppose", Brown had maintained, that > [the Confederate] Congress has the constitutional power to raise armies by conscription and without the consent of the States to compel every man * * * between eighteen and thirty-five years old, able to bear arms, to enter these armies, * * * Congress has the same power to extend the law and compel every man between sixteen and sixty to enter. * * * [T]he grant of power is as broad in times of peace as in times of war, as there is * * * no language to limit it to times of war. It follows that Congress has the absolute control of every man in the State whenever it chooses to execute to the full extent the power * * * to raise armies. * * * Your doctrine carried out not only makes Congress supreme over the States at any time when it chooses to exercise the full measure of its power to raise armies, but it places the very existence of the State governments subject to the will of Congress. * * * If the act is constitutional, * * * Congress has the power to compel the Governor or every State, every judge of every court in every State, every officer of the militia of every State and all other State officers to enter the military service as privates in the armies of the Confederacy under officers appointed by the President at any time when it so decides. * * * Congress may disband the State governments any day when it, as the judge, decides that by so doing it creates an instrumentality for executing the specific power to raise armies. * * * Congress has the power * * * to disband the State governments and leave the people of the States with no other government than such military despotism as Congress * * * may * * * judge to be best for the people. * * * I may be reminded, however, that Congress passed an exemption act * * * which exempts the Governors of the States, the members of the State Legislatures, the judges of the State courts, &c., from the obligation to enter the military service * * * . It must be borne in mind, however, that this very act of exemption * * * is an assertion of the right * * * to compel them to go when Congress shall so direct, as Congress has the same power to repeal which it had to pass the exemption act. All the State officers, therefore, are exempt from conscription by the grace and special favor of

---

[4146] Letter of 28 April 1862 from Jefferson Davis to Joseph E. Brown, in id., Series IV, Volume I, at 1100. In its Article I, Section 8, Clause 12, the Confederate constitution delegated to the Confederate Congress the selfsame power "[t]o raise * * * armies" as existed in the parallel clause of the United States Constitution.

[4147] Letter of 8 May 1862 from Joseph E. Brown to Jefferson Davis and Letter of 29 May 1862 from Jefferson Davis to Joseph E. Brown, in id., Series IV, Volume I, at 1116, 1133.

> Congress and not by right, as the governments of the independent States whose agent and not master Congress has been * * * supposed to be. If this doctrine be correct, of what value are State rights and State sovereignty?[4148]

Brown, of course, had been entirely justified in principle to pose this unanswerable objection to the draft, because "the legality of [any governmental] power must be estimated not by what it will do but by what it can do".[4149] In practice, too, his fears of "military despotism" had been anything but paranoiac fantasies. For even before he had begun his correspondence with Davis, Davis had declared martial law in "the city of Richmond and surrounding country to the distance of ten miles".[4150] And by the last year of the Civil War the political-economic organization of the Confederacy could have best been described as a form of highly militarized state socialism.[4151] That the Justices in the Selective Draft Law Cases thought it necessary to employ this material as a putative legal-historical aid in construing the Constitution of the United States provides compelling evidence of how baseless they must have known their opinion to be.

One suspects, though, that none of the Justices ever imagined that, or bothered to consider whether, their opinion amounted to a satisfactory review of constitutional history, application of the rules of constitutional construction, or even employment of elementary logic. Rather, the opinion was handed down to serve a purely political purpose of a decidedly anti-constitutional cast: namely, to provide the final dab of legalistic coloration for the process at work in the statutes from 1903 by which the true Militia were effectively rendered nonexistent; to consolidate all military power in the General Government's "Armies"; to invest Congress in the event of some putative "emergency" with (in Joseph Brown's words) "the power * * * to disband the State governments and leave the people * * * with no other government than * * * military despotism"; and to create a consolidated state apparatus capable of aggressive militaristic imperialism throughout the world.

Even if to bring about such a litany of woe was not the conscious purpose of the Justices in the Selective Draft Law Cases, the effect of their opinion was truly

---

[4148] Id. at 1156, 1162-1163.

[4149] Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, 162 (1921) (McKenna, J., dissenting).

[4150] GENERAL ORDERS No. 9, War Department, Adjutant Inspector General's Office, 1 March 1862, in THE WAR OF THE REBELLION: A COMPILATION OF THE OFFICIAL RECORDS OF THE UNION AND CONFEDERATE ARMIES, Series I, Volume LI, Part II (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1897), at 482. See Emory M. Thomas, The Confederacy as a Revolutionary Experience (Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1971), at 63. Of course, Lincoln, too, was subject to criticism in this regard. See, e.g., James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems Under Lincoln (New York, New York: D. Appleton and Company, 1926), Chapters VI through VIII. But then Lincoln, too, was the proponent of a general draft.

[4151] See Louise B. Hill, "State Socialism in the Confederate States of America", in J.D. Eggleston, Editor, Southern Sketches, No. 9 (Charlottesville, Virginia: Historical Publishing Company, 1936).

horrendous for both America and the rest of Western civilization. The gist of that opinion had almost surely been foreseen, if not actually foreordained, by the powerful political and economic factions intent upon involving the United States as a belligerent in World War I. For they knew that, without unlimited "Armies" conscripted for overseas duty, America's effective participation in a timely fashion on the side of the Allies would have been extremely unlikely. And they never would have proceeded with the celerity and certainty they exhibited to push America into the conflict, without some behind-the-scenes assurance that a draft would be, not only enacted by Congress and the President, but also upheld by the Supreme Court in a decisive fashion. Which explains why an opinion so shoddy in intellectual substance and dangerous in political tendency received the Justices' unanimous approval in a case of such importance and notoriety.[4152]

And precisely what "in the Course of human events" did the Court facilitate? Instead of playing the prudent rôle of an honest broker in order to bring about a negotiated peace between the Allies and the Central Powers, America threw her full military and industrial weight onto the battlefields on behalf of the Allies, under Woodrow Wilson's fantastic slogan, "[t]he world must be made safe for democracy". The result was not the establishment of "democracy", but instead the destruction of the German Empire, the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and the Russian Empire (which with a negotiated peace in the West might have been saved from the worst effects of its revolution), and with them any hope of maintaining political stability and economic prosperity in Europe. The world then witnessed chaos in Italy, leading to Mussolini (the triumph of Fascism), chaos in Germany, leading to Hitler (the triumph of Naziism), and chaos in Russia, leading to Lenin and then Stalin (the triumph of Bolshevism)[4153]—all of which together soon drove Europe and America into World War II, in which untold millions of people perished, and as a consequence of which Stalin (with Hitler, the author of the war) devoured Eastern Europe and Mao Tse-tung fastened his maniacal grip on mainland China.

[4152] In contrast, a serious difference of opinion among other sets of Justices arose in the cases sustaining the constitutionality of the first legal-tender Treasury Notes—but, as those cases were heard only in 1871 and then 1884, after the Civil War had been brought to a successful conclusion, the dissenting opinions were not as politically charged as if the cases had come up for review while the fighting still raged. Therefore, the dissenters were able to set aside a faux unanimity cobbled together for political purposes, in favor of adherence to fundamental legal principles. See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 599-666. Distinguishably, Congress's repudiation and prohibition of "gold clauses" was in full effect even when the Court upheld that action in 1935—yet four Justices nonetheless dissented from the Court's opinion. They were able to get away with this politically, though, because they had protected their flanks by agreeing behind the scenes with the other Justices not to review the Roosevelt Administration's "gold seizure", even though the issues of "the gold clauses" and "the gold seizure" were inextricably linked, and the Court upheld the prohibition of "gold clauses" specifically on the assumption, never litigated, that "the gold seizure" was constitutional. See id., Volume 2, at 1127-1211.

[4153] Contrast War Message of 2 April 1917, Senate Document No. 5 (Serial No. 7264), 65th Congress, 1st Session, with, e.g., Stanley G. Payne, A History of Fascism, 1914-1945 (Madison, Wisconsin: The University of Wisconsin Press, 1995), Chapter 3.

Specifically in America, the Court's opinion in the Selective Draft Law Cases then rationalized a peacetime draft in 1940,[4154] and drafts during World War II, during the "police action" in Korea, and during the conflict in Vietnam. Under its aegis and pernicious influence, "the army sphere" in the Constitution has expanded to "embrace[ ] * * * complete authority * * * conferred in all its plenitude", and therefore to become "dominant"; whereas "the militia area * * * ha[s] been circumscribed or totally disappeared".[4155] The idea of a permanent "standing army" in times of both peace and war has taken firm hold; whereas the true idea of the Militia has been lost in the mists of time, and even the word "militia" has been distorted into a scurrilous political epithet. Now, with "the war on terrorism" as its excuse, and under color of its supposedly unlimited power "[t]o raise * * * Armies" and build up a "military-industrial complex" in their support, Congress is erecting a National para-military police-state apparatus centered around the Department of Homeland Security and the Pentagon. Thus, Joseph Brown's characterization of a general draft as "a bold and dangerous usurpation by Congress of the reserved rights of the States and a rapid stride towards military despotism" has proven all too prophetic. Having failed to guarantee the Militia's immunity from wholesale impressment into the regular Armed Forces, Americans are now witnesses to the Orwellian demolition of "the security of a free State" in the name of "homeland security".

[4154] AN ACT To provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, Act of 16 September 1940, CHAPTER 720, 54 Stat. 885. On the political background of this first peacetime draft, see Earl Rickard, "Marshall Builds the Defense Army", WWII History, Volume 11, Number 6 (September, 2012), at 48.

[4155] See 245 U.S. at 382-383.

CHAPTER FIFTY

Patriots cannot allow revitalization of the Militia to be thwarted by their enemies' invocation of the doctrines of preëmption or prescription.

As of this writing and for the foreseeable future, Americans cannot rely upon Congress to revitalize the Militia. For Congress is packed with rogue Members who dance to the discordant tunes of private factions and other special-interest groups, foreign nations, and supra-national organizations; who are intent upon bringing about the demolition of America's economy and the destruction of "the separate and equal station" "among the powers of the earth" "to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle" her, contrary to the Declaration of Independence; and who, in service of those nefarious ends, are feverishly erecting a National para-military police-state apparatus in order to suppress WE THE PEOPLE'S resistance to submersion in the poverty and oppression of a fascistic "new world order". Apparently, this situation cannot be corrected through the present thoroughly corrupted electoral process, either. Therefore, THE PEOPLE must revitalize their Militia themselves, initially by working through whichever of their States' legislatures remain honestly "representative" of their constituents—and if those legislatures, too, prove impotent, incompetent, or inimical, then through their own efforts.

Of course, the enemies of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and human freedom and dignity know precisely where this process, if allowed to follow its course, must inevitably lead: Once the Militia are revitalized, they will be finished—politically, economically, and in every other way. So they will throw up every possible legalistic impediment to revitalization. If they cannot prevent the enactment of statutes, they will bend every effort to ensure that those statutes are declared invalid in their kangaroo courts. Thus, no great foresight is required to predict that their first contention will be "preëmption", and their second will be "prescription".

A. Under present circumstances, preëmption of all State laws revitalizing the Militia not constitutionally possible. The doctrine of "preëmption" finds its legitimate basis in the Constitution's directives that: (i) "[t]his Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding";[4156] and (ii) "the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers * * * of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution".[4157] (The first of these provisions is usually denoted "the Supremacy Clause"; but the two together should be styled "the Supremacy Clauses", because both of them enforce the superiority of the General Government's to the States' laws.) If "the Constitution or Laws of any State" or the decisions of that State's courts, on the one hand, are "to the Contrary" of the "Constitution, or "the Laws", or any "Treaties" of the United States, on the other hand, then the former must yield to the latter, usually losing their legal validity and force to the extent of any inconsistency. To that extent, the laws of the States are (in legal jargon) "preëmpted". Opponents of revitalization of the Militia can be expected to claim that any State statute enacted for that purpose is necessarily preëmpted, because all effective power over the Militia supposedly resides in Congress, and through Congress in the President, with nothing left over for the States except what Congress affirmatively grants to them by statute.

1. On the face of the Constitution, this contention is nonsense. The Constitution does not imbue Congress with overall "supremacy" as against the States with respect to the Militia. Rather, it establishes two separate zones of authority, and differentiates between various functions to be performed in each. To be sure, these zones and functions overlap to a certain extent. And within that common area subject to dual authority, legitimate actions by Congress may exclude, supersede, or nullify conflicting actions by the States. But not all actions by Congress that pertain to the Militia, even within that common area, necessarily preclude or vitiate all independent actions by the States. For, self-evidently, some State laws revitalizing the Militia could not possibly be "to the Contrary" of "th[e] Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States"—because the Constitution plainly foresees and allows for such State legislation.

Here, the touchstone must be the Tenth Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." Actually, with regard to the Militia the Tenth Amendment is something of a truism, because the original Constitution, by incorporating into its federal system "the Militia of the several States",[4158] necessarily as they existed at the time, made clear that all of the powers over the Militia which the States exercised prior to ratification of the Constitution, and which were not delegated to the United States, must remain with

---

[4156] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[4157] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

[4158] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

the States. Nonetheless, the systematic manner in which the Amendment categorizes the Constitution's distribution of powers remains eminently useful as a tool of legal analysis.

a. With respect to the Militia there are no "powers * * * prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States"—in contrast, for the prime example, to the conditional prohibition that "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace".[4159]

b. The extent of "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States" can be gauged by reference to: (i) the few and very specific powers the Constitution does delegate to Congress—namely, (i) the powers "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[4160] "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia",[4161] and "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States";[4162] and (ii) the status the Constitution assigns to the President—namely, that he "shall be Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States".[4163] All of this authority the Constitution confines to and in aid of three explicitly enumerated, and therefore limited, purposes alone. The further power of Congress "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the[se] * * * Powers, and all other Powers vested by th[e] Constitution * * * in any * * * Officer thereof"[4164] adds nothing to "the[se]" and "all other Powers", because no "Law[ ]" can possibly be "necessary and proper for carrying [them] into Execution" which purports to go beyond their specific terms into activities which cannot, by constitutional definition, ever comprise "the Service of the United States".

c. Because all other conceivable powers addressed to all other purposes for which the Militia might be employed have "not [been] delegated to the United States", they must be "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". Indeed, even if, as the result of some default by Congress and the President, some of the States were compelled by circumstances to call forth their own Militia for one or more of the three explicit constitutional purposes, those Militia would be employed in the service of those States, not in "the Service of the United States".

d. As a consequence of the foregoing, any purported "Law" enacted by Congress which attempts to interfere with the reserved powers of the States is not

---

[4159] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4160] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15 (emphasis supplied).

[4161] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4162] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied).

[4163] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[4164] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

in any way "the supreme Law of the Land", but is no "Law" at all, because it is not "in Pursuance [of the Constitution]".[4165] And any "Treaties" which attempt to interfere with those powers are to that extent not "made * * * under the Authority of the United States", because "the Authority of the United States" to enter into "Treaties" must be exercised consistently with "[t]he powers * * * delegated to the United States" in the Constitution.[4166]

2. The Supremacy Clauses can have no effect whatsoever on the Constitution's distribution of powers.

a. Those clauses can neither assign powers to the United States which the Constitution has not delegated, nor restore powers "prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States", nor withdraw or nullify powers which the Constitution has "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people".[4167] Theirs "is not a declaration of the supremacy of one provision of the Constitution or laws of the United States over another, but of the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States over the constitutions and laws of the States".[4168]

For that reason, rogue Members of Congress cannot claim that some purported statute enacted under, for instance, the power "[t]o lay and collect Taxes"[4169] or the power "[t]o regulate Commerce"[4170] can override either: (i) the power of Congress—and the duty that power entails[4171]—"[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" for the purposes of "execut[ing] the Laws of the Union, suppress[ing] Insurrections and repel[ling] Invasions";[4172] or (ii) the power the Constitution has reserved to the States to organize, arm, and discipline "the Militia of the several States" for all other purposes (and for those three purposes, too, if Congress defaults on its obligations).

b. Even more obviously, the Supremacy Clauses cannot override any constitutional Amendment. In particular with respect to the Militia, if an hierarchy does exist, the Second Amendment must be superior to and to the extent of any mutual inconsistency must override the Supremacy Clauses, because the Second

---

[4165] See, e.g., Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 376 (1880); Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 288 (1885); Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886); Huntington v. Worthen, 120 U.S. 97, 101-102 (1887).

[4166] See, e.g., Doe v. Braden, 57 U.S. (16 Howard) 635, 657 (1853); The Cherokee Tobacco, 78 U.S. (11 Wallace) 616, 620-621 (1871); Holden v. Joy, 84 U.S. (17 Wallace) 211, 242-243 (1872); Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 267 (1890); United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 701 (1898); Asakura v. City of Seattle, 265 U.S. 332, 341 (1924); United States v. Minnesota, 270 U.S. 181, 208 (1926); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 16-18 (1957) (opinion of Black, J., announcing the judgment of the Court)

[4167] See U.S. Const. amend. X.

[4168] National Prohibition Cases, 253 U.S. 350, 401 (1920) (McKenna, J., dissenting).

[4169] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1. See ante, at 1456-1462.

[4170] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. See ante, at 1462-1470.

[4171] See ante, at 50-54.

[4172] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 15.

Amendment followed the Supremacy Clauses in time. The Second Amendment was one of the ten "further declaratory and restrictive clauses" in the Bill of Rights which were "added" to the Constitution "in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers".[4173] The Amendment explains the limits of the Supremacy Clauses ("to prevent misconstruction") and excludes from legitimate political and legal discourse any excuses for exceeding those limits ("to prevent * * * abuse"). Thus, if "[t]his Constitution * * * shall be the supreme Law of the Land", "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" must stand alone on the very top rung of the ladder of supremacy, because "[a] well regulated Militia"—and only "[a] well regulated Militia—is "necessary to the security of a free State".

3. The States' authority over some subjects may be limited by provisions of the Constitution that are effectively self-executing. In these cases, the Supremacy Clauses are basically redundant.

a. In some instances, the Constitution delegates powers to the United States which it simultaneously prohibits to the States, either absolutely or conditionally. Although "[t]he burden of establishing a delegation of power to the United States or the prohibition of power to the states is upon those making the claim",[4174] many of these delegations coupled with prohibitions are perfectly clear. For example—

- Congress may "lay and collect Duties[and] Imposts"; but "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing it's inspection Laws".[4175]

- Congress may "establish uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States"; but "[n]o State shall * * * pass any * * * Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts".[4176]

- Congress may "coin Money"; but "[n]o State shall * * * coin Money".[4177]

- Congress may "declare War"; but "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[4178]

[4173] RESOLUTION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS SUBMITTING TWELVE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION (4 March 1789), in Documents Illustrative of the Formation of the Union of the American States, ante note 1, at 1063.

[4174] Bute v. Illinois, 333 U.S. 640, 653 1948).

[4175] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 with § 10, cl. 2.

[4176] Compare art. I, § 8, cl. 4 with § 10, cl. 1.

[4177] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 with § 10, cl. 1.

[4178] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 with art. § 10, cl. 3.

• Congress may "grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal"; but "[n]o State shall * * * grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal".[4179]

• Congress may "raise and support Armies" and "provide and maintain a Navy"; but "[n]o State shall, without the Consent of Congress, * * * keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace".[4180] And,

• The President "shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur"; but "[n]o State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation", or "without the Consent of Congress * * * enter into any Agreement or Compact * * * with a foreign Power".[4181]

In the case of the Militia, distinguishably, the Constitution nowhere delegates to Congress exclusive control under all circumstances. Neither does the Constitution impose on the States any explicit prohibition of power over the Militia—which is hardly surprising, inasmuch as it recognizes the Militia as "the Militia of the several States". Nor does the Constitution contain any provision which expressly prevents the States from exercising any power over their Militia "without the Consent of Congress". The absence of express prohibitions on any of the powers of the States with respect to their Militia implies that the States' powers are fully concurrent in principle with those of the United States, and are subject to preëmption only when their exercise in practice interferes with the exercise of the powers of the United States.

b. In other instances, although the Constitution does not expressly prohibit a particular power to the States, a power which it delegates to the United States is so defined as to be inherently and inevitably exclusive in nature, and therefore incapable of being exercised by the States. Preëmption applies automatically "where an authority is granted to the Union, to which a similar authority in the States would be absolutely and totally contradictory and repugnant".[4182] For example, the powers of Congress—

• "[t]o lay and collect Taxes * * * to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States";[4183]

• "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States";[4184]

[4179] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 with art. § 10, cl. 1.

[4180] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13 with § 10, cl. 3.

[4181] Compare U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 with art. I, § 10, cls. 1 and 3.

[4182] Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. (14 Peters) 540, 574 (1840) (opinion of Taney, C.J.).

[4183] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied). The States, of course, may still "lay and collect Taxes" to pay their own debts.

[4184] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2. The States, of course, may still "borrow Money" on their own credit.

•"[t]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the Subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States";[4185]

•"[t]o provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States";[4186]

•"[t]o promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries";[4187]

•"[t]o constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court" which may exercise "[t]he judicial Power of the United States";[4188]

•"[t]o raise and support Armies" and "[t]o provide and maintain a Navy", which are to be "the Army and Navy of the United States";[4189] and

•"[t]o exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases, whatsoever, over such District * * * as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings".[4190]

[4185] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (emphasis supplied). No State could have established "Rule[s]" or "Laws" on this (or any other) subject "throughout the United States". Nonetheless, in the absence of any Congressional statute the States may enact their own insolvency laws. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 122, 199 (1819). And even the enactment of a Congressional statute on the subject does not nullify inconsistent State laws, but merely suspends their operation, so that, upon repeal of the Congressional statute, the States' laws can be applied once more. Tua v. Carriere, 117 U.S. 201, 209-210 (1886); Butler v. Goreley, 146 U.S. 303, 314 (1892).

[4186] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 6 (emphasis supplied). As "[n]o State shall * * * coin Money", no State can have any occasion to punish the counterfeiting of her own "Coin". See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1. Contrast the situation involved in Fox v. Ohio, 46 U.S. (5 Howard) 410 (1847), discussed in E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 618-621.

[4187] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8 (emphasis supplied). If each of the States could enact separate laws on this subject, the "Times" would most likely not all be "limited" in the same manner, and the "Right[s]" would not be uniformly "exclusive" through the country. See, e.g., Sears, Roebuck & Company v. Stiffel Company, 376 U.S. 225 (1964) (a State may not enforce as "unfair competition" a law that prohibits the copying of a product which cannot be patented).

[4188] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 9 and art. III, § 1 (emphasis supplied). These are courts of the United States. The States may constitute their own courts.

[4189] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied). See also U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4190] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17 (emphasis supplied).

Similarly for the authority of the President as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States".[4191]

Similarly, the powers of Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" so that they can be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States" "to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[4192] the power of Congress "[t]o provide * * * for governing such part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States",[4193] and the authority of the President as "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States"[4194] are in principle and practice exclusive to the United States, so long as Congress and the President properly fulfill their responsibilities, because the States enjoy no authority in the normal course of events to legislate for or otherwise attempt to prescribe or control "the Service of the United States". In both principle and practice, however, all of these powers could, should, and would have to be exercised by each State, with respect to her own Militia, if Congress and the President defaulted on their duties. For each State has a critical interest in the "execut[ion of] the Laws of the Union", the "suppress[ion of] Insurrections", and the "rep[ulsion of] Invasions", not only within her own territory but also within the territories of all of the other States that might find themselves in danger. It is inconceivable that the Constitution could prohibit the States from deploying their own Militia specifically in the defense of the Union, on the ground that such deployment was exclusively for Congress and the President to undertake, when defaults in their duties on the parts of Congress and the President jeopardized the Union's security. That is, the powers of Congress and the President over "the Militia of the several States" "in the Service of the United States" are exclusive only insofar as Congress and the President can and do exercise them in a timely and proper fashion—otherwise, they must be the concurrent powers of the States, too. And as a practical matter these powers would have to become the exclusive powers of the States in the case of a catastrophic default by the United States—for example, if the General Government were unable or refused to "call[ ] forth" the Militia in the Union's defense because its leading personnel had been taken prisoner in the course of an "Invasion[ ]" by some foreign power, or had been seized by rebels in the course of an "Insurrection[ ]", or themselves had turned out to be usurpers and tyrants who flouted the most important "Laws of the Union".

Moreover, the powers of Congress and the President with respect to the Militia "in the service of the United States" cannot possibly be exclusive, or even

---

[4191] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[4192] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16 (emphasis supplied).

[4193] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied).

[4194] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

concurrent, because they are entirely irrelevant, in regard to the Militia in the service of the several States. When "the Militia of the several States" are deployed solely on behalf of the several States, then the several States alone exercise exclusive authority over them.

4. If the Constitution does not expressly preclude the States from exerting some power over a subject to which Congress also may direct one of its powers, preëmption of State law requires that a State's law be inconsistent with an actual, valid law of Congress.

a. No State can be prohibited from exercising any of her concurrent constitutional authority on the basis of Congress's *in*action. For only "the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution] * * * shall be the supreme Law of the Land"[4195]—not "Laws" which Congress has not actually "made" at all. "It is not the existence of the power [of Congress], but its exercise, which is incompatible with the exercise of the same power by the state."[4196] The notion that a power of Congress, concurrent with a power of the States, by its own unaided force always excludes State legislation on the subject to which it is addressed—that the States may not exercise their concurrent power unless it appears that Congress has somehow consented or acquiesced through an exercise of its own concurrent power, and that an absence of such exercise always entails disapproval of any exercise of the States' power—is "an unwarranted judicial invention".[4197] The correct inference must be that, if Congress has enacted no "Law[ ] of the United States", then Congress intends to allow the States to enact their own laws on the subject. This is the present situation with the Militia.

b. Even if Congress has enacted a purported "Law[ ]", that "Law[ ]" must have been "made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]"—both substantively, in that it does not exceed the powers of Congress;[4198] and procedurally, in that it has been passed and approved in the proper manner.[4199] For "[a]n unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties * * * ; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed".[4200] So, if what Congress has [4195] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 (emphasis supplied).

---

[4196] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 122, 196 (1819).

[4197] Tyler Pipe Industries, Inc. v. Washington State Department of Revenue, 483 U.S. 232, 263 (1987) (Scalia, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

[4198] See U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 8 and 9.

[4199] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 7. This limitation has become increasingly important in an era in which an individuals possibly ineligible for "the Office of President" has nonetheless insinuated himself into that position. Compare and contrast U.S. Const. art. II, § 1, cl. 4 with art. I, § 7, cls. 2 and 3. No "Bill", "Order", "Resolution", or "Vote" can be "presented to the President" if the individual pretending to be "the President" is incurably ineligible for that "Office". In that case, so such "Bill" can "become a Law", and no such "Order, Resolution, or Vote" can "take Effect".

[4200] Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886).

done or has failed to do with respect to the Militia is unconstitutional—in violation of its own disabilities or duties, or in disregard of constitutional procedures—then it can impose no restraint whatsoever on the States. No State is bound to accept or acquiesce in any purported "Laws of the United States" not "in Pursuance [of the Constitution]", or in any failures, neglects, or refusals of Congress to enact "Laws" which truly are "necessary and proper"—particularly when those false "Laws" or refusals to enact true "Laws" threaten the one institution the Constitution identifies as "necessary to the security of a free State".[4201]

(1) There can be no "Laws of the United States * * * made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" with respect to "the Militia of the several States" in the service of the several States respectively—that is, when the Militia are deployed purely for the purposes of the States' own "homeland security"—because Congress has no power whatsoever to enact any such "Laws".

The Constitution empowers Congress "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"; and "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress"[4202]—and to do nothing more. Similarly, it designates the President as the "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when in the actual Service of the United States"[4203]—and at no other time and for no other purposes than the three for which the Constitution permits the Militia to be "call[ed] forth" in that "Service". The Constitution delegates these powers to Congress and this authority to the President in order to provide the United States with the ability to draw upon Militia from the several States "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" in such a reasonably uniform manner that they will be capable of performing any of the three constitutionally designated tasks, but not necessarily any others. The Constitution empowers Congress to prepare the Militia only by "organizing, arming, and disciplining" them, and only in order to perform the three specifically identified tasks. Congress is not authorized to prepare the Militia in any other way, or to "call[ ] forth" the Militia for any other purpose. This is because, as the Constitution itself recognizes, the "Militia" to be "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" and "call[ed] forth" are none other than "the Militia of the several States", not "the Militia of the United States"—a distinction the Constitution makes exquisitely clear in defining the dual status of the President as "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into [4201] Compare U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 with amend. II.

[4202] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[4203] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

the actual Service of the United States",[4204] and in delegating to Congress the power "[t]o provide * * * for governing" only "such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States".[4205]

Thus (using the analytical framework of the Tenth Amendment), because "the powers * * * delegated to the United States by the Constitution" pertain only to the Militia when they are "employed in the Service of the United States", and because no powers that pertain to the Militia when they are employed exclusively in the service of the States have been "prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States", therefore all powers that pertain to the Militia when they are employed exclusively in the service of the States have been "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people", and thereby prohibited from exercise by the United States. So, because Congress is constitutionally impotent to do anything with respect to the Militia when they are employed exclusively in the service of the States, nothing rogue Members of Congress might attempt to do can preëmpt the States. No "Laws of the United States" can "be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" when the Constitution delegates no power to "ma[k]e" such "Laws".

(2) Even with respect to the powers Congress does enjoy with respect to the Militia, the ambit in which it can prëempt the States is narrow, because of the limited and specific nature of those powers. Absent the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions",[4206] Congress would lack any semblance of authority to "call[ ] forth" the Militia at all and for any purpose, because the Militia are "the Militia of the several States", not "the Militia of the United States". That being so, Congress's authority in the premises is limited to the means which the Constitution specifies (that is, "calling forth"), and to the purposes the Constitution sets forth ("to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions"), and to those means and purposes only. Moreover, absent the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States",[4207] Congress would have to rely totally upon the States to "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" the Militia. That being so, Congress's authority is limited to those elements of regulation, and those alone, and only in relation to the three constitutional purposes for which the Militia may be "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States". In addition, absent the Constitution's assignment to him of the status of "Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into

---

[4204] See U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 (emphasis supplied).

[4205] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied).

[4206] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 15.

[4207] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

the actual Service of the United States",[4208] the President could not exercise any authority with respect to the Militia at all, because the Constitution explicitly "reserv[es] to the States respectively the Appointment of the Officers" in the Militia.[4209] And the authority the Constitution does allow the President to exercise it confines to "the actual Service of the United States", which by constitutional definition is limited to "organizing, arming, disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia with respect to the three purposes for which they may be "call[ed] forth".[4210] Revealingly, that the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" comes before the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" supports these conclusions.[4211] A naive draftsman might assume that the power to "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" should precede the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia", on the grounds that the first step should be to prepare those organizations in a general way for whatever their tasks might be, and only thereafter to specify those tasks. A sophisticated draftsman, however, would conclude—on the commonsensical basis that if the ends justify the means therefore the means must serve the ends—that the sequence of powers actually chosen amounts to a limitation on those powers: namely, because the Militia may be "call[ed] forth" only for three particular purposes (the ends), therefore all "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" of the Militia (the means) must subserve only those three purposes. The Constitution states the ends before the means for other, very practical, reasons, too—namely, that: (i) in the earliest days of the Republic the Militia could have been "call[ed] forth" immediately, without any "organizing, arming, and disciplining" provided by Congress, because in 1788 they were existing State establishments already "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]" pursuant to State law;[4212] and (ii) even today Congress could "provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" by leaving those matters entirely to the States. If the order of the powers were reversed—that is, if the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" preceded the power "[t]o provide for calling forth the Militia" for the three constitutional purposes—it might be argued that Congress could "organiz[e], "arm[ ], [and] disciplin[e]" the Militia for any purpose, but could "call[them] forth" only for the three purposes set forth. In the order in which those powers actually appear, though, the latter construction cannot be credited.

[4208] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4209] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4210] See ante, at 871-880.

[4211] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[4212] See Arts. of Confed'n, art. VI, ¶ 4. Congress enacted the first National Militia Act only four years later. An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, 1 Stat. 271.

So, because Congress is constitutionally impotent to do anything with respect to the Militia that is not "necessary and proper" for "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" them in relation to the three purposes for which they may be "call[ed] forth" to "be employed in the Service of the United States", nothing rogue Members of Congress might attempt to do outside of that area can preëmpt the States. No "Laws of the United States" can "be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" when the Constitution delegates no power to "ma[k]e" such "Laws".

(3) Stated another way, the Constitution has reserved a rather broad ambit of power for the States to exercise with respect to their Militia. "[T]he Militia of the several States" (or of the American Colonies before the latter declared their independence from Great Britain) preëxisted the Constitution. During the entire *pre-*constitutional era, all but one of the Colonies and then all of independent States exercised exclusive jurisdiction over their own Militia. Even the precursor to the Constitution, the Articles of Confederation, expressly mandated that "every state shall always keep up a well regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred"[4213]—according, moreover, to each State's own laws, because the Articles granted no powers to Congress to enact laws for that purpose. The Constitution nowhere explicitly withdrew authority over their Militia from the States, as it did with respect to the States' "keep[ing] Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace" "without the Consent of Congress".[4214] And the Constitution nowhere granted any authority to Congress to form a "Militia of the United States", as it did with respect to "rais[ing] and support[ing] Armies" and "provid[ing] and maintain[ing] a Navy" which were to be known as "the Army and Navy of the United States".[4215] So the States' reserved powers over "the Militia of the several States" must encompass every power capable of being addressed to the Militia, including in certain circumstances even those which the Constitution plainly delegates to the United States.

(a) The Constitution delegates to Congress the power "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia in relation to the three purposes for which they may be "call[ed] forth". To the extent that Congress exercises this power in a "necessary and proper" fashion, the States must yield. Conversely, each of the States retains the exclusive authority to "organiz[e]", arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" her own Militia in order to provide "homeland security" in situations that do not involve any of the three reasons for which Congress may "provide for calling forth the Militia", should that State consider Congress's action insufficient for her own purposes.

[4213] Arts. of Confed'n art. VI, ¶ 4.

[4214] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4215] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12 and 13, and art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

After all, if the purpose of empowering Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia in an uniform manner is solely that they may effectively "be employed in the Service of the United States" when called forth collectively, why should individual Militia not also be "organiz[ed], arm[ed], * * * disciplin[ed], * * * and * * * govern[ed]" in such complementary or supplementary fashion as each State might deem necessary for her own particular service? In principle, perhaps, Congress could "provide" different forms of "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia, tailored to the specific needs of each State. In practice, though, such a program would be extraordinarily cumbersome and beset with every debility of bureaucratic "central planning". So why should the Constitution be tortuously misconstrued to deny the States the authority to perform for themselves a necessary task that must overtax, if it does lie entirely beyond, Congress's competence? Certainly no plausible construction of the Constitution could license Congress simultaneously (i) to disallow the States from "keep[ing] Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace", and (ii) to preclude the States from "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" their own Militia, and (iii) to fail, neglect, or refuse to take any of the latter three actions itself.

The unavoidability of this conclusion appears perhaps most patently in the portion of Congress's power that authorizes it "[t]o provide * * * for governing such Part of the[Militia] as may be employed in the Service of the United States". If Congress may provide for governing only that "Part" of the Militia "employed in the Service of the United States", who is to govern the remainder of the Militia at that time, and all of the Militia when they are not so "employed"? The Constitution itself decrees that it cannot be Congress. Therefore it must be the States, or in the event of the States' default "the people" themselves[4216]—unless the Constitution implicitly commands the absurd result that under those circumstances the Militia (in "Part" or in whole) are not to be "govern[ed]" at all. But such a result the Constitution obviously precludes, when it "reserv[es] to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers [of the Militia]",[4217] thereby retaining almost all actual authority of command in the States, because the only officer of the General Government who is simultaneously an "Officer[ ]" in any of "the Militia of the several States" is the President of the United States (and only when the Militia are "called into the actual Service of the United States").[4218] Moreover, if when not "employed in the Service of the United States" the Militia must be "govern[ed]" by the States or "the people", for what purposes are they be "govern[ed]"? Plainly, if the Militia are not "employed in the Service of the United States" they will probably not be [4216] See U.S. Const. amends. II and X.

[4217] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4218] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

"execut[ing] the Laws of the Union, suppress[ing] Insurrections [or] repel[ling] Invasions" (although in some circumstances they might be engaged in those activities). Rather, in most cases, they will perform services for their own States in aid of their States' "homeland security"—purposes entirely outside of the powers of Congress which pertain to the Militia. For example,

• The authority each State enjoys "to call[ ] forth [her own] Militia to execute the Laws of [that State], and suppress Insurrections [in that State]", without the assistance of or interference by the General Government, is plainly a "power[ ] not * * * prohibited by [the Constitution] to the States", and therefore is "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people".[4219] "A well regulated Militia" in each State is not only an integral part of her own government, but also the organized assembly of her own people in arms—the means through which that State's people exercise their sovereignty directly, by wielding the Power of the Sword themselves. True enough, the Constitution does require that "[t]he United States * * * shall protect each of the[several States] * * * on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence".[4220] So, "domestic Violence" within one State which sought assistance from the United States could be the occasion for the General Government to "call[ ] forth the Militia" from other States in order to "suppress [the] Insurrection[ ]". But, absent an "Application" to the United States, the jurisdiction of each State with respect to "domestic Violence" within her own boundaries (and to the execution of her own laws for the purpose of putting down such "Violence") is exclusive, and the jurisdiction of the General Government in that regard nonexistent.

• The power of the States to "call[ ] forth the[ir own] Militia to "repel Invasions" is even more plainly reserved. The Constitution expressly provides that a State may "engage in War" when "actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay".[4221] Suddenly faced with an attack, however, a State may have no "Troops, of Ships of War" at hand, because she had not theretofore received "the Consent of Congress" to "keep [them] * * * in time of Peace".[4222] Therefore, if she is to defend herself, the State must deploy her Militia. To be able to deploy an effective Militia on a moment's notice, though, she must have "organiz[ed], arm[ed], disciplin[ed], * * * and * * * govern[ed]" the Militia beforehand, even without any direction or assistance, and perhaps in the face of resistance, from Congress. So, unless the Constitution is so psychotic a document that it permits the States to be stripped of the very ability to defend themselves when it explicitly allows such defense, Congress can have nothing whatsoever to say

---

[4219] U.S. Const. amend. X.

[4220] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4 (emphasis supplied).

[4221] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

[4222] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3.

about any State's maintenance and deployment of her Militia for the purpose of "repel[ling an] Invasion[ ]"—and, by logical extension, for all other purposes relating to her own "homeland security".

In sum, as to all of the matters for which "the Militia of the several States" cannot constitutionally be "call[ed] forth" "in[to] the Service of the United States", and therefore as to which Congress is powerless "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" them, the States may—indeed, must—adopt their own standards, with no fear that the United States might penalize their Militia as institutions or their citizens as individuals for complying with those requirements. Because Congress is constitutionally disabled from enacting any law for regulating any "Part of th[e Militia]" when that "Part" is not "in the Service of the United States", no "Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" can possibly be enacted in that regard—and no such "Laws" being capable of enactment by Congress, "the supreme Law of the Land" as to those matters in each of the several States must be the laws of the individual States themselves, if any laws on the subject are to exist.[4223]

(b) Under certain circumstances, the States are not without authority to "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" their Militia even for the three constitutional purposes for which Congress may "provide for calling [them] forth", either. The Constitution does not explicitly prohibit the States from "calling forth" their own Militia for those purposes. The Constitution does not explicitly prohibit the States from "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" their own Militia so that they could be "call[ed] forth" for those purposes. Indeed, the Constitution imposes no disabilities whatsoever upon the States with respect to these matters, other than: (i) the explicit requirement that the States must "train[ ] the[ir] Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress"—which actually "reserv[es] * * * th[at] Authority" to the States in order to guarantee that the Militia are "train[ed]";[4224] and (ii) the implicit limitation always applicable to every concurrent power that the States' regulations in those particulars may not interfere with the performance of whatever constitutional regulations Congress may have enacted.[4225] Therefore, each of the States retains the authority to "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" her own Militia in order: (i) to fill any voids in her Militia's preparedness caused by Congress's failure, neglect, or refusal to "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" the Militia in complete readiness to be "call[ed] forth" "in the Service of the United States" for any of the three constitutionally designated

---

[4223] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3 with amend. X.

[4224] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16. As is usually the case where the Militia are concerned, this reservation of authority amounts to both a right and a duty. See ante, at 50-54.

[4225] U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3.

purposes; and (ii) to prepare her Militia to be "call[ed] forth" by the State herself for any of those reasons in the event that Congress fails, neglects, or refuses to do so when such mobilization is necessary.

All of this should be self-evident. In America's legal lexicon, the noun "Militia" means the entirety of the able-bodied adult population, properly organized, armed, trained and otherwise disciplined, and governed—that is, "well regulated"—at all times. By incorporating "the Militia of the several States" into its federal structure, the Constitution presumes that such "Militia"—and, absent an Amendment to the contrary, only such "Militia"—will always exist under its aegis. The Constitution empowers Congress "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia, and "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" its enumerated "Powers", including the former power. The Second Amendment declares that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State". Therefore, Congress must exercise its power with respect to the Militia at all times to the fullest extent possible. But what if it does not do so? Surely, maintenance of the federal structure, and especially of the Constitution as "the supreme Law" of "a free State",[4226] cannot for one moment be held hostage to some rogue Congressmen's failure, neglect, or refusal to exercise the powers that, if exercised, would prove sufficient to those ends. So, if such Congressmen, derelict in their constitutional duties, for whatever reason do not "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" "the Militia of the several States", the States must act individually. Because they must act, they must be constitutionally authorized to act. And if under such circumstances any State's government, derelict in its constitutional duties, for whatever reason does not "organiz[e], arm[ ], * * * disciplin[e], * * * and * * * govern[ ]" that State's Militia, then WE THE PEOPLE themselves in that State must act collectively to redress that deficiency—and because they must act, they too must be constitutionally authorized to act. The existence of which authority, reserved to the States or to THE PEOPLE, the Second and Tenth Amendments verify.

Moreover, the States need not wait to assert their authority in this respect until after a crisis has broken out. For the Constitution "reserv[es] to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress" at all times.[4227] Enforcing "th[is] discipline" necessarily includes overseeing matters that relate to "organizing", "arming", and even "governing" the Militia, because effective "training" depends upon having the twin foundations of "organizing" and "arming" properly prepared, and "discipline" maintained through appropriate "govern[ance]". So the States' rôle is not that of merely passive onlookers, but instead that of active administrators of [4226] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 with amend. II.

---

[4227] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

the Militia, through "the Appointment of the Officers" who conduct the "training". To be fully effective in "training" the Militia, however, the States must enjoy a comprehensive authority to fill in any gaps if Congress fails, neglects, or refuses adequately "[t]o provide for organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia. As an integral part of the United States, each State must be critically concerned that "the Laws of the Union" are "execute[d]", "Insurrections" "suppress[ed]", and "Invasions" "repel[led]". Success in these endeavors will depend upon properly "organizing, arming, * * * disciplining, * * * and * * * governing" the Militia. If Congress does not exercise the powers the Constitution delegates to it when it ought to do so, or purports to exercise those powers in a slapdash or even an unconstitutional manner—and inasmuch as the Constitution does not flatly prohibit the States from exercising those powers—then upon Congress's default the States may, should, and must exercise them through "the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia" which the Constitution has "reserv[ed] to the[m]". And precisely because the Constitution explicitly "reserv[es]" these powers to the States, no "Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" can possibly be enacted to preclude their exercise—and no such "Laws" being capable of enactment by Congress, "the supreme Law of the Land" as to those matters in each of the several States must be the laws of the individual States themselves, if any laws on the subject are to exist.[4228]

c. If both Congress and one or more States have each enacted otherwise valid laws with respect to the Militia, in most cases the laws of Congress can preëmpt the laws of the States only when the execution of the latter interferes to too great a degree with the execution of the former. For "[i]t is not the mere existence of the power [of Congress], but its exercise, which is incompatible with the exercise of the same power by the states".[4229] In those circumstances, the States' laws will be inoperative, but only to the extent of the conflict. As Justice Joseph Story summarized the situation, > Congress have power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; but if Congress should make no such provision, there seems no reason why the States may not organize, arm, and discipline their own militia. No necessary incompatibility would exist in the nature of the power, though, when exercised by Congress, the authority of the States must necessarily yield. And here the argument from inconvenience would be very persuasive the other way. For the power to organize, arm, and discipline the militia, in the absence of congressional legislation, would seem indispensable for the defence and security of the State. Again,

---

[4228] Compare U.S. Const. art. VI, cls. 2 and 3 with amend. X.

[4229] Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 122, 196 (1819) (emphasis supplied).

> Congress have power to call forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. But there does not seem any incompatibility in the States calling out their own militia as auxiliaries for the same purpose.[4230]

Thus—

• If Congress has adequately provided for "organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" so that they may effectively "execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions" when "call[ed] forth" for one or more of those purposes,[4231] the States may interpolate some useful additions, but not interject incompatible elements into or otherwise interfere with the Congressional scheme. When Congress has done next to everything, the States may do next to nothing.

• Whether or not Congress has adequately provided for "organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" in order to perform any or all of the three constitutional functions, the States may enact whatever legislation they determine to be appropriate for regulating their own Militia for the purpose of providing "homeland security" (other than any of the three constitutional functions) exclusively within their own territories—so long as these preparations do not in fact interfere with "calling forth" the Militia to "be employed in the Service of the United States" for those functions. When Congress can do nothing, the States may do everything. And,

• If Congress has not adequately provided for "organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia" in order to perform any of the three constitutional functions, the States may do so, to whatever degree they are able. When Congress has done nothing, the States may do everything.

The third of these possibilities reflects the situation today. Congress has not enacted a proper Militia statute. As of this writing, the only statute purporting to deal with the Militia provides as follows:

> (a) The militia of the United States consists of all able-bodied males at least 17 years of age and * * * under 45 years of age who are, or who have made a declaration of intention to become, citizens of the United States and of female citizens of the United States who are members of the National Guard.
>
> (b) The classes of the militia are—
>
> (1) the organized militia, which consists of the National Guard and the Naval Militia; and

---

[4230] Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, ante note 576, Volume 1, § 445, at 340 (footnotes omitted).

[4231] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

> (2) the unorganized militia, which consists of the members of the militia who are not members of the National Guard or the Naval Militia.[4232]

If this were treated as a "militia" statute, insoluble constitutional problems would arise.

First, constitutionally, no such thing as "the militia of the United States" exists. The only "Militia" the Constitution recognizes are "the Militia of the several States".

Second, "the organized militia, which consists of the National Guard",[4233] does not fit the constitutional pattern for a "Militia", "well regulated" or not. (i) A true "Militia" is based upon near-universal, essentially lifetime enrollment of a fully compulsory nature.[4234] The National Guard, conversely, is an establishment composed entirely of volunteers for limited periods of service:

> The National Guard of each State * * * shall consist of members of the militia voluntarily enlisted therein, who upon original enlistment shall be not less than eighteen nor more than forty-five years of age, * * * organized, armed, equipped, and federally recognized * * * .
>
> The National Guard of the United States * * * shall be a reserve component of the Army of the United States and shall consist of those federally recognized National Guard units * * * appointed, enlisted and appointed, or enlisted, as the case may be, in the National Guard of the United States * * * : Provided, That the members of the National Guard of the United States shall not be in the active service of the United States except when ordered thereto in accordance with law, and, in time of peace, they shall be administered, armed, uniformed, equipped, and trained in their status as the National Guard of the several States * * * .
>
> * * * * *
>
> * * * Original enlistments in the National Guard and in the National Guard of the United States shall be for a period of three years, and subsequent enlistments for periods of one or three years each * * * .
>
> * * * Men enlisting in the National Guard of the several States * * * , and in the National Guard of the United States, shall sign an enlistment contract and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation:
>
> "I do hereby acknowledge to have voluntarily enlisted * * * as a soldier in the National Guard of the United States and the State of ------

---

[4232] 10 U.S.C. § 311.

[4233] For simplicity of analysis, consideration of the Naval Militia will be put to one side. Anyone who cares to perform the task, however, will arrive at the same conclusion applicable to the National Guard.

[4234] See ante, Chapters 5, 10, 16, and 35.

> * * * for the period of three (or one) year--, under the conditions prescribed by law, unless sooner discharged by proper authority.["][4235]

(ii) "[T]he Militia of the several States" are separate from and independent of "the Army and Navy of the United States".[4236] The National Guard, conversely, is part of the Army: "[T]he Army of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the National Guard of the United States, [and] the National Guard while in the service of the United States".[4237] (iii) "[T]he Militia of the several States" may be "call[ed] forth" to be "employed the Service of the United States" for three constitutional purposes only,[4238] none of which exposes them to being impressed into the regular Armed Forces.[4239] The National Guard, conversely, may be called into service within (not just alongside) the Army, for duty both at home and overseas, at almost any time and for almost any reason:

> When Congress shall have declared a national emergency and shall have authorized the use of armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, the President may * * * order into the active military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war or emergency, unless sooner relieved, any or all units and the members thereof of the National Guard of the United States. All persons so ordered into the active military service of the United States shall from the date of such order stand relieved from duty in the National Guard of their respective States * * * so long as they shall remain in the active military service of the United States, and during such time shall be subject to such laws and regulations for the government of the Army of the United States as may be applicable to members of the Army whose permanent retention in active military service is not contemplated by law.[4240]

Third, the Constitution recognizes no such thing as an "unorganized militia", for the very good reason that, by definition, no such thing as an "*un*organized militia" can exist. Throughout the *pre-*constitutional era, complete organization of those individuals eligible for Militia service was a fundamental principle of what the [4235] AN ACT To amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, Act of 15 June 1933, CHAPTER 87, §§ 5, 7, and 8, 48 Stat. 153, 155-157. This statute (rather than later versions) is cited for the historical reason that it more or less completed the evolution of the basic structure of the National Guard. See ante, at 786-793 and 1809-1811.

---

[4236] E.g., U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1; and contrast U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 12, 13, and 14 with cls. 15 and 16.

[4237] Act of 15 June 1933, § 1, 48 Stat. at 153.

[4238] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 15 and 16.

[4239] See ante, Chapter 49.

[4240] Act of 15 June 1933, § 18, 48 Stat. at 160.

Second Amendment came to denote as "[a] well regulated Militia".[4241] In keeping with this legal history, the Constitution delegates to Congress the power "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia",[4242] not for requiring that they remain "[un]organiz[ed]". For "[t]he doing of one thing that is authorized cannot be made the source of an authority to do another thing which there is no power to do".[4243] In the terms of the Tenth Amendment, precisely because the power to organize the Militia is delegated to Congress, "[t]he power[to leave the Militia unorganized is] not delegated to the United States".

Therefore, if Congress's present "militia" statute is a "militia" statute it is unconstitutional. That, however, is an unacceptable conclusion, because every statute of Congress should be so construed as to be constitutional, if such a construction is fairly possible.[4244] In fact, such a constitutional construction is possible, if the National Guard and the Naval Militia are recognized, not as "militia" of any sort, but instead as the "Troops, or Ships of War" which the States may "keep * * * in time of Peace" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress".[4245] Under that construction, "the unorganized militia" becomes merely a clumsy and inaccurate designation for all of those individuals who, although eligible by dint of age for enlistment in the National Guard or the Naval Militia, have not enlisted—that is, those individuals who remain "unorganized" with respect to the National Guard and the Naval Militia. So read, the statute is silent as to whether those individuals might be "organized" or "unorganized" with respect to "the Militia of the several States".

As this is the only statute on the subject of the Militia which Congress has enacted, on either construction of it no true Militia law of Congress now exists. Thus, there being no actual exercise of the powers of Congress that could preëmpt the States, and inasmuch as no laws they might enact could possibly interfere with a nonexistent Congressional statute, they are entirely free to revitalize their Militia according to constitutional principles just as they see fit—indeed, they are required to do something, so that "the Militia of the several States" will be in existence as "well regulated Militia". Plainly enough, any new State laws on this subject could not prevent Congress from subsequently enacting its own constitutional statute revitalizing the Militia specifically for "the Service of the United States". To the contrary: As more and more States enacted their own Militia laws, Congress would come under increasing pressure to promulgate an uniform National Militia code

---

[4241] See ante, Chapters 5, 10, 16, 21, and 34.

[4242] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4243] Wilson v. New, 243 U.S. 332, 345 (1917).

[4244] See, e.g., Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 (1932); National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U.S. 1, 30 (1937); Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S. 705, 710-711 (1962); United States v. Thirty-seven (37) Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 369 (1971).

[4245] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3. See ante, at 786-792 and 1809-1811.

that could harmonize the inconsistences likely to have arisen among the States' laws. And to the extent that any previously enacted State laws seriously conflicted with whatever statute Congress eventually passed, the States' laws would simply have to yield.

Interestingly enough, if Congress's statute providing for "the organized militia" (the National Guard and the Naval Militia) and "the unorganized militia" (every eligible individual not enlisted in either of those establishments) is construed in a constitutional fashion—and if "[c]onstitutional provisions should be interpreted with the expectation that Congress will discharge its duties",[4246] because "elected representatives, like other citizens, know the law"[4247] and therefore should be expected to enact legislation, or to refrain from enacting it, with their constitutional powers and disabilities in mind[4248]—the very fact that Congress has not "organiz[ed], arm[ed], [or] disciplin[ed], the Militia" at all should be taken as tacit encouragement to the States to regulate their own Militia on their own initiatives on their own terms. Presumably, after all, the Members of Congress know that complete "organiz[ation]" of the Militia in their entireties is the constitutional norm—and that if Congress does not "organiz[e]" the Militia, the States must.

Similarly, the Members of Congress ought to know that properly "arming" the Militia requires every eligible individual (other than conscientious objectors) to acquire and maintain personal possession of at least one firearm, with sufficient ammunition and accoutrements, suitable for Militia service.[4249] They also should know that their power "[t]o provide for * * * arming" the Militia cannot possibly include a power "[t]o provide for * * * [dis]arming" them,[4250] because "[t]he doing of one thing that is authorized cannot be made the source of an authority to do another thing which there is no power to do".[4251] In the terms of the Tenth Amendment, precisely because the power to "arm[ ]" the Militia is delegated to Congress, "[t]he power[to disarm the Militia is] not delegated to the United States". Yet, by not "arming" the Militia itself, Congress has not necessarily violated the Constitution. For, by doing nothing, Congress has in effect "provid[ed]" sotto voce for this task to be accomplished by the States, or by WE THE PEOPLE themselves through the free market, or by both in some coöperative fashion. The possible objection that the statutes mandating one or another form of "gun control" which Congress has promulgated over the years do not facilitate, or in some particulars even allow, THE PEOPLE to arm themselves in the manner most conducive to

---

[4246] Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 183 (1926) (McReynolds, J., dissenting).

[4247] Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 696-697 (1979).

[4248] See Albernaz v. United States, 450 U.S. 333, 341-342 (1981).

[4249] See ante, Chapters 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 20, 38, 39, and 40.

[4250] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4251] Wilson v. New, 243 U.S. 332, 345 (1917).

fielding "[a] well regulated Militia" (such as with fully automatic rifles) is not well taken. For, if the States actively participated in "arming" the Militia, most Congressional "gun control" would become irrelevant, because such statutes usually contain (as constitutionally they must) explicit exceptions for armed State establishments.[4252]

And, of course, each of the States could initiate the process of revitalizing their Militia by creating a separate corps of Militia "Officers", because the Constitution expressly "reserv[es] to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers".[4253] Inasmuch as Congress has been delegated no power whatsoever over "the Appointment of the Officers" (including even the President, whom the Constitution appoints as "Commander in Chief"), no purported statute it might enact on this subject would be "made in Pursuance [of the Constitution]" and could constitute "the supreme Law of the Land * * * , any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding".[4254] Such a statute would be no "law" at all—it would "confer[ ] no rights", would "impose[ ] no duties", and "in legal contemplation[would be] as inoperative as though it had never been passed".[4255] Thus, that the Constitution "reserv[es] to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers" in and of itself proves that Congress must "organiz[e]" and "arm[ ]" the Militia for the three constitutional purposes in fulfillment of which they may be "employed in the Service of the United States", and must allow each of the States to "organiz[e]" and "arm[ ]" her own Militia for all other possible purposes of "homeland security" (and for the three constitutional purposes as well, in the event that Congress defaults in that particular). For "Appointment of the [4252] See An Act To control crime ("Crime Control Act of 1990"), Act of 29 November 1990, Pub. L. 101-647, TITLE XVII—GENERAL PROVISIONS, § 1702(b)(1) [§ 922(q)(1)(B)(vi)], 104 Stat. 4789, 4844 (dealing with "gun-free schools"); An Act To amend chapter 44 (relating to firearms) of title 18, United States Code, and for other purposes ("Firearms Owners' Protection Act"), Act of 19 May 1986, Pub. L. 99-308, § 102(9) [§ 922(o)(2)(A)], 100 Stat. 449, 452-453 (dealing with transfers and possession of machine guns); AN ACT To amend title 18, United States Code, to provide for better control of the interstate traffic in firearms ("Gun Control Act of 1968"), Act of 21 October 1968, Pub. L. 90-618, TITLE I—STATE FIREARMS CONTROL ASSISTANCE, § 102 [§ 925(a)(1)], and TITLE II—MACHINE GUNS, DESTRUCTIVE DEVICES, AND CERTAIN OTHER FIREARMS, § 201 [§ 5833], 82 Stat. 1213, 1224, 1233-1234; AN ACT To assist State and local governments in reducing the incidence of crime, to increase the effectiveness, fairness, and coordination of law enforcement and criminal justice systems at all levels of government, and for other purposes ("Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968"), Act of 19 June 1968, Pub. L. 90-351, TITLE IV—STATE FIREARMS CONTROL ASSISTANCE, § 902 [§ 925(a)], 82 Stat. 197, 233; AN ACT To regulate commerce in firearms, Act of 30 June 1938 ("Federal Firearms Act"), CHAPTER 850, § 4(2) and (3), 52 Stat. 1250, 1252; AN ACT To provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof ("National Firearms Act"), Act of 26 June 1934, CHAPTER 757, § 13(1), 48 Stat. 1236, 1240; An Act Declaring pistols, revolvers, and other firearms capable of being concealed on the person nonmailable and providing penalty, Act of 8 February 1927, CHAP. 75, 44 Stat. 1059, 1059.

---

[4253] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4254] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[4255] Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886). Accord, Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270, 288 (1885); Huntington v. Worthen, 120 U.S. 97, 101-102 (1887).

Officers" would be useless if Militiamen were not to be enlisted to serve under them; enlistment of Militiamen would be pointless if they were not to be "organiz[ed]" in "well regulated Militia"; even "organiz[ed]" Militia would not be "well regulated" if they were not "arm[ed]"; and the declaration that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State"[4256] would be absurd if Congress could refuse to "organiz[e]" and "arm[ ]" the Militia itself and could prevent the States as well from "organizing" and "arming" them. The Constitution, however, does not authorize futility or countenance absurdity.

B. Prescription no basis for preventing revitalization of the Militia. Because, under the circumstances prevailing today, opponents of revitalization of the Militia will not be able to make out a credible case of preëmption, they will fall back on the even less plausible claim of "prescription". Although American constitutional law recognizes no doctrine explicitly denoted "prescription", that is the most descriptive term for what is involved here. In general, "prescription" denotes the theory that particular rights, although once recognized, may nonetheless be lost by serial failures, neglects, or refusals to enforce or claim them over some extensive period of time, or that rights never theretofore recognized may nevertheless be set up by a more or less continuous enforcement of them over some period of time through the exercise of powers that logically relate to them, notwithstanding that those powers may never have been considered legal either.[4257] The contention will be that the Constitution no longer permits revitalization of the Militia according to the principles of the *pre-*constitutional Militia Acts—that is, according to its "original intent"—because: (i) WE THE PEOPLE have left the Militia in a state of virtual nonexistence for so long (at least since 1903[4258]) that it is now "too late" for them to assert any right or power to revitalize the Militia. And (ii) through operation of "the living Constitution"—that is, through reinterpretations and reconstructions of the Constitution implicit in various statutes public officials have enacted over the years—Militia of the *pre-*constitutional type, "the Militia of the several States" which the Second Amendment recognizes as "well regulated Militia", have been permanently supplanted by a new, more relevant form of "militia" called "the militia of the United States" (the National Guard and the Naval Militia). Neither of these claims can withstand analysis, however.

1. WE THE PEOPLE'S failure to assert their rights no barrier to revitalization of the Militia. The theory that it is "too late" to revitalize the Militia is not based upon the supposition that revitalization would be impossible in practice,

---

[4256] U.S. Const. amend. II.

[4257] See, e.g., Webster's New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 1954, definition 4.b; Webster's Third New International Dictionary, ante note 330, at 1792, definition 2.b.

[4258] See An Act To promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, Act of 21 January 1903, CHAP. 196, 32 Stat. 775. See ante, at 786-793 and 1809-1811.

but instead upon an alleged legal impediment which renders revitalization impossible in principle: namely, that WE THE PEOPLE have permanently forfeited the constitutional right to "[a] well regulated Militia" by what lawyers' call "non-user".

Perhaps the simplest rejoinder to the charge of "non-user" is that it cannot be leveled exclusively at THE PEOPLE. Who, after all, is closely following the Constitution these days? Not Congress, which has invented "the militia of the United States", "the organized militia", "the unorganized militia", and all sorts of "gun controls" wholly incompatible with, if not utterly inimical to, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia".[4259] Not any President in living memory—for, although each of them has been "the Commander in Chief * * * of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States",[4260] apparently none of them has had any conception of what "the Militia of the several States" are (or acted on such a conception if he entertained it). Not the States, which not only have gone along with most everything Congress has done, but also in many instances have invented numerous abusive "gun controls" of their own. And not even the millions of private citizens who own firearms and belong to organizations that claim to defend and promote the Second Amendment. To be sure, by arming themselves these individuals are implementing the Constitution with respect to the Militia, albeit perhaps only unconsciously and in a primitive fashion. Yet even they have fallen for the party line that the National Guard is the present-day "militia"—otherwise, they would be demanding proper organization and training of "the body of the people" under governmental auspices in every State.[4261] If THE PEOPLE'S "non-user" of the Constitution through their inadvertence provides a reason to reject revitalization of "the Militia of the several States", then public officials' "non-user" of the Constitution through their malignant intent supplies an equally valid reason to repudiate "the militia of the United States" as the legitimate successor to "the Militia of the several States".

WE THE PEOPLE need not rely on the retort tu quoque leveled against public officials, however, because they have rights, powers, and especially duties unique to themselves that are not possibly subject to being emasculated or even enervated on a claim of "non-user". It is generally true that "[a] default in exercising a duty may not be resorted to as a reason for denying its existence".[4262] If, that is, such a duty actually exists; for the failure to exercise a duty over a long period of time can provide evidence that no such duty was ever thought to exist.[4263] As the [4259] Contrast 10 U.S.C. § 311 with U.S. Const. amend. II.

---

[4260] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4261] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[4262] Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U.S. 366, 381 (1918).

[4263] See, e.g., Federal Power Commission v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Company, 337 U.S. 498, 513 & note 20 (1949); Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 905, 907-910 (1997).

Declaration of Independence makes clear, though, there can be no question that "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of the[ ] ends" of a proper "Government", "the People" always retain and may always exercise "the Right to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government"; and that whenever "a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government".[4264] And if "the People" always retain "the Right to alter or to abolish" and the "right" and "duty" to "throw off" "any Form of Government" in toto, then they must also always retain the lesser-included right and duty to resurrect their particular "Form of Government" from ruination and to restore it to rectitude.[4265] Now, the existence of "a long train of abuses and usurpations" implies that "the People" have done little or nothing to exercise their "right" and to fulfill their "duty" for a substantial length of time, but instead have followed the dictate of "Prudence * * * that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes", and thus have provided more evidence "that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed".[4266] But they are not thereby estopped from taking remedial action when passivity becomes no longer prudent because evils have become no longer sufferable. They may (and perhaps should) wait even until that moment at which they finally recognize beyond any reasonable doubt "a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism", without thereby waiving their right and duty to take matters into their own hands at that juncture. And the very last individuals who should be suffered even to suggest the defense of "non-user" against "the People" are the very rogue public officials whose serial malfeasances have finally made it unavoidable that the "Form of Government" which they themselves have maladministered should be "alter[ed]", "abolish[ed]", or "throw[n] off".

Moreover, even were it conceivable for THE PEOPLE to have waived their rights under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" as to the Militia (or any other subject, for that matter) by "non-user" in principle, what evidence is available to prove that such has actually been the case in practice? In constitutional law—and certainly under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God"—"for a waiver to be effective, it must be clearly established that there was 'an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege'" in fact.[4267] One can never blithely "presume acquiescence in the loss of fundamental rights".[4268] Rather, [4264] Declaration of Independence (emphasis supplied).

---

[4265] See ante, Chapter 32.

[4266] Declaration of Independence.

[4267] Brookhart v. Janis, 384 U.S. 1, 4 (1966), quoting from Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464 (1938).

[4268] Ohio Bell Telephone Company v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U.S. 292, 307 (1937).

"every reasonable presumption should be indulged against [a] waiver".[4269] A "heavy burden rests on [public officials]" and "high standards of proof" are required "to demonstrate that [any individuals, let alone the entire PEOPLE, have] knowingly and intelligently waived" their constitutional rights.[4270] A finding of waiver requires conclusive evidence of both "warning" and "consent".[4271] "First, the relinquishment of the right must have been voluntary in the sense that it was the product of a free and deliberate choice, rather than intimidation, coercion, or deception. Second, the waiver must have been made with a full awareness of both the nature of the right being abandoned and the consequences of the decision to abandon it. Only if the 'totality of the circumstances * * * ' reveals both an uncoerced choice and the requisite level of comprehension" may one conclude that a constitutional right has been waived.[4272] Even that an individual is "an experienced attorney" who should know the consequence of not asserting his rights in a timely fashion is "by no means conclusive" on the issue of waiver.[4273]

So, what is "the totality of the circumstances" with respect to WE THE PEOPLE'S supposed acquiescence in rogue public officials' effective suppression of "the Militia of the several States"? On the face of it, no "intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege" can be found. If THE PEOPLE ever intended to eliminate their Militia in an unequivocally constitutional fashion, they would have amended the Constitution so as to license Congress to organize "the militia of the United States" and to consign everyone else to some sort of "unorganized militia", or to eliminate "the Militia of the several States" and "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" entirely. No such Amendment, though, has ever been ratified. No such Amendment has ever been proposed. No National public debate or discussion has ever been conducted as to whether such an Amendment should even be offered. And, in any event, no such Amendment, whatever its effect might be within and on the Constitution, could possibly foreclose THE PEOPLE in the future from revitalizing and deploying their Militia under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence. For "all men are by nature equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety".[4274]

[4269] Hodges v. Easton, 106 U.S. 408, 412 (1882). Accord, Aetna Insurance Company v. Kennedy to Use of Bogash, 301 U.S. 389, 393 (1937); Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464 (1938); Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 71 (1942); Brookhart v. Janis, 384 U.S. 1, 4 (1966).

[4270] Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 475 (1966).

[4271] Ohio Bell Telephone Company v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U.S. 292, 307 (1937).

[4272] Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 421 (1986).

[4273] Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 71 (1942).

[4274] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 1.

It might be objected that no actual Amendment of the Constitution was ever necessary, because THE PEOPLE'S "representatives" were always empowered "[t]o provide for organizing * * * the Militia" by statute;[4275] and they did so, perhaps in some little excess of their authority in the beginning, but nonetheless openly and persistently, in statute after statute, for over more than a century from 1903 until today.[4276] In the tortuous course of events leading to the present state of affairs, though, did any of those public officials ever provide THE PEOPLE with adequate "warning" as to the gravity of the situation, and seek their informed "consent" as to any aspect of this matter? Was THE PEOPLE'S supposed "waiver * * * made with a full awareness of both the nature of the right being abandoned and the consequences of the decision to abandon it"? As the legislation from 1903 onwards was being enacted, did public officials ever remind THE PEOPLE "[t]hat a well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms, is the proper, natural, and safe defence of a free state; that standing armies, in time of peace, should be avoided, as dangerous to liberty; and that, in all cases, the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power"?[4277] Did public officials ever explain to THE PEOPLE exactly what "the Militia of the several States" and "well regulated Militia" are—how they should be "organiz[ed], arm[ed], and disciplin[ed]"—why they should always be strictly differentiated from "the Army and Navy of the United States" and the "Troops, or Ships of War" that the States may "keep"—and that "the Militia of the several States" can never be incorporated within or subordinated to "the Army and Navy"? Did public officials ever make even a cursory attempt to show that "the militia of the United States", "the unorganized militia", and the incorporation of "the organized militia" into "the Army and Navy of the United States" were consistent with, or at least not antagonistic to, constitutional principles? On the other hand, have public officials ever warned THE PEOPLE that, as a result of the sequence of statutes from 1903, many of their most valuable rights, powers, privileges, and immunities have been "abandoned"—and what the nature and significance of that abandonment are? Namely, that these statutes have brought about, facilitated, and encouraged: (i) wholesale attacks and inroads on "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", both as individuals and collectively in "the Militia of the several States"; (ii) the establishment of a permanent "standing army" within a vast "military-industrial complex"; (iii) the entanglement of the United States in foreign military alliances and so-called "special relationships", adventures, imperialism, and aggression; (iv) the step-by-step erection within this country of a National para-military police-state apparatus; and, overall, (v) the systematic elimination of the "checks and balances" that are

---

[4275] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cls. 16 and 18.

[4276] See ante, at 786-793 and 1809-1811.

[4277] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

"necessary to the security of a free State".[4278] None of this has ever been laid before the American people. And for the worst of reasons: Instead of promoting "well regulated militia, composed of the body of the people, trained to arms", officials have imposed "the unorganized militia" and pervasive "gun controls" on THE PEOPLE. Instead of "avoid[ing]" "standing armies, in time of peace, * * * as dangerous to liberty", officials have made such "armies" permanent, ensconced them within a huge "military-industrial complex", and subsumed "the organized militia" within them. And instead of maintaining "the military * * * under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power", officials are now preparing "the standing army", with the aid of "the organized militia" and para-military auxiliaries drawn from ostensibly "civilian" law-enforcement agencies at every level of the federal system, to impose "martial law" on the entire country in the event of a major economic and political crisis arising out of those very officials' wrongdoing.[4279]

Are contemporary Americans supposed to believe that their forebears affirmatively agreed to license politicians to excise from their country's laws every one of the principles of popular participation in the Militia and popular control of "standing armies" on which this country was founded, and to substitute those principles' very opposites without a nationwide political debate? And are contemporary Americans supposed to believe that the present situation derived from THE PEOPLE'S "free and deliberate choice", based upon "the requisite level of comprehension" of what public officials really proposed and what the likely (and now fully proven) consequences of adopting those proposals would be—that, in short, THE PEOPLE, fully aware of all of the relevant facts and other considerations, actually decided to substitute (or to take the chance of substituting) "a[n un]free state" for "a free state" throughout the United States? Or is it more plausible to conclude that these events were engineered through political "deception"? The gullery of "bait and switch"—enacting a series of statutes that, step by step, substituted "the militia of the United States" for "the Militia of the several States", so that the latter could be effectively eliminated, without arousing too much public suspicion, by transferring the color of its constitutional title to the former. The imposture that the National Guard and the Naval Militia constitute some sort of "organized militia", when in fact they are the "Troops, or Ships of War" which the States may "keep" "with[ ] the Consent of Congress" on the condition that they be made available for service within "the Army and Navy of the United States" at essentially any time. The pretense that everyone eligible for the Militia but not enlisted in the "organized militia" can be consigned to "the unorganized militia", in which no one does anything related to a "militia"—so that "the unorganized militia" is not conceivably a part of any "well regulated militia", because it is not "regulated"

[4278] See U.S. Const. amend. II.

[4279] See ante, Chapter 48.

at all; indeed, is nothing more than a standing self-contradiction. And all of this concocted to serve the ends of various special interests.[4280]

Are WE THE PEOPLE'S disloyal, duplicitous, or simply dopey "representatives" to be exonerated—and THE PEOPLE inculpated—on the grounds that THE PEOPLE did not sufficiently suspect their "representatives" of stupidity and double-dealing, did not supervise and even investigate them closely enough, did not expose and broadcast their errors immediately upon discovery, did not "assemble * * * and * * * petition the Government for a redress of grievances" en masse,[4281] and did not remove the worst offenders from office at the earliest possible opportunity? Admittedly, self-government implies a duty of oversight. But vanishingly few among WE THE PEOPLE, unfortunately, are (or ever will be) constitutional scholars. So, in the first instance, common Americans without such knowledge not only have to rely on public officials but are fully entitled to do so. For all public officials "shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution",[4282] which "Oath or Affirmation" implicitly affirms that, to the fullest degree necessary "to support th[e] Constitution", they understand what the Constitution means and will do whatever it requires—without being constantly investigated, prodded, reproved, and reminded of their exposure to electoral defeat by their constituents. Yet, in the case of the effective replacement of "the Militia of the several States" by "the militia of the United States", WE THE PEOPLE'S "representatives" were all guilty, to one degree or another, of sloth, insouciance, incompetence, carelessness, charlatanism, reckless disregard of the truth, willful blindness, knowing falsehoods, suppression of evidence, duplicity, and above all the malignant ambition that overlooks or even accepts harm to the Nation as the price of personal advancement. So public officials' serial violations of their legal duty "to support th[e] Constitution" with respect to the Militia absolves THE PEOPLE of whatever dereliction of political duty may be laid at their doorstep for not intervening decisively before now.

2. Rogue public officials' long-time suppression of the Militia no barrier to their revitalization. The other side of the theory that it is "too late" to revitalize the Militia rests upon the supposition that revitalization is precluded, not so much because of any failure on the part of THE PEOPLE, as because of the success of "the adverse possessors" of the new legal dispensation—that is, the rogue public officials who have violated the Constitution for so long that they have somehow "gotten away with it", not only in the past but also in the present and for the future as well. For too long, Americans have been told—and all too many have come to believe—that "[i]t is an inadmissibly narrow conception of American constitutional law to confine it to the words of the Constitution and to disregard the gloss which

---

[4280] See B. Stentiford, The American Home Guard, ante note 1058, Chapter 1.

[4281] U.S. Const. amend. I.

[4282] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

life has written upon them"[4283]—the "gloss" being what rogue public officials have done quite outside "the words of the Constitution".

a. But "confin[ing] constitutional law * * * to the words of the Constitution" is "inadmissibly narrow" to whom and for what purpose? Why, to the very rogue officials who want: (i) to exercise powers "the words of the Constitution" do not delegate to the United States; (ii) to withhold from the States powers "the words of the Constitution" do not prohibit to them; and (iii) to deny to "the people" powers "the words of the Constitution" reserve to them.[4284] So the purveyors of this theory come into the court of public opinion with decidedly "unclean hands". For their ultimate goal is, not to determine what the Constitution actually means by dint of what it says, and to apply it according to that meaning and only to that meaning, but instead to impose upon it a different meaning altogether—a meaning derived from what they have actually done in defiance of the Constitution under the deceptive color of their offices. The meaning of the Constitution's words no longer determines public officials' actions; rather, their actions determine the meaning of the Constitution's words. In the legal equation, the constant (the Constitution) has been transmogrified into the dependent variable, and the original dependent variable (public officials' actions) has been turned into the independent variable which supplants any and every constant. Self-evidently, if usurpation can be rationalized ex post facto by changing the meaning of the Constitution to fit the facts of the usurpation, then no limit exists to what can be twisted within, inserted into, or excised from the Constitution. Anything from simpleminded error to the grossest calculated criminality can claim legitimacy as "the gloss which life * * * writ[es] upon the[words of the Constitution]" in supposedly indelible ink.

b. The notion that "[i]t is an inadmissibly narrow conception of American constitutional law to confine it to the words of the Constitution and to disregard the gloss which life has written upon them" is, in fact, not a principle of American constitutional law at all, but instead is the way the British "constitution" has always muddled along the tortuous path of "political might makes legal right"—that, for example, the King's successful assertion of some new claim of prerogative thereafter expanded his "constitutional" authority to the extent of that claim; or Parliament's successful assertion of some new discretion to constrain the King's prerogative (or even to depose the King from his throne altogether), thereafter expanded Parliament's "constitutional" power and diminished the King's "constitutional" prerogative to that degree (or even threatened his continued royalty). Thus, application of that notion effectively substitutes the British "constitution" for America's Constitution, thereby overthrowing not only the Constitution but also the Declaration of Independence.

[4283] Youngstown Sheet & Tube Company v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 610 ((1952) (Frankfurter, J., concurring).

[4284] See U.S. Const. amend. X.

"To prove" that "[t]he history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States", the Declaration "let Facts be submitted to a candid world". The "Facts" it then catalogued were marshaled to present a dark litany of "Oppressions"—which certainly was an accurate characterization of the situation, if the British "constitution" had been required to conform to some "higher law". Patriotic Americans believed that such a body of law existed: namely, "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God". The British Establishment disputed the matter, or at least denied that "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God" should be applied to their "Form of Government" in relation to its dealings with the Colonies in the manner the Colonists urged. This dispute was not amenable to compromise, at least not on the side of the patriots—for had they conceded that the British "constitution" was not subject to "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God", or that the application of those "Laws" to that "constitution" depended upon something as politically protean as "the gloss which life has written", they would have been compelled by intellectual honesty to concede that the "Oppressions" they excoriated could all be explained away as perhaps impolitic but nonetheless legally proper interpretations and implementations of the British "constitution" by their rightful governors. So the patriots had no choice (as the Declaration concluded) other than to assert the "Right * * * to be Free and Independent States", to absolve themselves "from all Allegiance to the British Crown", and to dissolve "all political connection between them[selves] and the State of Great Britain". That complete political separation necessarily also totally freed Americans from the vicious principle of the British "constitution" which licensed the ruling Establishment to treat its successful "injuries and usurpations" as commendable evolutionary steps in political science.

c. The notion that "[i]t is an inadmissibly narrow conception of American constitutional law to confine it to the words of the Constitution and to disregard the gloss which life has written upon them" has been rejected so many times, in so many ways, that it would be burdensome to list them all. Suffice it to say that how public officials may have misread and misapplied the Constitution, whether negligently or intentionally, is of no consequence in comparison to how it should have been construed according to its language viewed through the lenses of correct rules of interpretation.[4285] Constitutional questions "must be resolved not by past uncertainties, assumptions or arguments, but by the application of the controlling principles of constitutional interpretation".[4286] "[T]hat * * * constitutional protections against arbitrary government are inoperative when they become inconvenient or when expediency dictates otherwise is a very dangerous doctrine and if allowed to flourish would destroy the benefit of a written constitution".[4287] As a result, "no one acquires a vested or protected right in violation of the Constitution by long use, even when that span of time covers our entire national existence and even predates it".[4288] "[N]either the antiquity of a practice nor * * * steadfast legislative and judicial adherence to it through the centuries insulates it from constitutional attack".[4289] "Illegality cannot attain legitimacy through practice."[4290] And if "a bold and daring usurpation might be resisted, after [long and complete] acquiescence",[4291] surely a mindless "[g]eneral acquiescence cannot justify departure from the law".[4292] Therefore, "the gloss which life has written upon the[words of the Constitution]" is irrelevant, except insofar as it may be consistent with the true meaning of those words, and thereby constitutes evidence that the Constitution is perfectly capable of being understood.

---

[4285] See, e.g., The Propeller Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U.S. (12 Howard) 443, 458 (1851).

[4286] Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583, 597-598 (1938).

d. Although the theory that the Constitution should be construed according to "the gloss which life has written" is as politically and legally porous as a sieve, as a practical matter it is precisely the rough tool which one would expect to be wielded against revitalization of the Militia. For the plastic rule of construction of the British "constitution" is the only one that can serve the purpose. There being no words in the Militia Clauses of the original Constitution or in the Second Amendment that can be plausibly twisted to that end, something has to be injected into the text that is not there, or something else has to be excised from what is there, or both. And that can be accomplished only by appeals to "past uncertainties, assumptions or arguments", "steadfast legislative and judicial adherence to" some earlier "practice", and "[g]eneral acquiescence" in what has transpired heretofore. Unfortunately, this subversive heresy has long had, and continues to have, numerous adherents in Congress—and in the present-day Supreme Court, where they are but one vote away from controlling the Court's decisions on these matters, and as vocal as they are unequivocal as to what they would do were they to command a majority of the Justices.

(1) The intellectual strongman of the present anti-constitutional judicial cabal set up what could be called an argument of "positive prescription"—namely, that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" should not be taken seriously, because it has already been largely negated by pervasive governmental controls at all levels of the federal system. The Judiciary should refrain from interfering with "gun control", he contended, because [4287] Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 14 (1957) (opinion of Black, J., announcing the judgment of the Court).

---

[4288] Walz v. Tax Commission of the City of New York, 397 U.S. 664, 678 (1970).

[4289] Williams v. Illinois, 399 U.S. 235, 239 (1970).

[4290] Inland Waterways Corporation v. Young, 309 U.S. 517, 524 (1940).

[4291] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 401 (1819).

[4292] Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355, 369 (1932).

> by the end of the 20th century, in every State and many local communities, highly detailed and complicated regulatory schemes governed (and continue to govern) nearly every aspect of firearm ownership: Who may sell guns and how they must be sold; who may purchase guns and what type of guns may be purchased; how firearms must be stored and where they may be used; and so on.[4293]

The short and sufficient answer to this, of course, should be: "So what?" "[W]hen the meaning and scope of a constitutional provision are clear, it cannot be overthrown by legislative action, although several times repeated and never before challenged".[4294]

The longer and more intellectually satisfying answer is that, even if the existence of these "highly detailed and complicated regulatory schemes" were somehow relevant to the meaning and application of "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia", one would first need to determine which of those schemes were constitutional and which were not—not simply assume without investigation, let alone proof, that all of them were perfectly valid in all respects. Conceivably, some of these regulations might be constitutional, if they were consistent with "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" for the purpose of participating in "well regulated Militia". But in any particular case, their consistency or inconsistency would need to be gauged against constitutional standards. In most instances, the principles of the *pre-*constitutional Militia would serve that purpose; and the analyses would be relatively simple and straightforward. In other instances, though, the operations of actual "well regulated Militia" under modern conditions might need to be consulted—which, unfortunately, would be next to impossible, inasmuch as no "well regulated Militia" exists in any State today. And even with the proper standards at hand, the crazy-quilt of "gun control" that blankets this country could not easily be stripped away by judicial action. For very few decisions from the Supreme Court have touched specifically on the substance of the Second Amendment[4295]—and none of these is satisfactory, either on its own terms or as extrapolated as a "precedent" to guide the decisions of lower courts in other situations. So every one of the "highly detailed and complicated regulatory schemes" of "gun control" now in existence would have to be addressed case by case. How long would that take? And, no matter how long that process continued, who could depend upon a judicial determination in any of those cases to be either correct or final? After all,

---

[4293] McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___, ___ (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 28.

[4294] Fairbank v. United States, 181 U.S. 283, 311 (1901).

[4295] United States v. Miller, 307 U.S. 174 (1939); District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008); and McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. ___ (2010).

> [i]n the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of Courts constitute laws. They are, at most, only evidence of what the laws are; and are not of themselves laws. They are often re-examined, reversed, and qualified by the Courts themselves, whenever they are found to be either defective, or ill-founded, or otherwise incorrect.[4296]

That is, the Court's decisions are no more than previous statements of the views of its then-members on particular legal issues raised by particular litigants in certain specifically defined factual contexts—statements which can be (and in many instances have later been admitted by the Court itself, or recognized by others, to be) wrong, and which are not binding on the Court itself, let alone on anyone other than the original litigants, especially where constitutional issues are concerned.[4297] So, although these decisions may be entitled to whatever respect the force of their reasoning commands, they merit no legal, logical, or factual deference except insofar as they bear on the rights of the actual litigants in a "Case[ ]" or "Controvers[y]".[4298] And when their reasoning commands no respect, these decisions must be dismissed as legal nullities, except as against the actual litigants themselves. For "no amount of repetition of * * * errors in judicial opinions can make the errors true".[4299]

The best, if not the only effective, way to address this problem would be to enact comprehensive legislation revitalizing the Militia and declaring every inconsistent statute invalid, with stiff civil sanctions and criminal penalties (including attorney's fees and costs) to be meted out against anyone and everyone, without exception, who thereafter attempted to enforce any such statute, those penalties to be imposed in the course and as the consequence of each and every such attempted enforcement.[4300] Militiamen would then see to it that any of these old statutes which some fanatic proponents of "gun control" tried to keep alive would be quickly despatched. With swift, sure, and severe punishment deterring attempted enforcement, these statutes would simply lie dormant, until legislators could identify and specifically repeal them all.

[4296] Swift v. Tyson, 41 U.S. (16 Peters) 1, 18 (1842). "I understand the doctrine to be in such cases [i.e., cases in which a court overrules a previous decision], not that the law is changed, but that it was always the same as expounded by the later decision, and that the former decision was not, and never had been, the law, and is overruled for that very purpose." Gelpcke v. City of Dubuque, 68 U.S. (1 Wallace) 175, 211 (1864) (Miller, J., dissenting).

[4297] Numerous opinions of the Supreme Court have recognized this limitation on the binding nature of judicial precedents in constitutional adjudication. See ante, note 2566.

[4298] U.S. Const. art. III, § 2.

[4299] Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 107 (1985) (Rehnquist, C.J., dissenting).

[4300] For example, if a prosecutor attempted to bring a criminal charge against an individual under one of the superseded "gun-control" statutes, as part of the selfsame process the criminal charge against the individual would be dismissed, the criminal case would then be continued with the prosecutor as the new defendant, and a separate civil action would be initiated on behalf of the individual against the prosecutor.

(2) This same Justice also advanced what could be called an argument of "negative prescription"—namely, that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" should not be taken seriously, because today, and for a very long time heretofore, it has been rendered irrelevant by other supposed protections against tyranny. According to him, > the Civil War Amendments,[4301] the electoral process, the courts, and numerous other institutions today help to safeguard the States and the people from any serious threat of federal tyranny. How are state militias additionally necessary? It is difficult to see how a right that * * * has "largely faded as a popular concern" could possibly be so fundamental that it would warrant incorporation through the Fourteenth Amendment.[4302]

The short answer to this, of course, is that "state militias [are] additionally necessary" because the Constitution says so. "[T]he electoral process, the courts, and numerous other institutions" existed in 1788, when "the Militia of the several States" were incorporated into the original Constitution, and in 1791, when the Second Amendment first declared that "[a] well regulated Militia" based on "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" is "necessary to the security of a free State"—and were expected to continue to exist thereafter. Yet no one who read the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights imagined that WE THE PEOPLE expected those institutions to render the Militia irrelevant. And even after "the Civil War Amendments" were added in 1865, 1868, and 1869, Congress maintained the Militia in essentially the same form it had first provided in 1792.[4303]

The longer answer is that "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" has not "'largely faded as a popular concern'" because of some peculiar inherent doctrinal flaw, or because the Militia are obsolete in principle, or because they could not be made to function in practice under modern conditions. Certainly the concept that "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'"[4304] has not been disproven in the modern age—rather, the foremost lesson the Twentieth Century taught is the universal validity of that axiom, for both good and evil. Neither is it any less true today than in 1788 and 1791 that "a Republican Form of Government" is "one constructed on th[e] principle, that the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people".[4305] Nor can it be denied as a matter of fact,

---

[4301] U.S. Const. amends. XIII, XIV, and XV.

[4302] McDonald, 561 U.S. at ___ (Breyer, J., dissenting), Slip Opinion at 8.

[4303] Compare Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, §§ 1625 and 1628, 18 Stat. 285, 285 with An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271.

[4304] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[4305] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 457 (1793) (opinion of Wilson, J.).

law, or logic that "the Supreme Power resides in the body of the people" only when "the body of the people" controls the "'[p]olitical power [that] grows out of the barrel of a gun'". Nor can anyone refute the definition of "a well regulated militia" as "the body of the people, trained to arms".[4306] Rather, "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms" in "well regulated Militia" has "'largely faded as a popular concern'"

> • because all too many Americans simply grew tired of bearing the personal burden of self-government which service in the Militia imposes;
>
> • because their political leaders did not remind them that "[a] well regulated Militia" is "necessary to the security of a free State", not only on paper, but in the field as well;
>
> • because their leaders invented "the militia of the United States", "the organized militia", and "the unorganized militia" for the purpose of subordinating "the Militia of the several States" to a "standing army";
>
> • because their leaders promoted pervasive "gun controls" in order to constrain as much as possible "the right of the people to keep and bear [the very] Arms [most useful for well regulated Militia]", and eventually to disarm "the people" entirely; and
>
> • because in recent years both the supposed friends of the Second Amendment and its worst enemies have agreed that, if it guarantees any "right" at all, the Amendment secures only a very narrow "[individual] right * * * to keep and bear Arms", unconnected to "[a] well regulated Militia".

But whether the Militia have "'largely faded as a popular concern'" because of a state of affairs shortsighted Americans mistakenly came to desire, or one they were deceived into accepting, is beside the ultimate point. For "[t]he very purpose of [the] Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as * * * fundamental rights [that] may not be submitted to vote".[4307]

And is it not abundantly clear why and how "state militias [are] additionally necessary" "to safeguard the States and the people from any serious threat of * * * tyranny"? How effectively have "the Civil War Amendments, the electoral process, the courts, and numerous other institutions today" protected Americans from rogue public officials' insouciance (doing nothing), incompetence (doing something they should be doing, but doing it badly), and usurpation and tyranny (doing something they should not be doing at all, and doing it well)? Throughout the length and breadth of this country, average Americans are completely unprepared for such emergencies as natural disasters (hurricanes, tornadoes, and floods), industrial accidents (especially those chemical, biological, and nuclear in nature), a major failure in the national electrical grid, epidemics and pandemics, serious shortages in the production and distribution of food that could lead to famines, and economic crises and even collapse caused by breakdowns in the monetary and banking systems. Instead, they have been made utterly dependent upon small, élitist bureaucracies which more than once have proven themselves incapable of dealing with such problems. Would any of this be true if "the Militia of the several States" were properly revitalized?

---

[4306] Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[4307] West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943).

Worse yet, rogue public officials at every level of the federal system are aggressively advancing an agenda antagonistic to any rational conception of "a free State", but perfectly consistent with—because it is consciously aimed at—a totalitarian police state. At the Local and State levels, police forces, Sheriffs' departments, and other law-enforcement and emergency-response agencies are becoming increasingly para-militarized while becoming decreasingly concerned with the rights of the citizens they are supposed (in their self-congratulatory idiom) "to protect and serve". Brutality by the police and their unabashed contempt for legal limits on their actions are now the rule, not the exception—proving that next to no "good cops" exist anymore, or else they would have weeded out the "bad cops" long ago. At the level of the General Government, the Executive Branch even claims the Hitlerian prerogative simply to kill any American whom it labels an "enemy combatant" or "terrorist".[4308] And everywhere throughout America, WE THE PEOPLE find themselves bereft of any sure means to control the rogue public officials, political parties, and factions and other special-interest groups who and which brazenly corrupt governments, rig elections, foment foreign military adventures, infest the country with the degeneracy of cultural bolshevism, and loot the economy. Rather, these miscreants have succeeded in demolishing social solidarity by fragmenting Americans into mutually hostile groups that can be easily manipulated through the tactic of "divide and rule". Would any of this be possible, though, if "the Militia of the several States" were properly revitalized?

3. "The living Constitution" no barrier to revitalization of the Militia. Ultimately, all theories of "political prescription" fall back for their justifications on the doctrine of "the living Constitution". "The living Constitution" can be taken in three different senses, one of which is legitimate, the other two of which are not—but none of which could preclude revitalization of the Militia.

[4308] See ante, at 1605-1624.

a. In its sole legitimate sense, "the living Constitution" imports that WE THE PEOPLE originally did intend some of the terms in their "supreme Law of the Land"[4309] to be understood in what would be those terms' contemporary meanings, as those meanings might change from era to era. For example, what constitutes "Commerce" today includes methods of transportation that were unknown, and perhaps unimaginable, in the Founding Era.[4310] What constitutes "cruel and unusual punishments" may depend upon what severe punishments society has chosen to forgo inflicting for such lengthy periods of time that their reintroduction should not be tolerated.[4311] And, most important here, the character, quality, and even quantity of "Arms" that come within "the right of the people to keep and bear" for the purpose of being able to serve in "well regulated Militia" self-evidently depend upon the technology of the period in question.

The particular "Arms" that WE THE PEOPLE had in mind in the late 1700s were the "Arms" of a then-contemporary member of the Militia familiar in their own personal experiences. Thus, in its first Militia Act, Congress required that "every citizen * * * enrolled [in the Militia] * * * shall * * * provide himself with a good musket or firelock, a sufficient bayonet * * * , two spare flints, and * * * a pouch with a box therein to contain not less than twenty-four cartridges, suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball; or with a good rifle, * * * shot-pouch and powder-horn, twenty balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter pound of powder".[4312] Almost a century later, Congress reaffirmed those requirements.[4313] Nonetheless, THE PEOPLE could never have originally intended that only the particular types of "Arms" with which individuals could provide themselves in the late 1700s and 1800s would always uniquely define and delimit "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms", no matter what improvements in firearms supervened over the years. Even Congress did not believe that, because in 1874 it appropriated moneys "to be paid out * * * for the purpose of providing arms * * * for the whole body of the militia, either by purchase or manufacture";[4314] and in 1887 and 1900 it provided that "the purchase or manufacture of arms * * * for the militia * * * shall be made * * * as such arms * * * are now manufactured or otherwise provided for the use of the Regular

---

[4309] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

[4310] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3.

[4311] See U.S. Const. amend. VIII. Flexibility in this matter, however, would need to be tempered by the recognition that society may not have imposed such dire punishments only because no crimes sufficiently heinous to be worthy of them were commonplace—and that, when such crimes once again occurred, only the threat of such punishments could provide a sufficient deterrent.

[4312] An Act more effectually to provide for the National Defence by establishing an Uniform Militia throughout the United States, Act of 8 May 1792, CHAP. XXXIII, § 1, 1 Stat. 271, 271.

[4313] Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, § 1628, 18 Stat. 285, 285.

[4314] Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-1874), TITLE XVI, THE MILITIA, § 1661, 18 Stat. 285, 290.

Army"[4315]—which enabled the Militia to be provided with up-to-date arms at public expense. So the noun "Arms" must be construed in a generic—and therefore expandable, or "living"—sense, in terms of what equipment, at a particular time and in a particular place, will enable a "Militia" to be sufficiently "well regulated" that it can effectively provide "the security of a free State".[4316] The "Arms" Congress specified in 1792 and then again in 1874, 1887, and 1900 were, first, the "Arms" typically carried by a light infantryman, irregular, guerrillero, partisan, or franc-tireur in those times (because the Militia employed the tactics of all such fighters, depending on circumstances); and, second, the "Arms" generally available to individuals in the free market that would serve those purposes—from which the deduction is inescapable that Congress understood such types and that source of "Arms" to be within "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms". So, today, "Arms" would not be limited to "musket[s]", "firelock[s]", or "good rifle[s]" with flintlock or percussion actions, or to the firearms "the Regular Army" carried in 1887 or 1900, but would embrace any and every type of long gun and hand gun private firearms manufacturers might produce that could in any way serve any of the purposes for which modern Militiamen might be deployed—including the ubiquitous semiautomatic (or even burst-fire) rifle in a typical military caliber, equipped with a detachable magazine, pistol grip, flash suppressor, and bayonet lug, which contemporary manufacturers supply in numerous varieties and in great numbers to the private market, and which in one form or another are "now manufactured or otherwise provided for the use of the Regular Army".

Perhaps it would be better, however, not to describe this method of construing the Constitution as involving a "living" document at all, because it is really the inevitable result of "original intent". Acceding to the legitimacy of the term "living Constitution" in any usage exposes constitutional law to all sorts of subtle confusions and abuses. For the prime recent example, Congress singled out precisely those features which define a modern firearm particularly suitable for Militia service because it is "now manufactured or otherwise provided for the use of the Regular Army", in order to create a class of so-called "assault weapons" the possession of which by private citizens it largely prohibited.[4317] This statute plainly

---

[4315] An act to amend section sixteen hundred and sixty-one of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, Act of 12 February 1887, CHAP. 129, § 3, 24 Stat. 401, 402; An Act To amend section one of the Act of Congress approved February twelfth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, entitled "An Act to amend section sixteen hundred and sixty-one of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia", Act of 6 June 1900, CHAP. 805, 31 Stat. 805.

[4316] See U.S. Const. amend. II. See ante, at 1353-1375.

[4317] See An Act To control and prevent crime ("Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994"), Act of 13 September 1994, Pub. L. 103-322, TITLE XI—FIREARMS, Subtitle A—Assault Weapons ("Public Safety and Recreational Firearms Use Protection Act"), §§ 110102 and 110103, 108 Stat. 1796, 1996-2000. This statute expired of its own force in 2004. § 110105(2), 108 Stat. at 2000. But "gun controllers" aggressively agitate for its resurrection in one form or another.

violated Congress's trust and duty "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia",[4318] and not "[t]o provide for [dis]arming" "the body of the people" who form the Militia.[4319] If Congress chose not "[t]o provide for * * * arming * * * the Militia" itself, at least it should have done nothing to prevent Americans eligible for the Militia from arming themselves through the free market. At the time of this "assault-weapons ban", Congress had declared "the unorganized militia" to be a component of "the militia of the United States", and to consist of "all able-bodied males of at least 17 years of age and * * * under 45 years of age who are, or who have made a declaration of intention to become, citizens of the United States" and "who are not members of the National Guard or the Naval Militia".[4320] The constitutional problems with these definitions aside, Congress should have been estopped from denying—indeed, it should have realized the utter absurdity in denying—that its "assault-weapons ban" prohibited the very people it declared to be part of "the militia of the United States" from obtaining the very weapons best suited to service in "the militia of the United States". Doubtlessly, though, rogue Members of Congress who intended to violate the Second Amendment through the semantic trick of demonizing the very firearms most suitable for Militia service as nasty "assault weapons" found support for their scheme from merely ignorant Members led astray by the "flexibility" in definitions of constitutional terms "the living Constitution" sanctions.

b. The first of the plainly illegitimate senses of "the living Constitution" posits that no one today can reliably determine what certain words or phrases in the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights actually meant to Americans in the late 1700s; and, therefore, to impart any legal effect to this obscure verbiage, contemporary public officials must impute to those words and phrases modern meanings—which, in practice, reduces to meanings congenial to those officials' particular legal, political, economic, social, cultural, or ideological points of view, presuppositions, or prejudices. Unfortunately for these special pleaders, no one can gainsay that any statute couched "in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law"[4321]—that is, the ability to be understood. Therefore, this version of "the living Constitution" is self-defeating. For, although the supposedly mysterious passages in the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights might have been "law" in the late 1700s, when WE THE PEOPLE knew what they meant, today they must be deemed unconstitutional (as the lawyers' jargon has it, "void for vagueness"), because no one any longer has any idea of what [4318] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16 (emphasis supplied). See ante, at 50-54.

---

[4319] See Virginia Declaration of Rights (1776) art. 13.

[4320] 10 U.S.C. § 311.

[4321] Connally v. General Construction Company, 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926).

they import, or it would not be necessary for public officials to "guess at [their] meaning[s]" by imparting new meanings to them. And this is, of course, entirely a process of "guess[ing]", because the supposedly new meanings might coincidentally be the same as the old meanings that have been lost in the mists of lexicographical time; or they might be quite different; but, in either case, no one can possibly know. Substitution of new words for old—for the process cannot qualify as "interpretation" or "construction", inasmuch as the old words are supposedly unintelligible—cannot cure the problem of vagueness, because the difficulty does not lie in the definitions of the new words (which presumably can be confirmed) but in the choice of which new words should replace the old ones (which is necessarily arbitrary, the meanings of the old words being unavailable as referents). In any event, "the living Constitution" in this sense is not relevant to the question of revitalizing the Militia today, because there can be no question as to what the phrases "Militia of the several States",[4322] "organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia",[4323] and "[a] well regulated Militia" and "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms"[4324] meant in the late 1700s.

c. The second of the illegitimate senses of "the living Constitution" posits that, although certain words and phrases in the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights are as understandable today as they were in the late 1700s, nevertheless they now ought to be reinterpreted in order to comport with contemporary political, economic, social, and cultural theories, practices, and mores. This version of "the living Constitution" does not escape the problem of vagueness, but merely redirects its focus. Instead of contending that modern verbiage must be substituted for words and phrases of unknown meaning in the original Constitution and the Bill of Rights, proponents of this version assert that public officials ought to reinterpret words and phrases of always determinate and once accepted meanings in order to make them gibe with novel, often complex and controversial, concepts that not only lie entirely outside of the Constitution but also themselves require interpretation and thereby invite endless disagreements. These disputes open up the matter of misconstruction to such a degree that everyone—not only "men of common intelligence", but even the individuals of extraordinary intelligence who concoct and debate these matters of protean political, economic, and social policy—"must necessarily guess at [the Constitution's] meaning and differ as to its application". And that the vagueness in this version of "the living Constitution" is extrinsic, rather than intrinsic, to the Constitution (and even to the science of law) exacerbates the problem. Nonetheless, as will be explained anon, this version of "the living Constitution" could prove to be quite useful for revitalization of the Militia.

[4322] U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

[4323] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 16.

[4324] U.S. Const. amend. II.

d. In the latter two senses, "the living Constitution" amounts to a collection of legal fictions which rogue public officials concoct as they go along. Neither version is based upon the actual words and phrases of the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights, except to the extent that officials coöpt the bare verbiage as empty vessels into which they then pour theretofore unheard-of meanings. Neither version recognizes the crucial legal distinction between the British and the American ideas of a "constitution"—namely that the Constitution of the United States is not a shot glass which officials may fill with whatever rot-gut legal moonshine a credulous population will swallow, but instead is an already printed page the words on which say what they mean and mean what they say, and neither more nor less. Neither version finds support in the history of the Founding Era—for no Framer, Founder, or American patriot of consequence has ever been discovered who publicly asserted that no one knew what some words or phrases in the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights meant at that time or might mean at any subsequent time, or that either the original Constitution or the Bill of Rights should be construed as a "living" document the meaning of which would and should change in the future, perhaps as soon as the very day after ratification. And neither version comports with elementary human psychology—for who would be so devoid of prudence as to agree to adopt a "constitution" the meaning of which in various important particulars was unknown to him, or could change in an unpredictable fashion at the hands of unknown individuals for unspecified reasons at an uncertain time thereafter?! No one would enter into the simplest of short-term commercial contracts that dealt with only one commodity, let alone submit every aspect of his life to a permanent government with wide-ranging powers, on such absurd terms.

e. Nonetheless, as folk wisdom has it, "It takes a crooked stick to beat a mad dog!" And although it is always wise to "use enough gun" if possible, one may be reduced to using whatever gun is available from whatever source. So, if rogue public officials routinely rely upon "the living Constitution" for their own nefarious purposes, then they are estopped to deny that WE THE PEOPLE may also employ "the living Constitution" for THE PEOPLE'S laudable purposes. And for THE PEOPLE'S purposes, the second version of "the living Constitution" fills the bill quite well.

(1) Nothing about "the living Constitution" demands that it operate only at the behest and through the agency of public officials, but not under the control of THE PEOPLE themselves, independently of all public officials (except as the mere executors of THE PEOPLE'S will). After all, in America, WE THE PEOPLE are the sovereigns.[4325] So, as a matter of fundamental political principle, THE PEOPLE have a greater right to dictate the direction and substance of "political prescription" than do any public officials. WE THE PEOPLE originally "ordain[ed] and establish[ed]

[4325] See Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dallas) 419, 454, 456 (opinion of Wilson, J.), 471-472 (opinion of Jay, C.J.) (1793).

th[e] Constitution",[4326] and by refraining from exercising their absolute "Right * * * to alter or to abolish" or "to throw off" the Constitution,[4327] they continue to "ordain and establish" it from day to day. As America's supreme legislators, THE PEOPLE are the supreme interpreters of their own law—for "[t]he power to enact carries with it final authority to declare the meaning of the legislation".[4328] THE PEOPLE can foresee the needs of "the living Constitution" far better and more quickly than any public officials, too, because officials are merely THE PEOPLE'S "representatives", at least once removed from THE PEOPLE themselves, and therefore inevitably less knowledgeable than THE PEOPLE about the actual day-to-day state of affairs throughout this country. And, according to the tenets of "the living Constitution", no one can dispute the conclusions to which THE PEOPLE eventually come, because their decisions will uniquely define the substance of "the living Constitution" at those particular points in time.

(2) Moreover, nothing precludes "the living Constitution" from arriving, through its normal "evolutionary" process but under the guidance of WE THE PEOPLE'S "intelligent design", at a construction with respect to the Militia which is equivalent to what an interpretation performed according to the principles of "original intent" prescribes. After all, "the living Constitution" is not static, but moves with the times, as circumstances change. Indeed, it is potentially in constant motion, because what may have been an acceptable construction yesterday may not necessarily be acceptable today, and probably will not be acceptable tomorrow. Neither is "evolution" of "the living Constitution" unidirectional, because society does not travel along only one permanently set pathway laid out on only one point of the legal compass. Nor is "the living Constitution" constrained by any fixed boundaries—rather, everything about it is flexible, malleable, plastic, even fluid, because it must conform its shape to whatever needs society perceives as pressing. And inasmuch as WE THE PEOPLE are society, they must determine what are society's needs as they change from day to day.

Because "the living Constitution" can adopt essentially any principles that seem useful, it enables THE PEOPLE figuratively to turn the clock forward or backward in order to set the right time in the present. No reason exists why a "new" construction of "the living Constitution" cannot revivify and incorporate some "old" construction of the original Constitution or Bill of Rights, the usefulness of which has recently become apparent. Indeed, if the operation of "the living Constitution" partakes of degrees of legitimacy at all, the reassertion of some construction which events have proven expedient and that accorded with and advanced "original intent" would be the most legitimate form of constitutional "evolution" possible.

[4326] U.S. Const. preamble.

[4327] See Declaration of Independence.

[4328] Propper v. Clark, 337 U.S. 472, 484 (1949).

All of this being so, WE THE PEOPLE can now determine that the construction of the Constitution which has departed from the *pre-*constitutional principles of the Militia, after a fair trial for over one hundred years, has been found decidedly wanting. The effective suppression of "the Militia of the several States"; the invention of "the militia of the United States", "the organized militia", and "the unorganized militia"; the creation of a huge "standing army", a vast "military-industrial complex", and a National *para-*military police-state apparatus against which effectively nonexistent Militia can exercise no "checks and balances"; the involvement of the United States in aggressive, imperialistic military adventures across the globe; the unpreparedness of the general populace to deal with any true emergency at any level of the federal system, and the consequent vulnerability of society to myriad domestic dangers—all of this has proven unworkable, politically destabilizing, economically unsustainable, and withal inimical to the freedom, prosperity, and general well-being, not only of Americans, but also of peoples throughout the world. The times demand a better construction of the Constitution with respect to the Militia. And WE THE PEOPLE can now determine that this better construction must conform to the Constitution's "original intent", which has never really been suggested, let alone actually put into practice, at any time since at least the dawn of the Twentieth Century, and therefore has never been proven to be insufficient for this country's present pressing needs. Thus, on the very principles of "the living Constitution" itself THE PEOPLE can now construe it anew and reinstate its "original intent"—and no proponent of "the living Constitution" can complain. So, within the terms of "the living Constitution", no argument against revitalization of "the Militia of the several States" is possible—including even preëmption, because the existence, extent, and effect of prëemption, too, are matters of constitutional construction, and therefore are just as subject to the mutability of "the living Constitution" as any other constitutional doctrine.

CONCLUSION

Extreme economic, political, and social dislocations and conflicts throughout America will inevitably result if "the Militia of the several States" are not revitalized in the near future.

No one can deny that, as of this writing, an economic crisis of unprecedented proportions is looming on the horizon, threatening not only the United States but even the entire world. No one can predict exactly when or where this crisis will break out in its full fury; or how, in what directions, or at what velocity it will spread. Yet, although a calamity of such magnitude is unprecedented in economic history, its worst effects are largely foreseeable. No one with a scintilla of insight doubts that at some point in the near future hyperinflation, depression, or hyperinflation coupled with or followed immediately by depression will sweep across the United States. The dire effects of these events will not be exclusively economic in nature, either. Economic collapse will bring in train political and social dislocations on a massive scale. In the ultimate analysis, however, this is because the impending economic crisis is, first and foremost, the inevitable result of political and social crises that have long festered, but that average Americans, for one reason or another, have failed, neglected, or refused to recognize.

Those who carp that such descriptions and predictions represent the nadir of pessimism forget the folk wisdom that "a pessimist is an optimist who knows the facts". The facts being undeniable, the question becomes: "Now what?" To answer that query requires examining the sources of the crisis, where it may lead, and how its inevitable and unavoidable worst effects can be mitigated.

Sound analysis of most modern political problems should always apply the principle "follow the money". That counsel has never been more apt than it is today. The present economic crisis centers around fiat currency, fractional-reserve central banking, and the integration of bank and state in and through the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Reserve System is a corporative-state arrangement: namely, a governmentally sponsored cartel of private bankers and financial speculators that exercises authority delegated under color of law supposedly to serve both public and private interests in the area of currency and credit.[4329] What has become obvious, however, and should always have been self-evident from the nature of all such systems—particularly in the field of money and banking where the potential for redistribution of wealth through the operation of such a cartel reaches its apogee—is that the personal interests of the cartel's operators and their political allies inevitably take precedence over the public interest in the general welfare of common Americans.

---

[4329] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 746-866.

When President Franklin D. Roosevelt put such a scheme of cartelization into effect throughout American private industry in the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933,[4330] the Supreme Court, in an unanimous opinion, denounced it, saying: "Such a delegation of legislative power is unknown to our law and is utterly inconsistent with the constitutional prerogatives and duties of Congress."[4331] In the face of this decision, the only reasons the Federal Reserve System still exists are that: (i) it was not subsumed within the National Industrial Recovery Act in 1933, but was the product of a different statute enacted in 1913; and (ii) the Supreme Court has never heard a case challenging the banking cartel on those grounds (and probably never will). Yet, that the Federal Reserve System has usurped powers in the field of money and banking which are "unknown to our law and * * * utterly inconsistent with the constitutional prerogatives and duties of Congress" must have the most seriously deleterious consequences.

In general, through corporativism factions and other special-interest groups employ their political influence in order to obtain economic control over some segment of the economy. That control increases the economic power of those groups, enabling them to garner even more political influence, in a vicious spiral. The unavoidable problem, however, is that fractional-reserve banking, howsoever organized, is inherently unstable. This would be true even if the banks were required to maintain their currency on some sort of "gold standard", as were the Federal Reserve Banks initially.[4332] The instability becomes even more pronounced when the emission of the banks' currency lacks any fixed relationship whatsoever to gold, to silver, or to any other valuable commodity, but instead is bottomed on the incurrence of public and private debt.[4333] For, as Thomas Jefferson correctly [4330] AN ACT To encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes, Act of 16 June 1933, CHAPTER 90, 48 Stat. 195.

---

[4331] A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 537 (1935). See also Carter v. Carter Coal Company, 298 U.S. 238, 311 (1936).

[4332] See An Act To provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes ("Federal Reserve Act"), CHAP. 6, §§ 14(a) and 16, ¶¶ 1 and 3 through 6, 38 Stat. 251, 264-267 (each Federal Reserve regional bank "shall maintain reserves in gold or lawful money of not less than thirty-five per centum against its deposits and reserves in gold of not less than forty per centum against its Federal reserve notes in actual circulation"). This spurious "gold standard" collapsed catastrophically a mere twenty years after Congress concocted it. See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 867-1212.

[4333] See 12 U.S.C. §§ 411 through 416; and 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c).

observed, "paper is poverty, * * * it is only the ghost of money, & not money itself".[4334] Worst of all, stabilization of such an arrangement becomes a veritable impossibility when the banks are aggregated into a single nationwide pyramid, when their profits depend upon the expansion of debt throughout the national economy, and when the General Government fails to require them to maintain the purchasing-power of their paper currency (Federal Reserve Notes) on a par with all other forms of United States currency, including gold and silver coinage. The extent of this failure can be gauged from: (i) the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to "redeem gold certificates owned by the Federal reserve banks at times and in amounts the Secretary decides are necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of each kind of United States currency";[4335] (ii) "the [statutory] value * * * for the purpose of issuing those [gold] certificates, of 42 and two-ninth dollars a fine troy ounce";[4336] (iii) the face value of a one-ounce United States American Eagle gold coin of "fifty dollar[s]";[4337] (iv) the refusal of the General Government to redeem Federal Reserve Notes for either gold or silver;[4338] and (v) the market value of an American Eagle gold coin in Federal Reserve Notes, which as of this writing exceeds some thirty-five times its face value.[4339]

Being basically an arrangement with the vicious characteristics of a Ponzi-scheme, in order to keep its head above water the Federal Reserve System has been compelled constantly to expand the set of those individuals and institutions who or which use, or are forced to use, its currency, and to generate ever-increasing amounts of debt denominated and payable in that currency. Having established Federal Reserve Notes as National "legal tender" in 1933; having removed the restraints of required redemption of those notes in gold in 1933 (domestically) and 1971 (internationally); having shackled the Treasury of the United States to a policy of endless monetization of public debt; having obtained the ability to manipulate and loot domestic markets in the guise of making what is euphemistically called "monetary policy"; and even having assumed the imperialistic rôle of an ersatz "world central bank" emitting an ersatz "world reserve currency" which has enabled it and its clients to pillage markets across the globe—having done all this, nevertheless the Federal Reserve System now finds itself confronted with serial crises, for which only one solution appears workable: an even greater expansion [4334] Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Edward Carrington, 27 May 1788, in The Works of Thomas Jefferson, ante note 3952, Volume V, at 403.

---

[4335] 31 U.S.C. § 5119(a).

[4336] 31 U.S.C. § 5117(b).

[4337] 31 U.S.C. § 5112(a)(7).

[4338] See 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c).

[4339] See, e.g., <www.kitco.com> for current prices of gold measured in Federal Reserve Notes. From time to time, of course, this disparity varies. Nonetheless, since 1971, when the official value of gold was 35 "dollars" per ounce, the disparity has exhibited a significant increase, which shows no sign of abating.

than ever before of fiat currency, bank "credit", and United States Treasury debt, to be dumped on a world increasingly less willing to accept them.

Such hyperbolic economic imperialism must fail, unless it is coupled with political imperialism. And political imperialism in service of what used to be described and denounced as "the Money Power" will not succeed unless it is backed up by outright military imperialism, "the iron fist in an iron glove"—because foreign nations will not sit still for long while their economies are manipulated from New York City and the District of Columbia; while their natural resources are extracted at bargain-basement prices; and while their populations are hired at coolie wage-rates and then paid in ever-depreciating Federal Reserve Notes, fictitious bank "credit", and United States Treasury debt beyond repayment by any amount of taxes the General Government could conceivably levy on the American people. Which international resistance, far more plausibly than the so-called "global war on terrorism", explains the metastasis of American military bases throughout the world over the last several decades, and especially the doctrine of "preëmptive war"—that is, naked aggression—first brazenly enunciated by George W. Bush's Administration. Actually, this "Bush Doctrine" itself was nothing new. It was, and remains, merely the logical expansion of the old "Brezhnev Doctrine" embossed with the Stars and Stripes rather than the Hammer and Sickle. Under "the Brezhnev Doctrine", the Soviet Union claimed the right to invade any country among its satellites that deviated too far from the Communist Party line as enunciated in Moscow. Under "the Bush Doctrine", the United States claims the right to impose crippling economic sanctions upon, to ring with military bases, and if those tactics do not work then to foment ersatz "wars of national liberation" against, to bomb, and even to invade (directly or through armed proxies) any country, without distinction, so bold as to refuse to subordinate its economy to the dictates of the Axis of Financial Fraud that runs from New York City to the District of Columbia.

Domestically, too, the Federal Reserve System finds itself increasingly on the defensive. The Federal Reserve's currency—both paper Federal Reserve Notes and electronic bank balances—is based entirely upon debt.[4340] Its value in exchange depends upon the free market's perception that these debts will, in fact, be paid. So, because the veriest dolt now realizes that the level of both public and private indebtedness has become unsustainable, and that much of this indebtedness as well as the system that made it possible is steeped in fraud and other wrongdoing, crises in banking and finance are proliferating and intensifying at all levels of America's federal system—setting the stage for an economic catastrophe, because apparently all too many Americans who could influence events in a positive direction are too stubborn to admit that, when an unsound currency stands on the brink of self-destruction, a sound alternative currency should be introduced into the economy as soon as possible.

---

[4340] See 12 U.S.C. §§ 411 through 416; and 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c).

As dangerous as it is, the Federal Reserve System is not the true core of the problem. After all, the banking cartel did not create itself. Neither has it been maintained in operation, and its powers steadily augmented, through the years solely by its own efforts. To be sure, the bankers and speculators for whom the Federal Reserve System fronts aggressively promoted it every step of the way. But, by themselves alone, they could have done nothing. Rogue public officials were the effective cause of the banking cartel's creation by statute, its accretion of ever-more-abusive powers and privileges by statute, and the serial calamities it has been allowed to bring about under color of law. So, when one "follows the money" to its ultimate destination, one inevitably arrives at rogue public officials' seats of power. If the Federal Reserve System is a monster, particular officials must be identified as playing the rôle of Herr Doktor Frankenstein.

The Constitution was designed around multiple "checks and balances" in order to prevent what the ancient Greeks denominated "ochlocracy"—that is, mob rule, the ultimate degeneration of democracy. The basic plan was to interpose "representatives" between WE THE PEOPLE themselves and the exercise of certain government powers.[4341] As Alexander Hamilton explained,

> [i]t is a just observation that the people commonly intend the PUBLIC GOOD. This often applies to their very errors. But their good sense would despise the adulator who should pretend that they always reason right about the means promoting it. They know from experience that they sometimes err; and the wonder is that they so seldom err as they do, beset as they continually are by the wiles of parasites and sycophants, by the snares of the ambitious, the avaricious, the desperate, by the artifices of men who possess their confidence more than they deserve it. When occasions present themselves in which the interests of the people are at variance with their inclinations, it is the duty of the persons whom they have appointed to be the guardians of those interests to withstand the temporary delusion in order to give them time and opportunity for more cool and sedate reflection.[4342]

The "persons whom the[people] * * * appointed to be the guardians of th[eir true] interests" Hamilton and the other Founders presumed would be men of liberal education, secure wealth, and wide experience in the world who would remain uninfluenced by "the ambitious, the avaricious, [and] the desperate".

---

[4341] See, e.g., The Federalist Nos. 10 and 51 (James Madison). Some governmental powers, such as the franchise, THE PEOPLE were to exercise directly, otherwise it could hardly have been claimed that their "representatives" in fact "represented" them. See U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 1.

[4342] The Federalist No. 71 (bold-faced emphasis supplied).

On the other side, the Founders also took care to establish "checks and balances" against "oligarchy"—the perversion of "aristocracy", when a few men rule with an eye towards augmenting their own wealth and social positions rather than advancing the best interests of the entire community.[4343] Here, besides prohibiting a formal oligarchy by outlawing all "Title[s] of Nobility",[4344] the Constitution established the fundamental requirement that, in the exercise of every one of its powers, the General Government should "establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty" for WE THE PEOPLE as a whole.[4345]

Under ordinary circumstances, these "checks and balances" might have sufficed to maintain political rectitude, economic prosperity, and social stability in America—if the electoral process had consistently brought forward politicians who had fairly represented the common interests of THE PEOPLE, rather than the selfish interests of various factions. The actual experience during the last century, however, has been that "the ambitious, the avaricious, [and] the desperate"—ever-intent upon working against THE PEOPLE'S interests, as such degenerates always are—have decade after decade finagled themselves into the positions of THE PEOPLE'S duplicitous and disloyal "guardians". Instead of assisting THE PEOPLE to "withstand * * * temporary delusions in order to give them time and opportunity for more cool and sedate reflection", rogue politicians and officials have systematically propagated permanent delusions, particularly in the field of money and banking. In this way, the Founders' "checks and balances" have been perverted into efficacious means to obstruct democracy in its best sense, and instead to promote oligarchy in its very worst manifestations. Today, those Americans with the eyes to see realize that voting is next to useless, because domination of the electoral machinery by the "two" major political parties, coupled with various forms of electoral fraud, guarantee that only politicians willing to prostitute public offices to factions and other special interests are likely to be nominated, let alone elected. "[T]he right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances"[4346] is a largely bootless endeavor, too, because "the people" are petitioning, not their own, but their enemies' "representatives". THE PEOPLE'S appeals to the courts are no less feckless, because in almost all cases their enemies' "representatives" have appointed, or their enemies' political parties have [4343] See ante, note 3668.

---

[4344] U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8 and § 10, cl. 1.

[4345] U.S. Const. preamble.

[4346] U.S. Const, amend. I.

arranged for the election of, the judges.[4347] And supposed "law-enforcement" agencies at every level of the federal system literally get away with murder, mayhem, and theft at common Americans' expense, because their personnel know that legislators, prosecutors, and judges will immunize them from punishment for any crimes they commit which further the agenda of this country's ruling factions.

To be sure, Americans long ago should have recognized and resisted the steady transmogrification of "checks and balances" in supports of constitutional government into "checks and balances" in opposition to it. Principiis obstate.[4348] Such degeneration should have been arrested at its very onset by WE THE PEOPLE'S searching inquiries into politicians' and public officials' true political beliefs, proclivities, and motives; into the credibility of their campaign-promises and the realities of their records in office; and especially into their personal backgrounds and activities, as well as those of their families and business associates, with respect to crooked deals they might have made, were making, or were likely to make with special interests in order to feather their own nests. With such information in hand, THE PEOPLE should have applied irresistible pressure against officials to do what as candidates they had promised to do, and in any event to do what needed to be done in the community's interest—and if they failed or refused, then THE PEOPLE should have forced them to choose between the stark alternatives of either resigning their offices sine die, so that some honest and competent individuals could assume those positions; or facing some kind of punishment, whether political (defeat at the next election), social and economic (shunning of their persons), or legal (civil litigation or criminal prosecution); and in any case publicly acknowledging their misbehavior, so that if they were not rendered contrite they would at least be thoroughly humiliated.

The severity of such a continuous process of permanent public inquisition—what could be called "the Eight I's Policy": namely, illuminate, investigate, interrogate, implicate, indict, inculpate, incarcerate, and infame—would have been, and today would still be, fully justifiable, because "[t]he republican principle demands that the deliberate sense of the community should govern the conduct of those to whom they intrust the management of their affairs".[4349] "[I]n a republic * * * every magistrate ought to be personally responsible for his behavior in office"—and "the two greatest securities the[people] can have for the faithful exercise of any delegated power [are], first, the restraints of public opinion * * * and, second, the opportunity of discovering with facility and clearness the [4347] With respect to the judicial subversion of America's constitutional monetary system in particular, one need look no farther for a gross example than the Supreme Court's transparently dishonest performance in the Gold Clause Cases. See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1127-1211.

---

[4348] "Stand against the beginnings." Figuratively, "oppose evils at their inception".

[4349] The Federalist No. 71 (Alexander Hamilton).

misconduct of the persons they trust, in order either to their removal from office or to their actual punishment in cases which admit of it."[4350]

Unfortunately, even before the erection of the Federal Reserve System in 1913, WE THE PEOPLE'S jealous scrutiny of public officials, as well as the special-interest groups that manipulate them, had already diminished to a dangerous degree. Thereafter, sloth, narrow self-centeredness, complacency, wishful thinking, apathy, resignation, and at length even identification with the aggressor rapidly replaced as National characteristics that "'eternal vigilance'" which the Founders knew from personal experience to be "'the price of liberty'".[4351] And, step by step as common Americans' willingness to police their public servants gradually waned, the ability of factions and other greedy special interests to misdirect the course of public affairs waxed. So, today, "the price of liberty" has become very dear, indeed. Having by their own insouciance and inaction allowed their inveterate enemies to sow the wind with dragons' teeth, Americans are now constrained by circumstances to reap the whirlwind of their own irresponsibility.

What remains of a free market in this country has managed somehow to cope with the consequences of average Americans' failure to police rogue politicians, public officials, and special-interest groups. Until now. Now so heavy a burden and so great a strain have been put upon it that it is breaking down. Indeed, it must collapse entirely if the unit of currency is destroyed, because then the entire structure of prices and the possibility of rational economic calculation will go into the discard, too. Worse yet, as a consequence of political and economic failures on the bridge, America's ship of state is about to enter the historically uncharted waters of social failure. Unless this course is changed, the voyage will follow a route familiar in such disasters: namely, from economic crisis, to social chaos, to political repression, to National destruction.

As the individuals in temporary charge of the political system prove incompetent and impotent to cage the gigantic financial predators in the world of high finance, but instead set them loose to feed upon common Americans as upon so many tethered sheep, and even aid and abet them in doing so—as the Nation's economy melts down—and as middle- and lower-class standards of living give way to ever-deepening "austerity" (that is, politically induced poverty)—massive civil discontent, unrest, and disobedience will flare up.

[4350] The Federalist No. 70 (Alexander Hamilton).

[4351] Interestingly, the first actual printed version of the aphorism "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" apparently appeared in Thomas U.P. Charlton, The Life of Major General James Jackson (Augusta, Georgia: George F. Randolph & Co., 1809), at 85. Charlton, however, placed it in quotation marks, evidently to acknowledge that the phrase was other than his own invention, but instead something of a commonplace in the political discourse of his day. In any event, he went on to recommend in his own words that, "whilst a just confidence is given to the[American people's] public servants, they should be watched with eyes that never sleep". Id. (emphasis supplied). Which is true, no matter who happened to say it first.

Being anything but students of economics, political philosophy, or even their own country's history, average Americans may not understand why all this is happening—but they do realize that it is happening, and that their own livelihoods, standards of living, and hopes for a sound education, long-term employment, and a comfortable retirement are in jeopardy. Expressed in today's popular jargon, "the 99%" are not blind to what "the 1%" are doing. They observe the bankers, speculators, and their cronies being "bailed out" financially, immunized from prosecution politically, and infused statutorily with even more abusive powers and privileges "unknown to our law and * * * utterly inconsistent with the constitutional prerogatives and duties of Congress"[4352] than they ever enjoyed heretofore—while the common man receives nothing in the near term, and in the long term will be forced to pay for all the "bail outs", "quantitative easings", and other financial chicanery through increased taxation, inflation, and austerity.

If not stopped and punished, this brazen pillaging of America's economy, with its massive redistribution of wealth from her middle and lower classes to le gratin financier, can only inflame the populace. Some individuals bereft of economic hope may simply shoot themselves in despair. But many others may descend to such a depth of hatred and a desire for vengeance on their oppressors that they will resolve, if pushed to the wall, to shoot someone else instead. Once widespread, such attitudes will fan the flames of social unrest, then civil disobedience, and finally violent resistence in the nature of open class warfare: namely, the bankers, their clients in high finance, and their puppets and stooges in public office ("the 1%") versus overwhelming numbers of common Americans ("the 99%").

The Money Power is well aware of these dire possibilities. Through its own incompetence, hubris, and greed it has rashly pried open Pandora's Box, and released a panoply of evils for which it knows but one remedy: repression. After all, protecting the perpetrators of financial fraud by repressing their victims is nothing new. In the 1930s, as a consequence of the first great collapse of the Federal Reserve System, average Americans were forced to accept irredeemable Federal Reserve Notes as "legal tender", were prohibited from enforcing contracts payable in gold, and were dispossessed of their gold—all for the benefit of the banks. But the likely extent and duration of the coming catastrophe are so great that mere monetary and banking repression along the lines of the 1930s will not suffice. Instead, the banking cartel and its allies will need to direct their Pinocchios in public offices at every level of the federal system to unleash hordes of para-militarized police-state thugs against every American who in any manner refuses to acquiesce in whatever economic stringencies officialdom deems necessary in order to preserve the cartel from the consequences of its own folly.

[4352] A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 537 (1935).

In the final analysis, all of this—imperialism abroad, repression at home—arises, and had to arise, out of the corporative-state nature of America's central-banking system. More than that, imperialism in search of what could be called economic Lebensraum, coupled with the imposition of a domestic police state, is the essence of full-blown fascism. So, finally, the fruit of monetary and banking corporativism, in all its bitterness, falls from the tree: The big banks, financial houses, and dens of speculators which Americans are told are "too big to fail" have failed and will continue to fail. But rogue politicians and public officials will relieve them of the weight of their failures by shifting that load of moan onto the backs of ordinary citizens. That is, in the fascist lexicon, "too big to fail" really means "to big to pay". "Too big to fail" means that someone else will be compelled to pay the price through taxes, through inflation, and through enforced austerity in basic standards of living—someone else who cannot afford to pay, and is neither legally nor morally obligated to pay. The governmental apparatus can fail—as it has failed by becoming the mere marionette of the big banks, financiers, and speculators. The Nation's economy can fail—as it has failed with the Great Depression of the 1930s, with alternating recessions and "bubbles" thereafter, and now with the looming specter of depression, hyperinflation, or hyperinflation followed by depression. Even the people can fail—with untold economic suffering, political instability, and social dislocations, rather than peace and prosperity, their lot. But the big banks, financial houses, and their favored clients and political whores can never be suffered to fail, or even allowed to suffer. Thus America has arrived at the point of superordination of bank over state, and subordination of society to bank and state, the point at which the oligarchical complex of bankers, financial speculators, and crony politicians and public officials has become so entrenched, and so puissant both economically and politically, that it dares openly to operate according to the boast: "It is not the State which gives orders to us, it is we who give orders to the State!" This noxious assertion cannot be overemphasized, because perhaps its most infamous exponent in recent times was no less than Adolf Hitler, who made precisely that statement on behalf of the Nazi Party at the 1934 Reichsparteitag.[4353]

In a polity which conformed to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, every public official, at every level of the federal system, should align himself with WE THE PEOPLE in order to suppress the banking cartel, once and for all, in aid of "the general Welfare".[4354] For, as the Declaration attests, "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed," in order "to secure" men's "unalienable Rights"—not to guarantee under color of law and to collect by main force unjust profits for counterfeiters, usurers, and speculators at THE PEOPLE'S expense.

[4353] Recorded on film by Leni Riefenstahl in Triumph des Willens.

[4354] U.S. Const. preamble.

The present economic crisis stems from the generation of staggering quantities of debt, both public and private, which could never have been amassed except through the intermediation (and, if the truth be told, the prompting) of the banking cartel. Catastrophhards may wail that this debt is so gargantuan as to be "unpayable", and that therefore America is utterly doomed, financially and in other ways. Insofar as debt alone is the problem, though, prophecies of that sort are nonsensical. For all debts are always paid—either by the debtors, or by the creditors, or by some third-party sureties or guarantors. For example, because of the nature of the banking cartel's currency as unconstitutional "bills of credit", and the nature of the cartel itself as an unconstitutional corporative-state structure,[4355] much of the debt the Federal Reserve System has floated can be denounced outright as simply illegal ab initio, and therefore need not be repaid by the debtors or anyone else, but must be charged against the parties who emitted the fiat currency and bank "credit" which made incurrence of that debt possible in the first place.[4356] In addition, that portion of the General Government's debt which is actually licit can in fact be paid off entirely and in short order, if a little imagination is applied to the task.[4357]

At the present historical juncture, however, no one can expect the rogue officials who dominate the General Government to respect, let alone to assert, the rights of THE PEOPLE against the bankers and their clients, because those officials are the bankers' inseparable co-conspirators. Indeed, so committed are those officials to securing the bankers' interests at all costs, that they are preparing to commit actual "Treason" against THE PEOPLE of the United States, by setting up a para-military police-state apparatus for the purpose of "levying War" against them in every State of the Union when nationwide economic collapse results in widespread social dislocations which ignite massive civil disobedience.[4358]

Thus, America has arrived at a decisive parting of the ways. So far, Americans have exemplified in their restraint the cogency of the Declaration of Independence's observation that "Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed". But, as their situation becomes insufferable, WE THE PEOPLE will seriously reflect on the principles that: (i) in order "to secure" "unalienable Rights", "Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from

---

[4355] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1401-1524.

[4356] See, e.g., Craig v. Missouri, 29 U.S. (4 Peters) 410 (1830), discussed in E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 391-410. Their losses would be vastly compounded, if any of the Federal Reserve Banks, commercial banks within the Federal Reserve System, or big financial houses allied with them were ultimately adjudicated to be "racketeering enterprises", as perhaps they should be. See 18 U.S.C. § 1963(a).

[4357] See APPENDIX B, post, at 1929.

[4358] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1. See ante, at 814-821.

the consent of the governed"; (ii) "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness"; and (iii) "when a long trains of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government". Little cogitation will be required for THE PEOPLE to conclude that:

> • They can—and should—withdraw their "consent" from any putative "Government", anywhere within the federal system, which purports intentionally and systematically to exercise any "[un]just powers" whatsoever.[4359]
>
> • Inasmuch as most parts of the present "Form of Government" of the United States—including the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Branches, for which the Constitution actually provides; as well as the elephantine bureaucracy of "the Administrative State", the present form and powers of which the Constitution nowhere approves—have been thoroughly colonized by individuals recruited, coöpted, and corrupted by the Money Power, and thereby have redundantly proven their behavior "destructive of the[ ] ends" for which the General Government was originally "instituted among Men", THE PEOPLE are fully justified in setting about "to alter or to abolish" that "Form of Government" to such degree as they may conceive necessary to bring such miscreants to heel. And,
>
> • Confronted by the "absolute Despotism" under which the Money Power is working feverishly "to reduce them", THE PEOPLE may employ whatever means might be found to be efficacious "to throw off [such an abusive] Government", in the sense of removing from power the rogue officials who are the primary agents of that "Despotism".

Those among THE PEOPLE who are sufficiently astute, however, will surely observe that, although much of the General Government has failed in the sense of having been brought under the control of anti-constitutional forces, not all of it has. So far, "the Militia of the several States" have not been found wanting, because they have not even been tried. Moreover, WE THE PEOPLE need depend upon no one else to call forth the Militia, because they themselves are the Militia. So, in the final analysis, if the Militia are not called forth THE PEOPLE will have no one to blame but themselves.

[4359] Rogue public officials' intentional, albeit adventitious, exercises of "[un]just powers", in violation of the Constitution, is already a crime. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242. Systematic exercises of such powers are also illegal. See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961 et seq. Although on the surface the acts of public officials, misbehavior of these kinds should never be confused with acts of "government".

That blame, moreover, will be as well earned as it will be severe. For WE THE PEOPLE are America's sovereigns. The sovereigns bear the ultimate burden of accountability for the safety of the state. And, in the final analysis, sovereignty is not a merely titular status, but instead must entail the actual responsibility, the actual willingness, and the actual ability to say "No!" with absolute finality to all of those miscreants—whether in private station or public office—who endanger the res publica. In America today, the proper exercise of sovereignty requires the maintenance of National independence under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence; of popular self-government under the aegis of the Constitution; and of an economy controlled by and working for the people through the free market. To accomplish all of this, THE PEOPLE must hold the supreme political power in their own hands. And inasmuch as "'[p]olitical power grows out of the barrel of a gun'",[4360] THE PEOPLE must hold in their own well trained hands at all times guns sufficient in quantity and quality. Therefore, the absolute necessity for the Militia—the only organized military forces compatible with these principles.

Not only that. The Militia also comprise the only forces capable of dealing with the problem, chronic in any republic, of "unrepresentative representative government". Plainly, the will of THE PEOPLE expressed directly through their own votes provides the best evidence of what they believe "the common defence" and "the general Welfare" require.[4361] Yet, in the normal course of human events, for THE PEOPLE to assemble, identify issues, deliberate, and decide these matters themselves has often proven, or at least has been widely imagined to be, impractical. For that reason, THE PEOPLE'S participation in day-to-day governance has been limited to selecting "representatives" who supposedly can and will perform that task "in THE PEOPLE'S interest". To be sure, THE PEOPLE exercise their sovereignty when they "institute[ ]" "Governments * * * [which] deriv[e] their just powers from the consent of the governed",[4362] and select temporary "representatives" to administer those powers on their behalf. But they remain sovereign only insofar as the "Governments" they "institute[ ]" act pursuant to and consistent with their consent, and not otherwise.

For a system of "representation" to exist at all, THE PEOPLE must be confident that their "representatives" will do the right things for the right reasons, and not engage systematically in acts of usurpation and tyranny. Recent experience has taught, however, that supposed "representatives" all too often make policy on their own without consulting THE PEOPLE, frequently concealing their motivations, deliberations, and even actions from their constituents. Rather than "representing" THE PEOPLE, these disloyal "representatives" advance the agenda of factions and

---

[4360] Quotations From Chairman Mao, ante note 28, at 61.

[4361] See U.S. Const. preamble.

[4362] See Declaration of Independence.

other special interests at THE PEOPLE'S expense. To that end, they do whatever is necessary to transmogrify the governmental apparatus—and, through the operations of that apparatus, the entirety of society's legal, political, and economic systems—into pliant instruments of their selfish clients' business plans. They supplant THE PEOPLE'S will with the dictates of self-appointed, self-aggrandizing élites, corrupt the economy, subvert the legal and constitutional order, and even betray the Nation's independence. The formal procedures of elections, of legislative action, and of judicial processes remain the same; but their substance is thoroughly perverted. The immense efforts that must be expended in these dark endeavors pale in comparison to the rewards that attend success, however—for once in control of the General Government in particular, these false "representatives" and their clients can subject the entire wealth of this country to systematic looting under the protective coloration of the false "laws" they promulgate for that very purpose.

The stakes being as high as they are, these disloyal "representatives" cannot allow their and their clients' positions to be challenged. So they must eliminate society's rights to resist their aggression and to restore the true legal and political order, and therefore must suppress every legal remedy which might vindicate those rights. At this point, they consider themselves bound by neither legitimacy, nor legality, nor even logic—rather, for them everything depends upon logistics: how much raw force they can bring to bear on dissenters. Thus is explicable the pressure being exerted by these treacherous "representatives" and the factions and special interests they serve for the establishment of an all-encompassing National para-militarized police-state apparatus to do their dirty work.

Under these circumstances, it is politically suicidal for Americans to imagine that they can protect their liberty, their property, or even their lives by petitioning legislators, executive officials, or judges "for a redress of grievances".[4363] What purpose can petitions possibly serve when the individuals who comprise this country's highest legislative, executive, and judicial institutions are themselves avowed and proven enemies of THE PEOPLE who misuse the law in order to violate the law under color of the law, thereby denying everyone else the protection of law?

Self-evidently, no rational people would ever consent to this state of affairs. And Americans have not consented—primarily because their false "representatives" have heretofore largely concealed the facts from them. Now this absence of informed consent must be made manifest through THE PEOPLE'S unmistakable withdrawal of consent. Mere "dissent" is not the equivalent of withdrawal of consent, though. Dissent must be rendered effective, in the sense that those acts of their disloyal "representatives" to which THE PEOPLE object must be made to cease, and those "representatives" must themselves be thoroughly chastized. Thus, "the consent of the governed" always boils down to their right to resist, their willingness to resist, their ability to resist, and in extremis their actual resistance. A trustworthy system of political "representation" does not preclude THE PEOPLE'S resistance, but always assumes the possibility of it, and sometimes demands it.

---

[4363] See U.S. Const. amend. I.

To be sure, the practical problems popular resistance to usurpation and tyranny poses today exceed in seriousness and complexity those which confronted Americans in the Founding Era. Yet WE THE PEOPLE enjoy a decided advantage over their forebears, because in calling forth the Militia today THE PEOPLE will be acting under the aegis of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as settled law. In contrast, in (for example) Virginia in 1774 and 1775 the Royal Governor's intransigeance stymied the General Assembly; the Colony's Militia Act had expired and could not be renewed; the Governor tried to strip the patriots of ammunition and then purported to declare "martial law" against them—so Virginians were compelled to proceed on their own, by forming Independent Companies of Militia.[4364] Under the British "constitution", this was arguably an extra-constitutional, if not a wholly illegal, course of action.[4365] Nonetheless, Virginia's patriots were justified, because "[h]e that has virtue and power to save a people, can never want a right of doing it".[4366] Fortunately, WE THE PEOPLE today need not go to such lengths, because their State legislatures can enact the statutes necessary to revitalize "the Militia of the several States" in perfect conformity with constitutional principles.

Perhaps even more importantly, in contrast to what might have been imaginable in pre-constitutional times when the Militia were creatures of statute, today neither Congress nor the States can suppress the Militia. The Second Amendment declares "[a] well regulated Militia" to be "necessary to the security of a free State"—and every provision of the Constitution must be construed and applied in consonance with this precept. The Constitution incorporates "the Militia of the several States" as permanent components of its federal system—of a status equal to that of Congress, the President, the Supreme Court, and the States themselves. And the Declaration of Independence presumes that, even in the absence of a new government "deriving [its] just powers from the consent of the governed", "the People" can avail themselves of the "'[p]olitical power [that] grows out of the barrel of a gun'" so as to exercise their "right" and fulfill their "duty" "to throw off [an abusive] Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security". Moreover, as the supreme human law-givers in America—exercising rights, powers, and privileges constrained only by "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God"—WE THE PEOPLE are superior to the Second Amendment, to the [4365] But see W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, ante note 142, Volume 1, at 143-144.

---

[4364] See ante, at 567-597.

[4366] A. Sidney, Discourses Concerning Government, ante note 54, at 227.

Constitution, and even to the Declaration of Independence. And WE THE PEOPLE did not promulgate those laws, and through them establish and guarantee for themselves "a free State", while simultaneously licensing public officials to subvert and overthrow that "free State" by eliminating or eviscerating the Militia. After all, WE THE PEOPLE are the Militia. For this reason, not only no purported statute—but also no purported constitutional Amendment—which proposed to suppress the Militia could ever claim legitimacy.

Admittedly, even with the appropriate legislation in hand, if Americans want to preserve their liberty, their property, and perhaps even their very lives against the para-militarized SWAT teams and other Pelotons the Money Power's stooges in public office are preparing to deploy against them, they will have to pay a stiff price for not having done what they should have been doing for years heretofore. It is useless, however, to bemoan past failures. Water over the dam is lost downstream forever. All that matters is what THE PEOPLE steel themselves to do now. Plainly enough, they can accept no substitute for victory—for, if they do not prevail, America will be destroyed. And revitalization of "the Militia of the several States" is the only way to win.

Nonetheless, patriots must face the hard reality that American society is fractured, without even as much of a political consensus as existed in pre-constitutional times, when many Americans remained Tories to the bitter end. So one must expect that, initially, reformers may be able to muster only the votes of a minority of their State's legislators, because a myopic majority of the State's population will ignorantly, foolishly, or perversely oppose revitalization of the Militia. Even if at first such set-backs occur in every State, they will not signal the end of the matter. American government is not erected upon the shifting sands of "absolute democracy", such that "the majority rules" notwithstanding that its aberrant decisions will inexorably drive the country to ruin. Rather, American government stands upon the bedrock of "constitutional republicanism", perforce of which "[o]ne's right to life, liberty, and property * * * and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections".[4367] A majority, after all, can constitute a dangerous anti-social faction. For "a faction" is "a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community".[4368] Under such circumstances, the moral and political concept "WE THE PEOPLE" does not inflexibly refer to the population as a whole, to a large majority of the population, or even to a bare majority. Rather, in the most unsettled and dangerous times, when a majority of the population is under the sway of "[m]en of factious tempers" and "of sinister designs" who, "by intrigue, by corruption, or by other means, [have] first obtain[ed] the suffrages, and then betray[ed] the interests of the people",[4369] a minority of the population, acting in the true interests of everyone, is entitled to assume leadership, in whatever prudent manner that can be accomplished, and then to speak for and act on behalf of the whole: "He that has virtue and power to save a people, can never want a right of doing it."[4370]

---

[4367] West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943).

[4368] The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison) (emphasis supplied).

— Finis —

[4369] Id.

[4370] A. Sidney, Discourses Concerning Government, ante note 54, at 227 (emphasis supplied).

APPENDICES

1901

APPENDIX A

"A Cross of Gold"—A re-edited version of the full text of an address part of which was presented at the October, 2010, Meeting of the Committee for Monetary Research & Education, in New York City.

The present domestic and international monetary and banking systems have slipped into the initial stages of terminal dissolution. In their existing forms, they cannot long survive. No less than the United Nations Economic and Social Council takes this position. In July of this year it published a report entitled United Nations World Economic Situation and Prospects 2010, which stated that "[t]he risk of exchange-rate instability and a hard landing of the dollar could be reduced by having a global payments and reserve system which is less dependent on one single national currency", and that "[a] new global reserve system could be created, one that no longer relies on the United States dollar as the single major reserve currency".[4371] This is globalist 1984-ish duckspeak for "our present funny-money scam is coming apart at the seams" and "we need to set up a new Ponzi pyramid before the old one collapses". But if not in its prescription, yet in its description the United Nations states the truth.

So the question is not, "Will the present domestic and international monetary and banking systems split apart at their seams?" but whether, in the course of their inevitable unraveling, they will drag this whole country—the real America, the America which was once worth the price of admission, the America which used to be a beacon of hope for the entire world—down with them. Or, more precisely, the question is whether those among the American people who are alert to this danger will sit idly by and allow the worst to happen. "They also serve who only stand and wait" cannot be the watchword in the coming battle. Remaining aloof will not be a viable option.

No hope is to be found in the notion that various clever ways exist for individuals to profit personally from the collapse of the reigning monetary and banking systems. Speculators conjure profits to be reaped from increases in the so-called "price of gold"—going up, up, and up.[4372] This, however, is a lamentable

---

[4371] To be found at <http://www.un.org/esa/policy/wess/wesp2010files/wesp2010pdf>.

[4372] Gold and silver are the constitutional monetary metals, with the actual unit of money being silver (the "dollar" of 371.25 grains troy), and gold being valued in units of silver at the free-market exchange-rate between the two. But to simplify this discussion, gold alone will be treated as the unitary proxy for the more econological fallacy, because it measures the value of gold in terms of another, and a terminally unstable, currency: Federal Reserve Notes. Increases in the so-called "price of gold" largely reflect the decreasing purchasing power of Federal Reserve Notes as against gold—inexorably going down, down, and down (whether because of actual increases in the supply of Federal Reserve Notes or because of an erosion in public confidence in the value of whatever supply exists). If economic history is any guide, the day will surely come when Federal Reserve Notes—as have so many other paper currencies of their ilk—become worthless, except as numismatic curiosities. Then "the price of gold" in Federal Reserve Notes will be exceedingly, perhaps astronomically, high. But no one will care. Once upon a time, "the price of gold" measured in Weimar "marks", or even in Confederate "dollars", was significant. What, though, is "the price of gold" in Weimar or Confederate currency today? Does anyone know? Why would anyone bother to find out? And why should things turn out differently for Federal Reserve Notes?

Astute Americans need to envision, and then to bring about, a new monetary system in which no one talks about "the price of gold", but only of "prices in gold". No "price of gold" exists when a fixed weight of gold is the actual unit of money. Under those circumstances, all prices are stated in terms of gold. When a fixed weight of gold is the unit of money, "the price of gold" is a meaningless concept, or at best a tautology: namely, "the price of a unit of gold" is precisely "a unit of gold". In that future time, asking "What is 'the price of a unit of gold'?" would be as sensible as asking "What is 'the price of a nominal one-dollar Federal Reserve Note'?" today.

So, other than waiting for disaster to supervene, exactly what is to be done? At least three basic plans for dealing with the present situation exist:

> First, the plan of the international political and financial crime families to maintain their empire of "funny money" with some new financial-racketeering enterprise.
>
> Second, various plans for "reforming" and "regulating" the Federal Reserve System by somehow "returning" to something some people call a "gold standard", based on a "redeemable currency" that is somehow "backed" by gold. And,
>
> Third, a plan for replacing the present unstable and unsustainable monetary system with an entirely new system of economically sound, honest, and constitutional money—by introducing into the free market and State governments an alternative currency consisting solely of gold, with no admixture of complicated duometallic system.

---

paper, and then letting competition between Federal Reserve Notes and specie settle the matter, once and for all.

The first two plans are similar, in that they are predicated upon imposing control "from the top down": namely, common people must use whatever currency "the authorities"—domestic or international—decree. Under the third plan, control derives "from the bottom up": namely, the people may use whatever currency they desire, and those who elect to employ the alternative currency can simply walk away from the Federal Reserve System. It may be imagined, however, that the second and third plans are at least similar, because they both rely on gold to some significant degree. Nothing could be further from the truth, however.

Here, careful analysis is in order—

1. A new supra-national monetary régime. The international political and financial crime families know full well that the Federal Reserve System—indeed, the whole complex, corrupt apparatus that couples private banks and public institutions through the Treasury of the United States—is inherently unstable and needs to be replaced, because it can no longer be propped up, let alone reformed in any fundamental sense. Aware that the Federal Reserve System's days are numbered, they intend to translate the paper-currency scam to the next level, just as they have done, step by step, in crisis after crisis, throughout American history. To understand the genesis of this plan, a review the past is necessary:

Prior to the Civil War, America suffered from two attempts by Congress to impose a so-called "national bank" (the first and second Banks of the United States), as well as from the States' creation of numerous State and local banks, both private and quasi-public in character. This loose arrangement failed, because of the inherent instability of fractional-reserve banking and the insoluble economic and political conflicts it inexorably and inevitably generated. In particular, although all of the banks operated on the same principle of "fractional reserves", no way was found to coördinate and control individual banks' cycles of expansion and contraction of currency and credit for the mutual benefit of the banks as a class. Instead, the banks' unregulated competitive looting of society through monetary manipulations led periodically to serious economic breakdowns called "bank runs", "suspensions of specie payments", "stringencies", "panics", "depressions", and so on. To overcome these problems, the locus of the bankers' economic power needed to be translated to an higher level, and their economic power needed to be brigaded with, or at least protected by, political power.

During the Civil War, to prop up and organize the fractional-reserve system, a new set of banks—called "National Banks"—was created and tied to the United States Treasury and the National debt through the National Currency Acts in 1863 and 1864.[4373] Yet, although these institutions were called "National Banks", this was a scheme of merely regional and imperfect cartelization.

The weaknesses of this system became apparent only forty-three years after the initiation of the scheme, when the great panic of 1907 proved that the National Banking System needed a major overhaul. The fundamental flaws pointed out at the time were that the system provided no single "lender of last resort" to pump up the pyramid of currency and credit in times of crisis, and set up no central regulator to supervise and discipline the bankers in order, if possible, to forefend crises altogether. To overcome these deficiencies, the locus of economic power needed to be translated to a still higher level.[4374]

To that end, full national cartelization and central regulation of the banks was set up in the Federal Reserve System through the Federal Reserve Act of 1913.[4375] Indeed, the Federal Reserve System went beyond mere national cartelization to national Ponzification. The twelve Federal Reserve Banks sowed throughout the country promised their depositors to redeem Federal Reserve Notes in gold or other "lawful money" on demand, which promise was "guaranteed" by the United States Treasury's ability to extract payments from taxpayers.[4376] To be sure, in the event of the Federal Reserve Banks' failure to redeem their notes, the Treasury could then assert a first lien on their assets.[4377] But what good would this statutory recourse prove to be if the Banks were without sufficient assets to meet their liabilities? So, just as in a classical Ponzi scheme present payments to the first tier of "investors" are "guaranteed" by revenues to be derived from subsequent tiers of duped "investors", under the Federal Reserve System promises of present redemption of Federal Reserve Notes were "guaranteed" by anticipated tax revenues—except that, far better than the classical Ponzi scheme, these revenues could be coerced from unwilling "investors".

Yet, once again, the inherent, inexorable instability of fractional-reserve banking proved too destructive for legislative draftsmen to contain. By 1932—a scant twenty years after its inception—the Federal Reserve System (as the saying

---

[4373] An Act to provide a national Currency, secured by a Pledge of United States Stocks, and to provide for the Circulation and Redemption thereof, Act of 25 February 1863, CHAP. LVIII, 12 Stat. 665, superseded by An Act to provide a National Currency, secured by a Pledge of United States Bonds, and to provide for the Circulation and Redemption thereof, Act of 3 June 1864, CHAP. CVI, 13 Stat. 99.

[4374] See generally James Livingston, Origins of the Federal Reserve System: Money, Class, and Corporate Capitalism, 1890-1913 (Ithaca, New York: Cornell University Press, 1986).

[4375] An Act To provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes ("Federal Reserve Act"), Act of 23 December 1913, CHAP. 6, 38 Stat. 251.

[4376] See Act of 1913, § 16, ¶ 1; now codified as amended, with deletion of the promise to redeem in gold, at 12 U.S.C. § 411.

[4377] See Act of 1913, § 16, ¶ 4; now codified as amended at 12 U.S.C. § 414.

has it) "went off the gold standard" by suspending specie payments domestically in 1933 and 1934. And that suspension continues to this very day.[4378]

Nonetheless, because of the uniquely favorable situation of the United States in the aftermath of World War II, it was possible once again for the magicians of monetary manipulation to secure their own positions by translating the locus of economic power to a still higher level. Under the Bretton Woods Agreement and the International Monetary Fund in 1945,[4379] the Federal Reserve System effectively became the first "world central bank", and its currency (the Federal Reserve Note) effectively became "the world reserve currency". This went beyond national cartelizaton and Ponzification to international Ponzification, but still nationally centered. That is, the bankers' scheme moved to a higher level than under the original Federal Reserve Act of 1913, but still only partially and imperfectly.

A central pillar of this structure collapsed only twenty-six years later, though, when the Federal Reserve System and its surety, the United States Treasury, defaulted on "the international gold standard" in 1971, suspending specie payments on Federal Reserve Notes to everyone everywhere. And that suspension, too, continues unto this very day.

Now the disintegration of the entire edifice of central banking and fractional-reserve debt-currencies has begun—not just nationally, but globally as well—only thirty-nine years after the final repudiation of redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in gold in 1971.

Observe that, before it lurched into chaos, the first ersatz "world central bank" and "world reserve currency" held together for only thirteen years more than the original Federal Reserve System (from 1913 to 1933), and for four years less than the original National Banking System (from 1864 to 1907).

Today, similar to the situations that existed prior to the National Currency Act and the original Federal Reserve Act: (i) A multiplicity of national or regional central banks, all operating on the faulty principle of fractional reserves, exists. And (ii) all of these banks are attempting to accommodate irresponsible governmental fiscal policies and robber-baron pillaging of private economies in their home territories. The difference now is that an ersatz "world central bank" has been jury-rigged around the Federal Reserve System—but it is located in a single country, is tied to that country's laws, and is trying to sustain the reckless fiscal policies and unbridled financial brigandage of perhaps the most fiscally profligate and even corrupt of all nations in the history of the world. As with the National Currency Act, no adequate "lender of last resort" is available to bail out the Federal Reserve System as a whole, other than perhaps the United States Treasury, by printing irredeemable currency in the form of so-called "Lincoln Greenbacks".[4380] And no supra-national regulator exists to moderate the Federal Reserve's excesses. No national regulator exists, either, as Congress has proven impotent and incompetent in that capacity—or, perhaps more accurate a description, has functioned as a co-conspirator in the process of domestic and international looting. Thus, the world is confronted by a shaky state of affairs similar to that which plagued the United States during the era of the National Currency Act and that led to the creation of the Federal Reserve System—except that the present situation is orders of magnitude more serious.

---

[4378] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 867-1240.

[4379] AN ACT To provide for the participation of the United States in the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development ("Bretton Woods Agreements Act"), Act of 31 July 1945, CHAPTER 339, 59 Stat. 512; T.I.A.S. 1501 (27 December 1945), 60 Stat. 1401, especially Art. IV, § 1(a), 60 Stat. at 1403.

So, one can confidently predict on the basis of both theory and experience that the international political and financial crime families will now attempt to create a true supra-national world "central bank of issue" empowered to emit a new supra-national fiat currency, supra-nationally "managed", and to exercise regulatory authority over all national central banks—in all things free from control by any national or regional government. Which, of course, will render this new supra-national bank itself a species of world government, or at least the nucleus of one.

As pointed out earlier, one such plan has already being floated among the international élitists through the United Nations Economic and Social Council. The United Nations World Economic Situations and Prospects 2010 has called for the Federal Reserve Note to be replaced as the reserve currency for international trade with a new currency to be issued by the International Monetary Fund, and initially based on the IMF's so-called "Special Drawing Rights".[4381] More recently, on 4 October of 2010 the Institute of International Finance, a consortium in which are associated some four hundred twenty of the world's most important banks and financial institutions, issued a policy letter which also advocated the emission by the IMF of a new currency based on Special Drawing Rights.

Actually, this is not a new idea. In essence, it was John Maynard Keynes' original proposal leading up to Bretton Woods—namely, that a true supra-national bank would emit its own global currency, to be called "the bancor", which eventually would supplant all national and regional currencies, not only in international but also in domestic commerce (and, presumably, with respect to all political payments, such as taxes, too). So, one can expect that theoreticians of and other mouthpieces for paper currency and fractional-reserve central banking will

---

[4380] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 561-666.

[4381] "Special Drawing Rights" are an ersatz international reserve currency, the value of which derive from a "basket" of major currencies, and which are allocated to members of the IMF in proportion to the amounts of gold or (primarily) major foreign currencies that those members deposit with the IMF.

now contend that the present failure of the Federal Reserve System as an ersatz "world central bank" arose precisely because world leaders did not follow Keynes' recommendation. In any event, whatever the music's provenance, the globalist political oligarchs and the globalist economic oligarchs are now all playing the same discordant tune. And when one hears the overture, he knows that the opera cannot be far behind.

The supra-national character of this proposed new global currency, and of the institution that will emit it, is of crucial importance, because contemporary Americans still retain the power to deal with the Federal Reserve System directly, through Section 30 of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, which provides that "[t]he right to amend, alter, or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved".[4382] But they will lose this power when a supra-national monetary scheme is imposed on them. And whatever other, similar power (if any) they might retain for themselves will depend upon the terms of the treaty or other international agreement by which the new currency gains legal-tender status in the United States.

To be sure, a treaty cannot override the Constitution of the United States. And a treaty can always be set aside, in part or in whole, by a subsequent statute of Congress. Nonetheless, because the American people never demanded that it be enforced, the Constitution has not stopped, or even retarded the profligacy of, the Federal Reserve System since 1913. Neither have the Members of Congress whom the people have elected generation after generation ever invoked Section 30 of the Federal Reserve Act, or any other provision of any other statute, to correct the banking cartel's excesses, except to make them worse (such as by removing redemption in gold, outlawing the private ownership of gold from 1933 until 1973, and outlawing "gold-clause contracts" from 1933 until 1978). So one can safely presume that any new supra-national global currency and central bank will be even harder for Americans to influence, let alone control, than the Federal Reserve System has proven to be.

The true perversity of the present situation lies in the indication—indeed, in some quarters the expectation—that this scheme for a new supra-national monetary order will be sold to a doubting world by attaching some sort of "gold standard" to it. This could be used as the bait to entice naive people tired of monetary instability caused by international bankers to bite on the hook of supra-national management of their economies by the selfsame international bankers. Beyond any doubt, however, whatever will be offered will not be even a traditional "gold standard", perforce of which the issuer of a unit of paper currency (or bank credit solvable in that currency) will be required by law to exchange each unit of its currency for a fixed weight of gold upon demand by the holder of that currency.

[4382] 38 Stat. at 275.

Neither will it be a true "gold standard", in which the only actual unit of money is a fixed weight of gold, and everything else is merely an instrument of debt without force as "legal tender". So, even with whatever thin gold veneer may be provided (if that is the ruse to be used), the new supra-national global currency will be a deception from its inception. In light of the precedents, though, notwithstanding its inherent instability the new swindle may be able to perdure for perhaps another forty years, during which time tremendous further looting, waste of resources, and other damage will be visited upon the peoples of the world.

Yet, one may doubt that any such supra-national monetary and banking structure will soon be created under present conditions:

> First, the European monetary union—which, in large measure, is the regional precedent for such a global arrangement—is now under increasing strain, and threatens to collapse, with its constituent countries perhaps returning to their national currencies.
>
> Second, no reason exists to believe that Russia and China, in particular, will agree to submit their economies to some supra-national monetary and banking authority—and quite a few reasons to suspect that Germany might desire to become part of an new political and economic bloc consisting of Germany, Russia, and China, an expanded economic and political Dreikaiserbund the wisdom of which Bismarck would certainly have appreciated.

In any event, in the face of these possibilities, what are Americans in particular to do to protect their interests? Basically, they have two choices:

> • Americans can try to salvage, repair, restore, and then control the present Federal Reserve System. Or,
>
> • They can provide themselves with an entirely new currency, preferably before the present one completely self-destructs.

2. Salvaging the Federal Reserve System by returning Federal Reserve Notes to redeemability in gold. More than half a century ago, Professor Walter E. Spahr rather starkly summed up the situation:

> It should not be surprising * * * that apparently all who would socialize our economy are opposed to the restoration of a redeemable currency in the United States. Either because they understand the relationship between an irredeemable currency and the processes of socialization of the economy or because they simply note that Socialist, Communist, and Fascist governments employ irredeemable currencies as a means of controlling and managing the people, advocates of government dictatorship seem invariably to defend irredeemable currencies with the utmost vigor. * * * The evidence seems overwhelming that a defender of > irredeemable currency is, wittingly or unwittingly, an advocate of Socialism or of government dictatorship in some form.

>
> So long as a government has the power over a people, that is provided by an irredeemable currency, all efforts to stop a government disposed to lead a people into Socialism tend to, and probably will, prove futile. The people of the United States have observed all sorts of efforts, organized and individual, to bring pressure upon Congress to end its spending orgy and processes of socialization. It should be amply clear by this time that none of these efforts has succeeded. Moreover, there is no reason for supposing that any of them, except the restoration of redeemability, can succeed in arresting our march into Socialism.[4383]

With all due respect to the memory of Professor Spahr, however, the fundamental problem is not irredeemable currency. It is, and always has been, redeemable currency—at base, the delusion that the thing being redeemed (a paper note) is the actual "money", not the thing in which redemption is made (a piece of actual gold).

Revealingly, not even the original Federal Reserve Act made that error. Rather, Section 16 of the Act provided that > Federal reserve notes, to be issued at the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board for the purpose of making advances to Federal reserve banks * * * are hereby authorized. The said notes shall be obligations of the United States, and shall be receivable by all national and member banks and Federal reserve banks and for all taxes, customs, and other public dues. They shall be redeemed in gold on demand at the Treasury Department of the United States, * * * or in gold or lawful money at any Federal reserve bank.[4384]

Observe: From the very first, Federal Reserve Notes were denominated "advances" and "obligations"—that is, instruments and evidence of debt. True "money", however, is the most liquid of all assets, not a debt that might be repudiated, and certainly not a debt that has been serially repudiated. And if Federal Reserve Notes were from the start to be "redeemed * * * in gold or lawful money", they obviously were never conceived to be either "gold" or "lawful money". So, because by definition the only official "money" the law recognizes is "lawful money", by law Federal Reserve Notes were never (and are not now) actual "money" at all, but at best only some sort of substitute for "money".

The monetary conjurers' trick has been, slowly, steadily, and stealthily, to reverse this understanding in the public's mind. That is, to make the substitute pass for the real thing, and then remove the real thing from the operation. This subterfuge was not overly difficult to put over. After all, in the term "redeemable currency", which is the noun and which the adjective? When people deal with a "paper currency redeemable in gold", the natural uninstructed inclination is to treat the paper currency as "money" and the gold as something else. The paper currency, as the saying goes, is merely "backed" by gold—but of course is not itself gold. And because the currency is not itself gold, the money-manipulators can remove the gold "backing" farther and farther into the background, without affecting the nature of the paper as "currency" (at least nominally). Thus, a "redeemable currency" can be converted into a "contingently redeemable" or "conditionally redeemable" currency, through temporary suspension of specie payments (as happened repeatedly during the Nineteenth Century); and then into a full-fledged "irredeemable currency", through permanent suspension of specie payments, as with Federal Reserve Notes after 1933 domestically and 1971 internationally.[4385] Yet, to the average citizen (whose most serious liability is mental inertia), even though a paper currency's promise of redemption has been dishonored, it nonetheless remains "currency".

---

[4383] At <www.fame.org/HTM/Spahr_Walter_Our_Irredeemable_Currency_System_WES-001.HTM#note1>.

[4384] ¶ 1, 38 Stat. at 265.

Thus one grasps that the so-called "right to redemption" attached to any paper currency is actually a liability, inasmuch as it exposes the holders of that currency to repudiation and expropriation, because they possess only the paper, not the gold. Even in the best of times, the holders of redeemable paper currency are not economically and politically independent. Rather, they depend upon the honesty and the competence of the money-managers. This is why America's Founding Fathers, realists all, denominated redeemable paper currency as "bills of credit". They knew that such bills' values in gold or silver are always contingent upon the issuers' credit—that is, ultimately, the issuers' honesty and ability to manage their financial affairs. The unavoidable trouble with "bills of credit", though, is that they can (and usually do) turn out to be "bills of *dis*credit", when the holders discover that the money-managers are *dis*honest and *in*competent—or worse, as is the situation today, highly competent at dishonesty. Then the holders of the paper currency (if they are sufficiently astute) realize how unwise it is to allow the gold to remain in the custody of the very institutions and individuals with the greatest incentives, and the uniquely favorable positions and opportunities, to steal it.

But when the money-managers refuse to redeem their currency, what can the holders of that currency do to protect themselves? Well, what were they able to do in 1933 and in 1971? Nothing. If the holders of Federal Reserve Notes had enjoyed an effective, enforceable "right" to the gold the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury of the United States promised to pay in redemption of those notes—that is, if the currency had been "redeemable" in the only meaningful sense that redemption was absolutely assured as a matter of law and especially fact—the gold seizures of 1933 and 1971 would never have happened. The ostensibly "redeemable" character of paper currency of the *pre-*1933 and *pre-*1971 types did not protect the holders of that currency. Instead, it turned out to be the very device used to deceive and defraud them, then divest and dispossess them of gold—proving in perhaps the most palpable manner possible that a society's acceptance of "redeemable currency" is the product of confusion and the invitation to inevitable economic and political disaster.

---

[4385] See 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c).

Ludwig von Mises outlined a proposal for returning to a Federal Reserve Note redeemable in gold.[4386] No doubt, coming from that source, it might prove to be a workable approach. But, even assuming arguendo that it could be done, why should it be done?

A plan of this type offers no more than a cruelly delusive hope. Consider some of its demerits—

•First and foremost, the goal is not constitutional in any event, because every form of "redeemable currency" put out under color law through the Federal Reserve System is, by definition, a governmental "bill of credit", which Congress has no authority to emit, directly or indirectly.[4387] Moreover, the Federal Reserve System is a corporative-state banking cartel indistinguishable from the types of cartels set up under the National Industrial Recovery and Bituminous Coal Conservation Acts, which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional, without dissenting voice, in the Schechter and Carter cases in the mid-1930s.[4388] Except that the Federal Reserve System is arguably worse, because the banking cartel influences every form of production and delivery of all goods and services throughout the country, so that the confusion and corruption it injects into the free market is pervasive in a manner in which even the National Industrial Recovery Act was not and could never have been. In the question of constitutionality lies the key to the whole problem, because, if the Constitution had been faithfully executed all along, America would not be treading water in a monetary septic tank today. And only by returning to the Constitution can Americans hope to extricate themselves completely in the long run. Yet vanishingly few people take much notice, or appear to be at all worried, that, as far as the constitutional aspects of money and banking in America are concerned, Mussolini won the political and economic war—that, in truth, this country now suffers under the Fascist Reserve System.

[4386] The Theory of Money and Credit, H.E. Batson, Translator (Irvington-on-Hudson, New York: The Foundation for Economic Education, Inc., 1971), at 448-452.

[4387] See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 141-155.

[4388] A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corporation. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495 (1935); Carter v. Carter Coal Company, 298 U.S. 238 (1936). See E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 746-866, 1423-1524.

• Leaving aside questions of constitutionality, and turning to matters of fact, the plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold retains the fascistic Federal Reserve System's banking cartel, which will perpetuate factionalism at the heart of America's economy. In The Federalist No. 10, James Madison pointed out that

> [a]mong the numerous advantages promised by a well constructed Union, none deserve to be more accurately developed than its tendency to break and control the violence of faction. The friend of popular governments never finds himself so much alarmed for their character and fate as when he contemplates their propensity to this dangerous vice. * * * The instability, injustice, and confusion introduced into the public councils have, in truth, been the mortal diseases under which popular governments have everywhere perished, as they continue to be the favorite and fruitful topics from which the adversaries to liberty derive their most specious declamations. * * *
>
> By a faction, I understand a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community.

Madison then went on to point out what he considered egregious forms of factionalism, starting with "[a] rage for paper money". This passage seems to have been penned for the Federal Reserve System and "the financial community" of which it is the cornerstone. For no one can possibly deny that this edifice of financial chicanery serves one very narrow set of very special, very selfish interest groups, at the expense of everyone else in society. Neither is it deniable that, together with its satellites and clients, the Federal Reserve System holds the entire country hostage to "the financial community's" negligence, incompetence, venality, corruption, and even criminality. For, if the System is not exonerated and "bailed out" repetitively from the consequences of its managers' and clients' own blunders and sordid excesses—as it has been, serially and under conditions of increasing severity and cost, since 1933—its managers and clients threaten, either implicitly or even volubly as they did before the TARP "bail out", to take down the entire national economy, and with it this country as a whole, bringing about untold political and social dislocations, disturbances, distress, and destruction. This is the essence of malignant factionalism.

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold is also economically psychotic. It does not propose to rein in fractional-reserve banking and the destructive Ponzi schemes fractional-reserve practices foster. Rather, it presumes that fractional-reserve banking will continue to operate indefinitely, just as it has in the past, supposedly to be "stabilized" by the Federal Reserve System and a resurrected pseudo-"gold standard". But, as both theory and history attest, it is primarily fractional-reserve banking that has made a stable "gold standard" of the traditional type unworkable if not impossible.[4389] So the plan is bottomed on the self-contradictions that a system antithetical to a "gold standard" can be stabilized by a "gold standard", and that a "gold standard" will long remain an integral component of a system the most profitable (albeit economically and socially destablizing) operations of which a "gold standard" constrains!

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold does not separate fractional-reserve banking from the government, but accepts and even hopes to cement their integration permanently. Because fractional-reserve banking is inherently unstable, this arrangement is triply unsatisfactory: (i) This unnatural coupling destabilizes the government's finances. (ii) By misusing the government's monopoly of force in what will inevitably prove a vain attempt to stabilize the banking cartel, it destabilizes this country's economic and political systems in their entireties. And (iii) it destabilizes even the banking cartel itself, because the protection the cartel receives from the consequences of its own excesses, perforce of its special relationship with the government, encourages and facilitates the bankers' and their clients' perpetration of further and even more egregious excesses.

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold, and thereafter administering the national stock of currency and credit on that basis, is in the final analysis a scheme of central economic planning—employing bureaucratic managers to maintain a fixed rate of redemption of paper currency in gold in the face of both ever-changing conditions in the free market, and the tendency to Ponzification of fractional-reserve banks and the rapacious "financial community" allied therewith. But is not the salient economic lesson of the Twentieth Century that central economic planning does not work, no matter how many computers and information-technology gurus are put to the task? Would anyone in his right mind advocate the establishment of a "Federal Bread Board" to manage the production and distribution of bread throughout America? If every sensible person would reject this notion for one simple commodity such as bread (which anyone with a cookbook can learn how to bake in an afternoon), let alone for all other types of production in the most complex economy the world has ever known, then on what reasoning should it be accepted for the very special commodity—money—the soundness or unsoundness of which affects the production and distribution of all goods and services throughout the economy,

---

[4389] In conjunction with fractional-reserve central banking, the suppression of common use of so-called "real bills" in commerce must be identified as another major cause of the problem, which would need to be addressed in any comprehensive plan for monetary and banking reform. On this point, the work of Professor Antal E. Fekete should be consulted, at <www.professorfekete.com/moneycredit.asp>.

because it is the commodity in which the mutual rates of exchange among all goods and services are measured? On the other hand, if the Federal Reserve System has proven to be such a good idea since 1913, or 1933, or 1971, or perhaps even the last several years, then why should its marvelous principles of organization, control, and concern for the welfare of average Americans not be extended to all other necessary commodities, such as food, clothing, shelter, personal transportation, and health care, to name just a few? Why should not America resurrect and reinstitute the National Industrial Recovery Act in a computerized version? Why not, indeed? For this is exactly what is going to happen—in fact, if not perforce of some statute—because the tail (the Federal Reserve System) will end up wagging the dog (the rest of the economy). And if the tail is fascistic, so will the dog eventually become fascistic. Central fascistic control of the pricing system through manipulation of currency and credit must eventually lead to central fascistic control of the entire productive system. Which will require para-military police-state repression to keep the bulk of the population in line, as common Americans' standards of living decline towards second- and even third-world levels.

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold is politically impractical, if not wholly implausible, because any such reform has to be accomplished at the level of the Federal Reserve System through the General Government. Now, because of institutional incompetence, this plan cannot be put into effect through the Judiciary. The Judiciary may be able—although one must doubt that it would ever be willing—to declare some or all of the Federal Reserve System to be unconstitutional or otherwise unlawful; but it cannot prescribe to Congress the substance of new statutes necessary to correct the situation, and certainly cannot compel Congress to enact such legislation. Thus, the Judiciary can suddenly cause chaos within the monetary and banking systems, by throwing a legal monkey-wrench into their gears, but can do next to nothing to repair the damage its own actions would bring about. Knowing that limitation on their powers, judges would likely do everything possible to avoid deciding a case that raises such issues. Therefore, to be successful, the proponents of the plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would need to gain control of or decisive influence over the Executive Branch, so as to be able to use (say) the authority granted in 12 U.S.C. § 95(a) and 31 U.S.C. § 5119(a),[4390]

[4390] 12 U.S.C. § 95(a) provides that "[i]n order to provide for the safer and more effective operation of the national Banking System and the Federal Reserve System, to preserve for the people the full benefits of the currency provided for by the Congress through the national banking system and the Federal reserve system, and to relieve interstate commerce of the burdens and obstructions resulting from the receipt on an unsound or unsafe basis of deposits subject to withdrawal by check, during such emergency period as the President of the United States by proclamation may prescribe, no member bank of the Federal reserve system shall transact any banking business except to such extent and subject to such regulations, limitations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President. Any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, or any director, officer or employee thereof, violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than as well as the ability to veto or otherwise hamstring any contrary legislation emanating from Congress. Or, of greatest value, the proponents of this plan would need to gain decisive control over Congress, in order to enact new laws that the Executive Branch and the Federal Reserve System would then follow—and, of course, along with this, the ability to override any veto of those new bills, as well as to punish any failure or foot-dragging by the Executive Branch in the execution of these laws. Furthermore, the proponents of this plan would also, perhaps especially, need to gain control of or to assert decisive influence over the Federal Reserve System itself and its allies in "the financial community"—which and who otherwise could effectively veto or paralyze the execution of any proposed reforms by threatening to create chaos in the markets, unless those threats were deterred with credible menaces that any such interference would immediately be met with severe punishments, such as are mandated in 12 U.S.C. § 95(a). So, all things considered, a true reform from any of these sources—although sufficient—is extremely unlikely. Instead, any supposed "monetary and banking reform" coming from these sources will almost surely be aimed at erecting a new supra-national currency and central bank. "The financial community's" mouthpieces are already telling America precisely that.

Even assuming arguendo that the political problem of control of or influence over the General Government and the Federal Reserve System could be solved, intractable practical problems would remain—

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold depends upon using the gold in the so-called "National gold stock" for the initial round of redemption That, however, leaves open the questions:

> (i) How much gold is actually there?
>
> (ii) How much of that gold is encumbered in some way—by loans, leases, "currency swaps", or other like devices—so that it cannot be used for redemption?
>
> (iii) If sufficient gold is or could be made available for redemption tomorrow, then why is the Secretary of the Treasury not

---

$10,000 or, if a natural person, may, in addition to such fine, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding ten years. Each day that any such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense."

31 U.S.C. § 5119(a) provides that "[e]xcept to the extent authorized in regulations the Secretary of the Treasury prescribes with the approval of the President, the Secretary may not redeem United States currency (including Federal reserve notes and circulating notes of Federal reserve banks) in gold." Presumably, this would allow redemption in gold bullion only. See 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b): "The United States Government may not pay out any gold coin. A person lawfully holding United States coins and currency may present the coins and currency to the Secretary of the Treasury in exchange (dollar for dollar) for other United States coins and currency (other than gold and silver coins) that may be lawfully held." And 31 U.S.C. § 5119(a): "When redemption in gold is authorized, the redemption may be made only in gold bullion * * * in an amount equal at the time of redemption to the currency presented for redemption."

> even now fulfilling his statutory obligation, under 31 U.S.C. § 5119(a), to "redeem gold certificates owned by the Federal reserve banks at times and in amounts the Secretary decides are necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of each kind of United States currency", at the statutory valuation of gold with relation to those gold certificates "of 42 and two-ninth dollars a fine troy ounce", set in 31 U.S.C. § 5117(b)? And, > (iv) Notwithstanding the limitations on executive action and judicial relief set out in 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c), will individuals be entitled to enforce their new claims to redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in actual gold, by obtaining from the courts judgements, mandatory injunctions, and other like orders that require the Federal Reserve Banks and the Treasury of the United States to pay out gold in exchange for those notes at some fixed rate? Or will the supposed "right" of redemption be (as it always has been) a toothless paper tiger?
>

Obviously, these questions must be completely and unequivocally answered before anyone can begin to plan intelligently for, or really even to advocate, a return to redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in gold—and before any potential holder of those notes takes seriously a reformed Federal Reserve System's assertion that he will enjoy a true right, in both law and fact, to redemption. But will these questions be answered? For example, precisely how can the Department of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve System be compelled to disgorge the necessary information? What will it require to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to fulfill his present statutory obligations in the premises, let alone any new ones that may be imposed upon him? And how can a permanent right of redemption be secured, unless it is somehow explicitly recognized and enforced as constitutional in nature?

•In any event, assuming arguendo that sufficient unencumbered gold exists in the "National gold stock" to start the process of redemption, and that the Secretary of the Treasury and other public officials can be compelled to fulfill their duties, the further question nonetheless remains: "At what rate of exchange should a Federal Reserve Note 'dollar'-bill be redeemed with gold?" Fortunately, 12 U.S.C. § 411 does not fix the rate of exchange at which Federal Reserve Notes "shall be redeemed in lawful money on demand at the Treasury Department * * * or at any Federal Reserve bank". And Section 30 of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 licenses Congress to establish essentially any rate of exchange. Which is why the original repudiation of redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in gold domestically, and its modification internationally, in 1933 and 1934 was probably constitutional (to the extent the Federal Reserve Act itself is constitutional)—namely, because Congress had explicitly reserved in 1913 the right to make any changes it wanted in the Federal Reserve Act thereafter. So, when the rate of exchange was reduced from $20.67 per ounce to zero domestically, and from $20.67 per ounce to $35.00 and then to zero internationally, and now to $42.22 per ounce as far as the Treasury's gold certificates are concerned, Congress was merely exercising a right it had retained from the very beginning.

Yet, even given that any rate of exchange is allowable, how would a particular, presumably economically correct, new rate of exchange once set be maintained? In light of the serial illegalities and duplicities of the past that brought America to this sorry pass, what new "checks and balances" would be necessary and sufficient to convince a doubting nation and world that the same swindle would not be allowed to be perpetrated again? The Federal Reserve Act of 1913 required redemption of Federal Reserve Notes in gold, and set reserve requirements of 40% for Federal Reserve Notes in actual circulation and 35% for the deposits held in the twelve Federal Reserve Banks—yet these limitations were set aside only twenty years later following the banking collapse of 1932. Franklin D. Roosevelt then set an international exchange rate of $35.00 per ounce of gold for Federal Reserve Notes—yet, in terms of actual payments, this rate became meaningless after August of 1971, only thirty-seven years after Roosevelt had conjured up the $35.00 per ounce figure. And the Secretary of the Treasury is even now required by statute to maintain the equal purchasing power of all form of United States currency according to the benchmark of $42-2/9 per ounce of gold—yet no such equivalence in purchasing power exists between Federal Reserve Notes and gold. So, critics are entitled to ask—

> Are effective economic "checks and balances" possible under present conditions? Assuming good faith and competence in the managers of the plan, can it be made to work at all, even to get back to the situation pre-1971, let alone pre-1933, given the present terrible burden of public and private debt throughout America, the gutting of this nation's real productive capacity, and her over-extension around the world in military imperialism and adventurism? Then, too,
>
> Are effective political "checks and balances" possible under present conditions? What if the managers who happen to be chosen to oversee the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury in years to come prove incompetent or act in bad faith, or both? What if they simply continue to do the bidding of the racketeering enterprises and other criminal conspiracies that pass for "political parties" in the District of Columbia and "financial institutions" in New York City?

The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold does not in and of itself limit such rogue public officials, bankers, and financial plungers from manipulating currency and credit as the means to grab power and wealth, any more than did the old "gold standard" from 1913 to 1933 (or to 1971). And the precedents do not augur well. For nothing that has ever been done since 1913 with an eye towards controlling the Federal Reserve System in the interests of common Americans has ever worked, or perhaps was ever capable of working—or America would not find herself where she is today, being importuned to cede ever more and ever-more-abusive powers to the System's bosses, with no adequate provision for either reviewability or accountability.

Obviously, implementing a so-called "price rule" is not even a simplistic answer. Such was the basis of the original Federal Reserve Act—the "price rule" being $20.67 per ounce of gold—and everyone knows how well that worked.

Without an absolutely enforceable constitutional guarantee—and by that is meant a guarantee enforceable directly by the people themselves, because they either hold their gold in their own hands or themselves physically control the depositories in which their gold is secured—rogue public officials and their clients in the banking cartel and "the financial community" can be expected to ferret out one means or another to change to their special advantage the rate of redemption (as it was serially altered after 1933) or even to eliminate it entirely (as it was in 1933 domestically and 1971 internationally).

Furthermore, even if all of the foregoing problems could be solved, what would be the point?

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would not provide a truly sound currency, any more than the original Federal Reserve System ever did. It would merely give America the currency of the *pre-*1933 era, or (worse) the *post-*1933 and *pre-*1971 period, both of which have been experimentally proven to be unsound.

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would perpetuate the fallacy of "redeemable currency"—namely, that the Federal Reserve Note is the "dollar", and some amount of gold is its "backing". But a "George Washington" Federal Reserve Note is not a "dollar". It is a mere promise to pay a "dollar", which has been utterly dishonored by both the banks and the Treasury since 1933 (as to gold domestically) and 1971 (as to gold internationally), even unto this very day.[4391] And sound, honest, and constitutional "Money" has NO "backing" consisting of or based on something else. It needs no "backing", because it has substance in and of itself. It is ACTUAL GOLD, not a mere promise to deliver gold. Sound, honest, and constitutional "Money" cannot be repudiated, because it does not need to and cannot be "redeemed". It is the ABSENCE of "redeemability"—the complete LACK OF NECESSITY OR

[4391] See 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) and (c).

DESIRABILITY for "redeemability"—that constitutes the essence and provides the strength of sound, honest, and constitutional "Money".

• As a further demerit, the plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would retain the institutions, and attempt to validate the false ideas, that were the instrumental causes of all of America's problems. Under this plan, the merry-go-round of financial looting would not be permanently shut down, only temporarily slowed down—and not for a fundamental redesign, but only for repairs and repainting. Then it would be returned to operation under the same old management (at least in type), running in the same old direction, for the same old purposes. And inevitably with the same old results—because a merry-go-round cannot be straightened out.

• Most distressing to one's sense of justice, the plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold also would reward the very class of people who caused or allowed nearly a century of monetary and banking problems to beset this country. By bailing them out of the mess they have caused—without punishment, without even censure, but with protection and payoffs, present and future—it would perpetuate their system, their power, their wealth, their status, their prestige. It would maintain them in positions from which—if they operated in the future as they have in the past, as history and a knowledge of human nature premonish America that they would—they could despoil this country once again, just as they did with the original Federal Reserve System.

• The plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would require not only perhaps more perspicacity than Americans probably could muster, but above all more patience. It would take a long time to implement. Therefore, it would demand the people's acceptance—really, the imposition—of political and economic discipline. Yet where would such patience and discipline be found, when this country is riven by contending factions for which après moi le déluge are the watchwords? In particular, who would impose that discipline against all of the economically and politically powerful factions that want "funny money" and the Ponzi pyramids it facilitates? And how could such discipline be maintained, in the face of the monumental, arguably unpayable debt of the General Government? Would it not require the intervention of the Armed Forces—"government by junta" in the sorry style of Argentina and other Latin-American republics? One must presume so. For the Department of Homeland Security and the Pentagon are even now preparing, in anticipation of massive civil unrest when the monetary and banking systems finally melt down, to involve the Armed Forces in domestic "peacekeeping".

• As if all of these shortcomings were not enough, the plan for returning the Federal Reserve System to redemption of its notes in gold would put all of this country's monetary eggs in one political-cum-economic basket. If the plan did not work, all would likely be lost. This would be equivalent to playing Russian roulette with a semi-automatic pistol.

In sum, the return-to-redemption plan is an act of self-deception, if not desperation, which does not take advantage even of hindsight. For it proposes to reverse American monetary history on the basis of the very principles and practices which that history has already proven to be unworkable.

3. An alternative gold currency. Which brings this survey to the third plan for monetary reform—the adoption on a State-by-State basis of a new, sound, honest, and constitutional alternative currency consisting of actual gold as an—and ultimately the only—currency officially recognized by the State. In the plan which has been submitted—albeit, so far, unsuccessfully—to several State legislatures:

• The State adopts as its alternative currency so-called "electronic gold currency".

• Actual gold bullion is held for depositors in personal bailment accounts by an electronic gold currency provider (which could be a private organization or the State's own Treasury). So no fractional reserves are involved.

• Title to the gold on deposit can be transferred among depositors electronically or by more traditional means, such as checks.

• The process begins when the State collects some of her taxes in gold, and offers to pay her creditors with gold, on a first-come, first-served basis, from the gold tax fund.

• As more and more creditors request such payment, depleting the fund of gold secured by those taxes initially collected in gold, the State expands the taxes required to be paid in gold, until the State's finances are largely, if not completely, on a gold-currency basis.

In the initial plan I drafted,

• Those who were required to deal with the State in electronic gold currency in order to pay taxes, and those who chose to be paid in gold by the States were the only parties, in addition to the State herself, who were required to maintain electronic-gold-currency accounts.

• Parties who were required to pay their taxes in gold were expected to find it useful to seek payment from their own debtors in gold, and the State's creditors who sought payment in gold were expected to offer to pay gold to their creditors, too, so that the use of gold would percolate through the private economy in gradual, but inexorable, competition with Federal Reserve Notes.

• When the plan was first drafted many years ago, it was accepted that this infusion of gold into the State's finances and her private economy would take time, and assumed that sufficient time would be available for the reform to move forward at a reasonable pace. Now, however, the urgency of the situation requires that the process be speeded up. The State will hold the gold in her own depository, controlled by a State Militia that will be revitalized in the same statute that provides for use of the alternative gold currency. Within thirty to forty-five or so days of the enactment of the enabling legislation, all members of the Militia—which will include every able-bodied adult from sixteen to sixty years of age—will be required to obtain an electronic-gold-currency account as part of his or her Militia duty. Also within those thirty to forty-five days, each and every businessman in the State—each of whom is a member of the Militia, too—will be required to set alternative prices and for his goods and services in both gold and Federal Reserve Notes as part of his Militia duty.

• Except with respect to the payment of particular taxes and payments by the State to her creditors, no one will be required actually to use gold, rather than Federal Reserve Notes, in their day-to-day financial transactions. Yet, the State will have enabled her citizens to do so, and will have established an alternative price-structure in gold for both her own financial affairs and for her entire private economy. At that point, the State and her citizens could, to whatever degree they wished*, voluntarily go off the Federal-Reserve-Note standard to a pure gold standard.* And, presumably, the State and increasingly large percentages of her citizens would do so, in pursuit of their own rational economic and political self-interests.

Why would implementation of this plan be advantageous?

• First and foremost, adoption of such an alternative gold currency would be an act of foresight. It would recognize that resuscitation of the Federal Reserve System is impossible, and that acceptance of a new global fiat currency and central bank to replace that System would be intolerable.

• Second, and no less important, adoption of an alternative gold currency would be an act of scientific insight, because it would introduce a currency the objective value of which could always be verified or falsified immediately upon inspection. That objective value would be a fixed weight of gold. It would be an objective value, because an ounce of gold is an ounce of gold is an ounce of gold—everywhere throughout the world, no matter what economic, political, or social conditions happen to prevail. Under this plan, a specific weight of gold, and only that weight of gold, would become the State's official monetary unit. Thus, the holder of the currency himself would not only own but would actually possess the gold, because gold would be the currency. Contrast this with a Federal Reserve Note. Even when such a note was "redeemable" in gold, some Federal Reserve Bank or the United States Government actually owned and possessed the gold that "backed" the note; and the holder of the note had no more than a claim to redemption. Only upon actual redemption did actual title to and possession of the gold change hands. And that right of redemption was eventually cancelled, both domestically and internationally. As to gold, then, Federal Reserve Notes proved to be, as John Exter so well put it, "an I.O.U. nothing currency", made possible because the "currency" and the gold were entirely separate things, under the control of entirely different people. But with gold as actual money, nothing is owed to anyone else and the holder of the currency himself holds the gold (the currency being gold, and nothing else), so no debt of redemption can ever be repudiated, because no debt of redemption ever arises.

• Third, also in the scientific spirit, an alternative gold currency would allow for more than one experiment to be conducted—indeed, as many as fifty separate trials in each of the several States would be possible. If any single experiment should fail, it would do so only locally, not nationally. If it succeeded, it could be expanded quickly and easily enough elsewhere. And by the process of judicious observations and adjustments, constant improvements on any initial success would be possible. Moreover, even if politically influential factions could succeed in stopping the adoption of an alternative currency in any one particular State, they would be unlikely to be capable of exercising the political clout necessary to suppress it in every other State as well. And if they could not stop it everywhere, the market would surely prove the theory somewhere, and then inevitably expand its application everywhere.

• Fourth, adoption of an alternative gold currency could be accomplished incrementally and gradually, allowing the market to set and equilibrate prices as more and more people employed the new currency in preference to Federal Reserve Notes. No sudden, economically disorienting jump from Federal Reserve Notes to gold would have to occur.

• Fifth, quite unlike the Federal Reserve System and its bills of credit, an alternative currency consisting of gold would be fully constitutional. The Supreme Court has already ruled that the States are not bound, and constitutionally cannot be bound, to use as their currency a currency emitted by Congress—in particular, that they may choose to employ gold and silver in preference to irredeemable paper currency, even when Congress has declared that paper currency to be "legal tender".[4392] Thus, the adoption of an alternative gold currency would return each State to the rule of constitutional law and federalism with respect to money.

• Sixth, introduction of an alternative gold currency would not depend upon a State's having any gold in her Treasury at the beginning of the process. Indeed, adoption of such an alternative currency would bring gold into the State's Treasury right away. Constitutionally, of course, the States cannot coin money.[4393] Only [4392] Lane County v. Oregon, 74 U.S. (7 Wallace) 71 (1869); Hagar v. Reclamation District No. 108, 111 U.S. 701 (1884).

---

[4393] U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1.

Congress enjoys the governmental power "[t]o coin Money".[4394] But, inasmuch as an alternative gold currency could—and initially should—consist of bullion, not coin, no State would be dependent upon the assistance of Congress and the United States Treasury in the adoption of such a currency.

• Seventh, employment of an alternative gold currency would not involve a State in the rat's nest of central economic planning. A State would not be required to attempt to regulate the supply of money against a so-called "price level", to fix interest rates, or to engage in any of the other political-cum-economic manipulations characteristic of a central bank. Whatever amount of gold the people desired to use as their alternative currency would become currency; and the free market would then rationally establish and mutually adjust the prices in gold of all goods and services.

• Eighth, adoption of an alternative gold currency would not serve only one set of selfish special-interest groups at the expense of the rest of society. In particular, adoption of such a currency would facilitate the absolute separation of private banking from the government, on a State-by-State basis. No longer would bankers and their clients in "the financial community" enjoy the status of an economically and politically specially privileged class.

• Ninth, although it would bring about the politically radical end of separating private banks from the government—which "the financial community" would vehemently oppose—adoption of an alternative gold currency would not expose America to the economic equivalent of "mutual assured destruction". At present, any attempt to reform the monetary and banking systems "from the top down" can likely be thwarted by the bankers' threat to precipitate an economic collapse. "Yes", the bankers warn, "you can destroy us. But, more importantly, we can destroy you. If we go down, we will take the whole economy with us. Without us, you will have no currency, no credit, and thereby no means of maintaining a high level of complex economic activity. So we have you by the throat. There is nothing you can do but to continue to allow us to loot society, and then to bail us out when our schemes threaten to implode or explode." With an alternative gold currency, however, monetary reform would not come "from the top down", by attempting to abolish the Federal Reserve System at one fell swoop and thereby throwing the economy into chaos. Rather, reform would come gradually and systematically "from the bottom up", by introducing a sound currency into the free market on a State-by-State basis, in free competition with the Federal Reserve System. If the banking cartel and its clients should respond aggressively, they would merely hoist themselves on their own

---

[4394] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5; art. I, § 10, cl. 1; and art. VI, cl. 2. Of course, private parties may coin nonfraudulent moneys from gold or silver, and employ those coins as media of exchange in the free market. But as the concern of this study is how to bring the government under control in the monetary domain, details of this matter will not be considered here.

pétard, because in any State which had adopted an alternative currency the people would no longer be dependent upon the banks for currency. Whatever the bankers might then do in a destructive vein would only drive the market farther and faster in the direction of the alternative currency. Rather than mutually assured destruction, such actions would bring about the bankers' assured destruction.

• Tenth, on the other hand, if adoption of an alternative currency on a State-by-State basis showed promise, with more and more people using that currency to the exclusion of Federal Reserve Notes in more and more transactions, the banks would be forced to compete. At least some of them might try to generate a new currency "redeemable" in, or "backed" by, gold. Exactly how they might do this, or even if they could do it, one cannot predict, because such a new bank currency would have to be as secure as the alternative currency, which would require that it not be based on fractional reserves (or that it offered to its users some great economic advantage that offset the risk from fractional reserves). Yet, if even some of the banks could move in that direction, it would tend to stabilize the present system, and perhaps allow for its orderly long-term transformation or liquidation, rather than sudden collapse.

To be sure, the adoption of an alternative gold currency would face political hurdles. For example, adoption of gold as currency at the State level would be complicated by claims of the General Government to tax exchanges of gold for Federal Reserve Notes, and exchanges of gold for goods and services (which are now erroneously treated as some sort of "barter" transactions). In the midst of a nationwide economic breakdown, however, any State which adopted an alternative gold currency would be in an especially favorable bargaining position, and would probably be able to negotiate an accommodation with the United States Treasury.

Even if prudence did not prevail at the bargaining table, the State could sue the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, in the "original Jurisdiction" of the Supreme Court,[4395] for their failures to maintain all forms of United States currency at the statutory par—which now should be about $42-2/9 per ounce of gold, not some $1,600.00 or more.[4396] With the publicity such a suit would receive in the context of the present economic crisis, the matter would become a political issue to end all political issues—in comparison to which President Andrew Jackson's fight with the second Bank of the United States would appear to have been an exchange of pleasantries. Under such circumstances, would the Justices of the Supreme Court dare to rule that the States are not entitled to protect their own people from economic ruin caused by the incompetence or corruption of the politicians, bureaucrats, bankers, and financial manipulators in the District of Columbia and New York City? Would the Justices dare to deny the people the right to ward off these vampires with "a cross of gold"? And if the Justices did rule against the States' attempts to bring about meaningful monetary reform, would not their obstructionism sweep away the General Government's very last shred of credibility? In that event, would not the States and their citizens then put into action Nancy Reagan's dictum—"Just say 'No!'"—and simply refuse to comply with all demands from that Government for payments of unconstitutional taxes that hindered the use of the alternative currency—and then back up those refusals in the most effective manner?

---

[4395] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 2: "In all Cases * * * in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction."

[4396] See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5119(a) and 5117(b).

Actually, for numerous reasons, the Justices might be expected to rule in favor of the States: First, (as explained above) they could simply fall back on judicial precedents favorable to the States. Second, they would surely recognize their own inability to correct the underlying problem in the course of overruling those precedents and deciding the cases against the States; whereas, in reliance on those precedents, the States could take actions that might have a favorable result. Third, the Justices would be inclined to view the entire matter as constituting a "political question" at the highest constitutional level—that is, between the States and their people, on the one side, and public officials in the General Government and their clients in special-interest groups, on the other side. Ruling for the States would allow the parties to the dispute to settle it by political means, which as a practical matter would provide the only method for resolution of the controversy. Fourth, the Justices would want to avoid the loss of credibility that the Judiciary would suffer amongst the vast mass of Americans if the courts ruled against the States. And fifth, they would fear the severe economic, political, and social consequences which would undoubtedly arise if they denied the States a free hand, the present monetary and banking systems irretrievably collapsed, and no alternative currency were then available for the people's use.

Why, then, are not more of the champions of sound money, limited government, and free markets actively promoting the adoption of an alternative gold currency? The present economic crisis presents the best opportunity since 1932 for taking the steps necessary and sufficient to free the American people from their thralldom to the Federal Reserve System and the vicious factions behind it. Under the pressure of this crisis, common people are finally awakening to their predicament, and sensing what needs to be done—because, as Samuel Johnson once observed, nothing focuses a man's mind more sharply than his impending hanging. Moreover, this may be the last opportunity of its kind for a long time to come. For if "the financial community" can succeed in jury-rigging some supra-national global currency and central bank, the Ponzi scheme of fiat currency can probably be kept inflated for another generation, until a final, utterly catastrophic breakdown sweeps across the entire world. So, the American people must be convinced now—immediately, if not sooner—ahora mismo, as our Spanish-speaking friends would say—that this country's economy cannot be restored by mere repair or renovation of the existing edifice of money and banking, but only by its total replacement. The present structure is rotten to its very foundations, and even below. It lacks the capacity to survive—and can claim no right to be saved. A new structure must be built from the ground up, on a new site, according to a different plan, with better workmen. If this can be accomplished, then for the first time in generations Americans, indeed all of mankind, will enjoy honest weights and measures in the monetary field—and with that reform, will have a realistic hope to restore honest commerce and honest politics as well.

APPENDIX B

"A Cross of Debt"—A re-edited version of the full text of an address part of which was presented at the May, 2011, Meeting of the Committee for Monetary Research & Education, in New York City.

At the Democratic National Convention in 1896, Williams Jennings Bryan intoned: "You shall not crucify mankind on a cross of gold!" No society, though, has ever been crucified on a cross of gold—at least when gold functioned as actual money. But many have been crucified on a cross of debt—particularly when debt masqueraded as currency. And America is now on the road to her Golgotha, leading to her crucifixion. Being no saint myself, I am not inclined to say of those planning to perform this crucifixion: "Forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do." Because they know perfectly well what they are doing.

At base, the problem reduces to an alliance between two voracious crime families: avaricious bankers and financial speculators, on one side, in league with ambitious careerist politicians, on the other. Their strategy has always been to link the moneyed class with the General Government's Treasury, so as to advance the special interests of both families. The bankers and speculators incorporate the Treasury as an integral part of their business plans. Rogue politicians and public officials agree to coördinate the Treasury with, if not subordinate it to, the bankers and speculators in order to ensure their own accession to and continuance in office. And the common people pay the costs.

This is an old scheme. Well before America's War of Independence, in his Commentaries on the Laws of England, Sir William Blackstone trenchantly explained how it worked in the Mother Country. After discussing the "several branches of the revenue", Blackstone turned to how these sums were appropriated, > first and principally, to the payment of the interest of the national debt.

>
> IN order to take a clear and comprehensive view of the nature of this national debt, it must first be premised, that after the [English] revolution [of 1688], when our new connexions with Europe introduced a new system of foreign politics, the expenses of the nation, not only in settling the new establishment, but in maintaining long wars, * * * increased to an unusual degree: insomuch that it was not thought advisable to raise all the expenses of any one year by taxes to be levied within that year, lest the unaccustomed weight of them should create murmurs among the people. It was therefore the policy of the times to anticipate the revenues of their posterity, by borrowing immense sums for the current service of the state, and to lay no more taxes upon the subject than would suffice to pay the annual interest of the sums to be borrowed: by this means converting the principal debt into a new species of property, transferrable from one man to another at any time and in any quantity. * * * This laid the foundation of what is called the national debt * * * .

BY this means the quantity of property in the kingdom is greatly encreased in idea, compared with former times; yet if we coolly consider it, not at all encreased in reality. We may boast of large fortunes, and quantities of money in the funds. But where does this money exist? It exists only in name, in paper, in public faith, in parliamentary security: and that is undoubtedly sufficient for the creditors of the public to rely on. But then what is the pledge, which the public faith has pawned for the security of these debts? The land, the trade, and the personal industry of the subject; from which the money must arise that supplies the several taxes. In these therefore, and these only, the property of the public creditors does really and intrinsically exist: and of course the land, the trade, and the personal industry of individuals, are diminished in their true value just so much as they are pledged to answer. * * * In short, the property of a creditor of the public consists in a certain portion of the national taxes: by how much therefore he is the richer, by so much the nation, which pays these taxes, is the poorer.

THE only advantage, that can result to a nation from public debts, is the encrease of circulation by multiplying the cash of the kingdom, and creating a new species of money, always ready to be employed in any beneficial undertaking, by means of it's transferrable quality; and yet producing some profit, even when it lies idle and unemployed. A certain proportion of debt seems therefore to be highly useful to a trading people; but * * * [t]h[i]s much is indisputably certain, that the present magnitude of our national incumbrances very far exceeds all calculations of commercial benefit, and is productive of the greatest inconveniences. For, first, the enormous taxes, that are raised upon the necessaries of life for the payment of the interest of this debt, are a hurt both to trade and manufactures, by raising the price as well of the artificer's subsistence, as of the raw material, and of course, in a much greater proportion, the price of the commodity itself. Secondly if part of this debt be owing to foreigners, either they draw out of the kingdom annually a considerable quantity of specie for the interest; or else it is made an argument to grant them unreasonable privileges in order to induce them to reside here. Thirdly if the whole be owing to subjects only, it is then charging the active and industrious subject, who pays his share of the taxes, to maintain the indolent and idle creditor who receives them. Lastly, and principally, it weakens the internal strength of a state, by anticipating those resources which should be reserved to defend it in case of necessity.

> The interest we now pay for our debts would be nearly sufficient to maintain any war, that any national motives could require.[4397]

This system of not "rais[ing] all the expenses of any one year by taxes to be levied within that year, lest the unaccustomed weight of them should create murmurs among the people", plainly proceeded from distrust that the people would actually agree with their governors that the "unaccustomed weight" of taxation the officials wanted them to bear was justified—which reflected either a cynical disdain for the people's intelligence, or the officials' guilty consciences that the people were right. The "funding" scheme operated under the deception of "anticipat[ing] the revenues of [the people's] posterity, by borrowing immense sums for the current service of the state, and * * * lay[ing] no more taxes upon the subject than would suffice to pay the annual interest of the sums to be borrowed"—while shifting the "unaccustomed weight" of taxation to unknown individuals in some distant future, individuals who neither were represented nor were capable of being represented in the Parliament which imposed such burdens on them. And, ultimately, this system manifested the contempt in which officialdom held both the present and future generations of citizens: the present generation, as greedy fools ever ready to pile their own burdens onto the backs of posterity; future generations, as fit subjects for the very epitome of tyranny, "taxation without representation".

As Blackstone pointed out, the British "funding" system "convert[ed] the principal debt into a new species of property": a claim by the public creditors on "[t]he land, the trade, and the personal industry of the [people]; from which the money must arise that supplie[d] the * * * taxes" to pay interest on the debt. This "new species of property" amounted to alienation by the present generation of politicians to the public creditors of the labor of future generations of workers, without those workers' knowledge, let alone consent. Future generations were condemned, without votes or even a hearing, to be born with crushing burdens of debt already laid upon their backs, their lives mortgaged to the involuntary servitude of paying perpetual taxes to defray perpetual interest on perpetual indebtedness. This was a formula for intergenerational serfdom, and for irreconcilable class conflicts that would inevitably and inexorably lead to a National disaster: the public creditors in the present seeking to expand the National debt and bring more and more private resources under governmental control so as to assure the payment of ever-mounting interest; the taxpayers in the future seeking to limit the disappearance of social wealth into the black hole of political redistribution before the National economy collapsed—and the struggle raging until either the debt crushed the country, or the country somehow threw off the debt (and with it the public creditors and their political henchmen).

[4397] Ante note 142, Volume 1, at 325-328.

Upon her separation from Great Britain, America did not distance herself from the Mother Country's "funding" scheme. To the contrary: The tainted genius of Alexander Hamilton, as the first Secretary of the Treasury, fastened that incubus onto this country's throat, from which it has sucked America's lifeblood since then. Hamilton schemed to ally the propertied class of financial speculators with the political class of officeholders by providing the speculators with a permanent personal financial interest in supporting the General Government, and the officeholders with a permanent personal political interest in allowing the speculators to exercise influence in the counsels of government disproportionate to that of all other citizens—thus attenuating, if not frustrating entirely, the effect of widespread suffrage by insinuating into the polity a surreptitious advantage for the wealthy.[4398] In Hamilton's imagination, this arrangement would serve to strengthen the General Government. That it would also cause that Government to enrich financially and empower politically the speculators—and, at length, to find itself held a veritable hostage to them—seemed to escape his notice.

By itself, Hamilton's "funding" scheme was bad enough. Worse yet, it included not only permanent public indebtedness, but also a nascent national bank—the first Bank of the United States—intended to assert control over the Nation's currency by creating "money" out of nothing through the financial card-trick of fractional reserves. Although sometimes met with strong political resistance—as during the Jacksonian era, when the second Bank of the United States was disestablished—Hamilton's system gradually expanded in institutional scope and power with the creation of the National Banking System in the 1860s and then the Federal Reserve System in 1913.[4399] Upon the complete integration of bank and state in the latter year arose the potential for—indeed, in light of fallen human nature, the certainty of—the elephantiasis of public indebtedness. For the encouragement of which, propagandists during Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal broadcast the Keynesian apology that no amount of public debt is really a burden, because "we owe it to ourselves". Unfortunately, the truth of the matter is that "we" do not owe it "to ourselves". Rather, some Americans, present and future, supposedly owe it to a different group composed of both Americans and foreigners. Effectively, the public debt mortgages the property and productive capacity of the entire country to the speculators in government paper and the money-managers whose control over paper currency and bank-credit enables that debt to be floated on the froth of Ponzi finance.

The grotesque size of the National debt which Americans now purportedly owe as a consequence of the actions of their putative "representatives" in Congress—and the impossibility of this sum's ever being paid by the putative [4398] See, e.g., C. Bowers, Jefferson and Hamilton, ante note 1598, at 45.

---

[4399] See generally E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 1, at 260-389, 689-866.

debtors in real terms—should by now have awakened every thinking person to the realization that Hamilton's system, as refined in technique and expanded in scope by Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson, Franklin Roosevelt, and their successors in office, has dragged this country into the worst financial crisis in its history.

More importantly yet, this crisis is not merely accidental, or coincidental, but the necessary, inevitable, inexorable, and even intended consequence of the operation of Hamilton's system. As Hamilton's opponent, Thomas Jefferson, warned the Americans of his day in words that should resonate even more vibrantly now: "the principle of spending money to be paid by posterity, under the name of funding, is but swindling futurity on a large scale".[4400] Today, it is no longer a matter of "swindling futurity on a large scale"; rather, the "swindling" has swelled to such a stupendous scale that numbers of near-astronomical magnitudes must be employed to describe it.

"[S]windling", however, is not the product of the unconscious forces of Nature. It cannot occur without human action—that is, without purposeful behavior by identifiable individuals. So the critical questions become, "With respect to America's National debt, who is 'swindling futurity on a large scale'?" and "Why are they not being punished in proportion to their crimes?"

In its origin and structurally, public debt is not the same as private debt. Although formal "lenders" and "borrowers" are to be found in both cases, where public debt is concerned the actual borrowers are never also the primary payors. Although the people's purported "representatives" negotiate the loans, they pledge their constituents' assets as collateral. Here lies the fatal defect in Hamilton's and every other similar "funding" system: Because the individuals who borrow are different individuals from those who will ultimately be forced to pay, the interests of the borrowers, as well as of the lenders, can (and usually do) become so disconnected from the interests of the payors that the borrowers collude with the lenders at the expense of the payors.

At that point, the "funding" system becomes an exceedingly dangerous combination amongst rogue public officials and financial speculators against the general public, for at least two reasons:

- First, it is a combination especially easy to contrive and manage. On the one hand, the "representatives" can be coöpted or captured by the lenders and the well organized and funded special-interest groups allied with them. On the other hand, many among the affected population can exert no countervailing political influence—indeed, can have no way of knowing, let alone doing anything, about what is being imposed upon them—because they are either in their minorities or not even in existence at all when are incurred the debts for the repayment of which they will eventually be held liable.

---

[4400] Letter of Thomas Jefferson to John Taylor, 28 May 1816, in The Works of Thomas Jefferson, ante note 3952, Volume XI, at 533.

• Second, it is a combination especially prone to get out of hand, because of the synergistic interaction among human avarice, ambition, and the appetite for abusive powers. On the one hand, the lenders are intent upon securing for themselves a stream of income guaranteed by "the full faith and credit" of the government—which means, in actuality, the government's ability and willingness to apply unlimited force to the people in order to extract from them the wherewithal to pay the debt. For that reason, the lenders will promote expansion of the government's power to tax and otherwise loot the citizenry. As a practical matter, the lenders "invest" in the metastasis of the apparatus of governmental coercion. In addition, the lenders "invest" in the metastasis of governmental powers across the board, so as to create new excuses for the government to spend and therefore to borrow. A frugal government is the financial speculators' worst nightmare, because then they would have to invest in private enterprises that, lacking the ability to coerce customers into buying their products, might fail. Thus, on the side of the lenders, the Hamiltonian "funding" system is a formula for ever-expanding statism.

So, too, on the side of the public officials who incur the debts. Rogue officials favor ever-increasing public debt as a means to increase governmental spending, which rationalizes ever-increasing governmental power. The larger and more powerful the government, the more secure their political careers, and the greater the authority, personal prestige, and financial benefits that accrue to them.

Worse yet, in the process of incurring public debt, the lenders often effectively sit on both sides of the bargaining table. Of course, on one side, the lenders represent themselves. But, on the other side, the public officials represent the lenders, too, because the lenders either secure the election of those officials through campaign-contributions or capture them later on through lobbying and other forms of behind-the-scenes influence. Next to no one at the table stands up for Mr. and Mrs. America and their children, who will be made to foot the bill.

Finally, because the borrower is always the servant of the lender, once the public debt has grown sufficiently large that public finance has degenerated effectively into a Ponzi scheme, the lenders hold even honest public officials hostage. Just as with the dope-fiend who is always dependent upon his next "fix", public officials must enter into more and ever more loans—constantly raising "the debt ceiling" of their addiction—or the government will collapse in financial ruin. So, just as with the dope-fiend who steals from his family and friends in order to support his habit and to avoid having to "go cold turkey", public officials will impose any financial burden on the masses in order to salvage their own careers.

It is no answer to these objections to posit the possibility that a significant proportion of the general public may, directly or indirectly, hold some large part of the public debt.[4401] First, as this proportion of the public always exists in the present, not the future, its mere size does not obviate—but in fact on that score may exacerbate—the intergenerational conflict inherent in public indebtedness. Second, no reason exists why a significant proportion of the public—even comprising a sizeable majority—cannot constitute a classic "faction" inimical to the common good.[4402]

Today in America, this process has progressed to the point at which the interests of the borrowers and the lenders have become, not simply adverse, but even aggressively antagonistic, to the interests of the payors. The speculators in New York City and their political puppets in the District of Columbia are arrayed against the vast mass of Americans, both present and future, in a conflict that is not amenable to compromise. The question is, "Can common Americans prevail, and if so how?"

It has become somewhat trite to point out that the Chinese ideograph for "crisis" includes the ideas "danger" and "opportunity". But that observation still has merit. At this juncture, the "opportunity" is for Americans finally to realize that Hamilton's system has not worked, and can never be made to work, and therefore must be replaced—immediately, if not sooner. The present situation provides Americans with the best chance they have ever had to kill two vultures with one stone: first, to sever the link between the elephantiasis of governmental debt and the amassment of excessive and abusive powers by rogue public officials; second, to eliminate, gradually but inexorably, debt-currency, fractional-reserve central banking, and the integration of bank and state, without which the present gigantic Ponzi-pyramid of supposed public debt could never have been erected.

The "danger" is that, while the relatively few Americans astute enough to understand the full implications of their predicament are mulling over what do to about it, rogue politicians and the crowd of bankers and financial speculators who pull their strings will set out to betray this country once again—and in their expectation decisively and finally—by [4401] See 31 U.S.C. § 3102(b). And many investment funds open to the public maintain public debt as significant parts of their portfolios.

---

[4402] See The Federalist No. 10 (James Madison) (emphasis supplied): "By a faction I understand a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or a minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community."

(i) "stabilizing" the tottering Federal Reserve System through the banking cartel's integration into a supra-national central bank capable of emitting a supra-national currency,[4403] closely followed by

(ii) "stabilizing" America's National debt with loans made and payable in the new currency—complete, of course, with severe "conditionalities" that will set in stone the pyramid of perpetual public debt with the cement of the people's permanent penury.

This would be a "decisive" betrayal, because the Forces of Darkness expect that, once a supra-national central bank and fiat currency had been set into operation, and this country's crushing load of National debt tied to that new financial régime, Americans would be unable to do anything—economically, politically, or legally—about it for generations, if ever. For the borrower is servant to the lender; and if the debt could never be paid off, the servitude could never be ended. After all, what have Americans been able to do about the depredations of the Federal Reserve System in the nearly one hundred years since its illegitimate birth in 1913? From the collapse of the economy in 1932 and the seizure of the people's gold in 1933-1934, to the palpably criminal "bail outs", "quantitative easings", corrupt fixing of interest-rates, and suppression of the prices of gold and silver of the present day, no crimes have been too outrageous for the banking and financial racketeers to commit—yet next to nothing has been done about any of them. So, if a domestic central bank has proven to be largely immune from popular control, how much more immune will a supra*-national* central bank be?

Moreover, this immunity will have the most serious of consequences. For, just as the erection of the Federal Reserve System effectively transferred supreme domestic governmental power to bankers and financial speculators, so that Congress has become shamelessly subservient to them, so will the establishment of a supra-national central bank effectively transfer America's very National sovereignty to that cabal, so that Congress will become, not merely impotent, but completely irrelevant to the scheme of financial control which will be fastened upon the American people. Thus, this is a complot, not simply for violating the Constitution of the United States, but beyond that for overthrowing the Declaration of Independence.

So, the main thing is to recognize that, at base, America is confronted, not with a merely economic problem, but with a profoundly political and legal problem. If the latter is not solved in time, the former will eventuate in catastrophe. Politically, Americans must decide once and for all who is in control of the government of the United States—WE THE PEOPLE, or the bankers, the financial speculators allied with them, and their lap-dog political front-men. And once the proper order of precedence has been established, Americans must determine to use the Constitution and laws: (i) to separate the Treasury from financial speculators to the greatest degree possible, and (ii) to separate bank from state finally and absolutely. As I have already dealt with the second of these in my address "Cross of Gold", presented to this assembly at its October meeting in 2010,[4404] I shall focus only on the first of these goals.

---

[4403] This is a plan on which the Forces of Darkness have long cogitated. See, e.g., the detailed charts between pages 150 and 151 in Hans Heymann, Plan for Permanent Peace (New York, New York: Harper & Brothers Publishers, 1941).

How might Americans go about separating the Treasury from financial speculators to the greatest degree possible? The best way to proceed is for WE THE PEOPLE to act through their States, as economic, political, and especially legal vehicles for "change we can believe in".

A. The first step in this corrective process must be to prevent the present problem from becoming any more serious, by imposing strict limitations on public indebtedness in the future. To saddle future generations of Americans with a staggering load of public debt is more than just financially imprudent or even morally problematic. At some point, it becomes positively illegal. The only time the Constitution expressly addresses the concerns of the future is when it declares WE THE PEOPLE'S intent "to * * * secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity".[4405] Now, generally a servant is subject to the control of his master. Therefore, relative to his master, the servant is deprived of liberty. Specifically, "the borrower is servant to the lender"—his servitude proportional to the degree of his indebtedness. So, if "our Posterity" are cast in the rôle of involuntary "borrowers" of sums so huge that repayment in real terms is impossible, they are thereby consigned to the permanent status of "servants"—and worse than even indentured servants, because they never agreed to their servitude—and in that thralldom are not "secure[d]" in "the Blessings of Liberty", but instead are stripped of them.

This is contrary to the explicit purpose of the Constitution "to * * * establish Justice" as a permanent condition.[4406] For "our Posterity" will have had no notice of, will have been afforded no hearing as to, will have taken no other part in, and certainly will never have given their permission for, the transactions that incurred the supposed public debt for the repayment of which they will be taxed or otherwise mulct. It will have been physically impossible for those of "our Posterity" who were not even alive at the time to be observers of, let alone parties to, these transactions. Therefore, imposing a liability upon them to pay off these debts—ultimately to be enforced through taxation imposed at the point of bayonets—amounts to the quintessential case of "taxation without representation".

[4404] See APPENDIX A, ante, at 1903.

[4405] U.S. Const. preamble (emphasis supplied).

[4406] U.S. Const. preamble.

It is bootless to contend that "our Posterity" will have been "virtually represented" by the past and present generations of Americans. Historically, this apology is lame. America's Founders were "virtually represented" by members of Parliament who were actually their contemporaries—and nonetheless they rejected such "representation" as insufficient, if not fraudulent. Indeed, "imposing Taxes on us without our Consent" in the present was one of the "Facts submitted to a candid world" which the Declaration of Independent set out as evidence that "[t]he history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny". One wonders how "imposing Debts on us without our Consent", on an intergenerational basis, could sound any less in usurpation and tyranny.

In principle, too, the apology of "virtual representation" is nonsensical.

- First, even if "representatives" elected in the present can properly "represent" the generation that ensconced them in office—which is an highly debatable point under present political conditions—they cannot "represent" future generations the circumstances of which must be entirely unknown to and unknowable by them. How can "representatives" today possibly judge whether "our Posterity" in some future time will be able to afford such a gargantuan debt in the face of the vicissitudes that may then plague them?

- Second, "representatives" elected in the present cannot presume, let alone know, that "our Posterity" would even concur in the actual process—always convoluted, often corrupt—by which the public debt is incurred today, let alone accept the results of that process. To the contrary: As rational beings, "our Posterity" would never agree to afford carte blanche to intertemporal "virtual representation", because both the "representatives" and their constituents in the present are not neutral arbiters, but instead are patently self-interested parties intent upon enjoying the immediate benefits of deficit finance in the present while sloughing off its inevitable burdens onto the future. Such "representatives" are absolutely disqualified as "trustees" of the public interest as far as "our Posterity" is concerned, because their own interests are inexorably adverse to those of the purported "beneficiaries" of their actions.

- Third, "representatives" elected in the present can hardly conclude that "our Posterity" would necessarily accept as valuable at all, let alone worth the cost, the particular governmental programs on which those "representatives" expended the moneys they borrowed.

The complete corrective to this intergenerational conflict of interests would be to eliminate altogether, or at least drastically curtail, the power of Congress "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States".[4407] That course of action, however, would be cumbersome, because it would require a very specific Amendment of the Constitution, which would have to be "propose[d]" by Congress itself—unless Americans want to play political Russian Roulette by calling for a constitutional convention.[4408]

In the interim, the best that can be done is to recognize that, if some public debt is arguably justified on the ground that it may become unavoidably necessary—perhaps, for example, during a properly declared "War" fully justifiable under "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God"[4409]—nonetheless in incurring any such debt the fiduciary responsibility of the present generation to "our Posterity" must be of the very highest order. No debt should be incurred that is not constitutionally "necessary and proper" beyond a reasonable doubt.[4410] So, the prudent as well as the circumspect approach for the present should be to enforce strict "checks and balances" on the exercise of the governmental power "[t]o borrow Money".

Now, the ultimate practical "check and balance" on speculation is uncertainty. Lenders do not lend freely to borrowers who are not likely to repay. Public officials have been able to amass the present gargantuan debt, because they have purported "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States".[4411] And lenders have relied on what is called "the full faith and credit of the United States" (a phrase, by the way, which the Constitution never uses)—or, more descriptively, what has always been the robotic willingness of common Americans to continue to pay the bills passed on to them by public officials in the name of the United States.

At base, though, "the credit of the United States" is a legal fiction. It can extend only to those actions of public officials that are constitutional. So not all purported "public debt" is lawful simply because it comes forth stamped with some official's formal approval. The legitimacy of any ostensible "public debt" is contingent upon its rectitude, not simply its naked existence. The Constitution itself declares that "[t]he validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, * * * shall not be questioned".[4412] This limitation embodies the recognition that some supposed "public debts" may not, after all, be "authorized by law"—as, for

---

[4407] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2.

[4408] See U.S. Const. art. V.

[4409] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 and Declaration of Independence.

[4410] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 18.

[4411] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2 (emphasis supplied).

[4412] U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 4 (emphasis supplied). See also 31 U.S.C. 3102(a) (emphasis supplied): "With the approval of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury may borrow on the credit of the United States Government amounts necessary for expenditures authorized by law and may issue bonds of the Government for the amounts borrowed * * * ."

instance, when they are unconstitutional or otherwise illegal—and that all alleged "public debts" may be "questioned" on that very ground.

Indeed, the supremacy of the Constitution[4413] requires that all ostensible "public debts"—no less than any and all other actions of public officials—should be capable of being "questioned" at all times. For "[i]t cannot be presumed that any clause of the constitution is intended to be without effect".[4414] And inasmuch as the power of Congress "[t]o borrow Money on the credit of the United States" is a delegated power, limited by its terms, therefore the burden of establishing that it has been properly exercised in any and every case "is upon those making the claim"—namely, the public officials and the lenders who purport to incur the debt.[4415] If that burden cannot be carried with respect to any portion of the purported "public debt", then such part is null and void. For the alleged assumption of "public debt" always involves some supposed "law". If that "law" is unconstitutional, then it is no "law" at all. "[I]t confers no rights * * * imposes no duties * * * [and] is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed".[4416] But only if these principles are actually applied to the present "public debt" will America burn the bridges between the financial speculators on Wall Street and the Treasury on Pennsylvania Avenue. And the time for such incendiary action has arrived. Under contemporary circumstances, the purported "public debt" of the United States not only should be but shall have to be more than just "questioned", because its cancerous growth has set into motion an autocatalytic reaction which, unless soon quenched, will ignite the worst of all possible economic conflagrations: an hyperinflationary depression.

The formula for calculating what portion of the purported "public debt" is legitimate and what portion is not is straightforward. Bills for raising revenue are inevitably tied to governmental spending, the former being the effect and the latter the cause. As the Constitution declares, "Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States".[4417] In any particular year, the government's budget typically provides that so much is to be spent on certain activities—and to pay for it, so much is to be raised through taxes;[4418] so much through borrowing;[4419] so much (perhaps) through "dispos[al] of * * * the [4413] See U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2.

---

[4414] Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 174 (1803). Accord, Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U.S. 41, 87 (1900); Blake v. McClung, 172 U.S. 239, 261 (1898).

[4415] See Bute v. Illinois, 333 U.S. 640, 653 (1948).

[4416] Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425, 442 (1886).

[4417] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[4418] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[4419] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 2.

Territory or other Property belonging to the United States";[4420] and so much through any other sources of governmental income. So, because governmental income and expenditures are thus inextricably linked, in order to determine the unconstitutional portion of any amount of ostensible "public debt" incurred in any fiscal year, one need only determine what proportion of the expenditures for that year, related to that debt, are unconstitutional.

If a specific program is tied to a particular loan, then the unconstitutionality of that program will determine the unconstitutionality of that loan. If the program is unconstitutional, the debt incurred to float it is null and void.[4421] But if the money the Treasury borrows goes into its general fund, not tied to any particular program, then some formula for allocating the reduction of debt in relation to unconstitutional activities must be employed. For example, let

> T (TAXES COLLECTED) + D (DEBT INCURRED) + S (SALES OF PROPERTY) = E (EXPENDITURES); and > X = THE AMOUNT OF E THAT INVOLVES UNCONSTITUTIONAL ACTIVITIES.

Now, X cannot easily be applied to reduce S, because, in contradistinction to "Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises" which may be expended "to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States",[4422] and to borrowing which must be "authorized by law",[4423] the Constitution imposes no specific limitation on the discretion of Congress to "dispose of * * * the Territory or other Property of the United States".[4424] Of course, any such disposal would have to further the goals set out in the Constitution's Preamble. So, if some sale of property were made specifically in order to finance an unconstitutional program, that sale could be rescinded. As of now, though, few of these transactions occur. So, for the sake of simplicity at this point, this source of income may be disregarded. (In the future, though, things may be different, as will be discussed below.)

X should be applied to D before being applied to T, precisely in order to discourage lending to the General Government, because, more than any other source of governmental income, lending facilitates and encourages unconstitutional expenditures. After all, unlike taxpayers, lenders act voluntarily and presumably with access to adequate information from the General Government's budget and other official sources. Thus, they lend their money knowing full well (or at least on [4420] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

---

[4421] See the discussion of Hanauer v. Doane, 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 342 (1871), post, at 1942.

[4422] U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[4423] Compare U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 4 with art. I, § 8, cl. 2.

[4424] See U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2.

adequate notice of) how it will be spent, and implicitly approving of those expenditures. In addition, just as are the public officials with whom they deal, lenders are chargeable with full knowledge of the powers—and the disabilities—of the General Government, and therefore of which portions of the budget are legitimate or not. So, to the extent that some portion of the public debt subsidizes unconstitutional or otherwise illegal expenditures in the relevant budget, the lenders are in pari delicto with the rogue public officials who borrow and spend the money, aiding those officials in perpetrating a fraud on the American people by purporting to impose a liability on the people to repay a debt for expenditures which cannot be charged to them in the first place. Therefore, when the time comes for repayment of the alleged debt, the lenders are surely not entitled to that portion which was illegally incurred in the first place. Indeed, because of their wrongdoing, arguably they are entitled to nothing at all.

This result is well supported by judicial precedent of long standing. For example, in Hanauer v. Doane,[4425] the Supreme Court considered whether a loan, a portion of which was known by the lender to be applied to the purchase of supplies for the Confederate States Army, was repayable, in whole or in part. The Court held that "[i]f either of the[ ] portions of the consideration on which the notes were given was illegal, the notes are void in toto. Such is the elementary rule, for which it is unnecessary to cite authorities."[4426] As the Court explained, > [w]ith whatever impunity a man may lend money or sell goods to another who he knows intends to devote them to a use that is only malum prohibitum, or of inferior criminality, he cannot do it without turpitude, when he knows or has every reason to believe that such money or goods are to be used for the perpetration of a heinous crime, and that they were procured for that purpose.

>
> * * * * *
>
> No crime is greater than treason. He who, being bound by his allegiance to a government, sells goods to the agent of an armed combination to overthrow that government, knowing that the purchaser buys them for that treasonable purpose, is himself guilty of treason or a misprision thereof. He voluntarily aids the treason. He cannot be permitted to stand on the nice metaphysical distinction that, although he knows that the purchaser buys the goods for the purpose of aiding the rebellion, he does not sell them for that purpose. The consequences of his acts are too serious and enormous to admit of such a plea. He must be taken to intend the consequences of his own voluntary act.[4427]

[4425] 79 U.S. (12 Wallace) 342 (1871).

[4426] Id. (12 Wallace) at 345.

[4427] Id. (12 Wallace) at 346, 347.

Support for the Confederate States Army in the field was, of course, a treasonous activity, explicitly so defined by the Constitution.[4428] The fundamental point, though, is not that such support was specifically "Treason", but that it was a violation of the Constitution. "Treason" is a crime only because the Constitution makes it so. But every unconstitutional act into which rogue public officials enter knowingly and willfully, or with reckless disregard for the consequences, or in willful blindness to the truth, is also a crime, because those officials "shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support th[e] Constitution",[4429] and because various statutes so declare.[4430] And if those rogues or their myrmidons then accost WE THE PEOPLE with arms, in order to collect the money to pay for their illegal acts, their assaults amount to no less than "Treason". For every unconstitutional act on the part of rogue public officials constitutes a "combination to overthrow th[e] government", in the sense of setting aside the Constitution, at least in part; and every attempt forcibly to compel obedience from WE THE PEOPLE through the deployment of "law-enforcement agencies" constitutes "an armed combination to overthrow th[e] government". So any loan for which any part of the consideration is the performance of an act that is a violation of the Constitution is "void in toto".

Thus,

> • If X is less than D, then each bond, note, or other evidence of obligation that makes up the total debt is declared null and void to the extent of X ÷ D times its face value. This relieves the taxpayers of any liability to repay this amount of debt.
>
> • If X is equal to D, then the total debt is declared null and void. This relieves the taxpayers of any liability to repay any of the debt. And,
>
> • If X is greater than D, then the total debt is declared null and void, and a credit to the extent of (X – D) ÷ T times the tax paid by each taxpayer for the year in question is to be applied to the taxpayer's next year's tax. This relieves the taxpayers of any liability to repay any of the debt, and refunds to them the excessive taxes that they paid.

This calculation may become arithmetically more complicated if some expenditures for a particular year are for service of debts incurred in relation to budgets of previous years. But the same principle applies. A further complication is that some public debt will have to be excluded from the calculation altogether on [4428] See U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 1 and Ex parte Bollman, 8 U.S. (4 Cranch) 75, 126 (1807).

---

[4429] U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 3.

[4430] See 18 U.S.C. §§ 241 and 242.

equitable grounds. For example, the Social Security System's so-called "trust fund" has been compelled to "invest" its receipts in public debt. In equity, then, that portion of the debt cannot be liquidated, except to the extent that the Social Security payments it finances can themselves be constitutionally reduced or even cancelled.[4431]

Through this procedure, invalid "public debt" is not "repudiated"; it is not "nullified"; it is not "cancelled"; it is not even "dishonored"—rather, it is recognized as never having come into legal existence in the first place. Neither can it be said that invalid "public debt" is left unpaid. All debts are always paid in practice—if not by the debtor, then by the creditor, or by some third party surety or guarantor. The only question is, "Who pays what, and on what grounds?"

Were this procedure applied today, financial speculators would lose their enthusiasm for "investing" in public debt, unless they were legally assured that whatever part of the General Government's budget that debt financed were completely constitutional. Astute lenders would purchase only public debt explicitly tied to specific expenditures for specific programs, the legality of which could easily be assessed. Even then, they would likely demand official "certificates of constitutionality" for any program that could not be fully justified on the very face of the Constitution. As any such certificates coming from Congress or the Executive would be merely indicative, but not dispositive, of the question without a judicial determination—which would require at least some sort of formal declaratory judgment on the matter—uncertainty would discourage any but the hardiest lenders from risking their capital on any loan that had the least taint of unconstitutionality attached to it.

The States should take the lead in the process of identifying those portions of the budget (and derivatively of the public debt) that are illegal, if only to reassert their authority under the Tenth Amendment. After all, in order to begin to enforce that Amendment, Americans need to become clear on what "powers [are] not delegated to the United States by the Constitution", but "are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people". Inasmuch as no one can reasonably expect officials of the General Government to investigate, educate, and mobilize the people on this subject, the task devolves upon the States.

B. This still leaves the legitimate part of the existing debt—no small amount, by any means. It can be reduced, though, (i) by exercising the General Government's reserved right to cancel certain contingent liabilities, (ii) by liquidating the assets that the government can best spare, and (iii) by raising some additional revenue. The rather piquant irony is that Americans can both combine reduction of the public debt with separation of bank and state, and turn the present fiat-currency system, which the speculators and politicians created in order to increase the public debt, into the means to eliminate it.

---

[4431] See Flemming v. Nestor, 363 U.S. 603 (1960).

1. The first step in resolving this problem will be to repeal the provision of law that requires the Treasury to redeem Federal Reserve Notes for "lawful money"[4432]—thus beginning the separation of bank and state by imposing the entire burden for redemption on the twelve Federal Reserve Banks alone, where in economic rationality and justice it belongs. This reform can be accomplished simply by statute, and immediately, under the aegis of Section 30 of the original Federal Reserve Act, in which Congress "expressly reserved" "[t]he right to amend, alter, or repeal th[at] Act" at any time, in any particular, and for any reason.[4433]

2. The second step in dealing with the legitimate portion of the existing public debt requires one to understand that, today, all public debt is payable in only notional "dollars". Notice, I did not say merely "nominal", but instead notional, "dollars"—because under actual Congressional practices and the Supreme Court's "precedents", the "dollar" is anything that Congress says it is. As a matter of this body of supposed law, the understanding when public debts are contracted is that the plenary power of Congress is then and thereafter always to be read into the word "dollar".

In addition—again, under actual Congressional practices and the Supreme Court's "precedents"—Congress may make anything a "legal tender" for a "dollar". For instance, Congress can declare that a contract originally payable in some number of gold or silver "dollars" can be paid instead with pieces of paper labeled "legal tender". As a matter of this body of supposed law, the understanding when public debts are contracted is that the plenary power of Congress to declare things "legal tender" for "dollars" is then and thereafter always to be applicable to any debt denominated in undifferentiated "dollars".[4434]

Moreover, according to its own practices and the Judiciary's "precedents", Congress can "regulate the Value" of an ounce of coined gold at a nominal "$50", and an ounce of coined silver at a nominal "$1", and a base-metallic coin at a nominal "$1", and a piece of paper at a nominal "$50" or a nominal "$1" or any other nominal value it chooses. And no one can legally complain that the

---

[4432] 12 U.S.C. § 411.

[4433] An Act To provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes ("Federal Reserve Act"), Act of 23 December 1913, CHAP. 6, § 30, 38 Stat. 251, 275. See generally E. Vieira, Jr., Pieces of Eight, ante note 39, Volume 2, at 1549-1576.

[4434] In contrast, a private debt, or the debt of some State, explicitly denominated in, say, United States "gold dollars" or "silver dollars" of the standard of 1985 would have to be paid in such "dollars", and no others. See 31 U.S.C. §§ 5112(a) (7) through (10) and (e); and 5118(a) and (d)(2). The General Government, however, has purported to disable itself from entering into, and to render unenforceable, such so-called "gold-clause contracts". See 31 U.S.C. 5112(b) and (c).

purchasing power (say) of the pieces of paper or the base-metallic coins with an aggregate nominal value of "$50" is nowhere near the purchasing power of fifty one-ounce silver coins, let alone a one-ounce gold coin.[4435]

(Of course, I do not concede that any of these practices or "precedents" are in any way constitutional. But, in the present crisis, I am willing to seize upon the old adage that "it takes a crooked stick to beat a mad dog".)

It was said of John Law that he tried "to coin the soil of France". But John Law's monetary powers were next to nothing compared to those that Congress, with the Supreme Court's approbation, claims to exercise today. So, if Congress can declare anything to be a "dollar", and to be "legal tender" for a "dollar", and to be taken at whatever monetary value it so chooses, why cannot Congress also declare that some area of the public lands shall be a "dollar" or "legal tender" for a "dollar" specifically for and in payment of the public debt, "dollar for dollar", and for no other purpose—and thus "coin the soil" of the United States?[4436] Certainly, such action falls within the explicit constitutional powers of Congress "to dispose of * * * the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States"; and within the putative power "[t]o * * * regulate the Value [of Money]" any old way,[4437] and to declare "legal tender", which powers, although they lack any constitutional basis, Congress and the Supreme Court nevertheless say that Congress enjoys. And no relevant statute precludes such action.[4438]

This method of paying off the public debt would be triply beneficial:

> First, it could eliminate a very large portion, if not the entirety, of the debt all at once—because the new "public-debt-reduction dollar" can consist of any area of land that Congress might choose to stipulate. No need exists for Congress to establish that the unit of payment in land be equivalent in value, according to some external standard, to any other "dollar" in circulation when the debt was incurred, or when it is paid.[4439] Indeed, because the "dollar" is today purely notional, no such standard can possibly exist. Rather, the unit of land designated as the "dollar" for the specific [4435] See, e.g., Thompson v. Butler, 95 U.S. 694 (1878).

---

[4436] What effectively would amount to a "dirt dollar" would hardly be such an innovation as it sounds. After all, silver and gold are simply specific components of "dirt" (that is, earth or ground), that happen to exhibit greater purchasing powers, ounce for ounce, in the marketplace than most other components, such as zinc, copper, lead, iron, or silicon. Yet some components of dirt—such as platinum, palladium, rhodium, and rubidium—are even more valuable, ounce for ounce, than either silver or gold. So (all constitutional objections aside) if a refined "dirt dollar" of silver or gold is legitimate, no principled objection to an *un*refined "dirt dollar" should be tenable.

[4437] U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2 and art. I, § 8, cl. 5, respectively.

[4438] E.g., 31 U.S.C. § 5118(b) declares that "[t]he United States Government may not pay out any gold coin". It does not say that the government may not pay out aliquots of public land.

[4439] See Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330 (1935).

purpose of paying off the public debt must itself constitute the only standard of monetary value applicable to that transaction, because so defined by Congressional edict.

Second, this method of paying off the public debt would liquidate the vast holdings of territory for which the United States lack any constitutional sanction, and return ownership, use, and regulatory authority over these lands to the States and private parties, where they belong.[4440] The sudden increase in the real wealth of the States and their people would significantly mitigate the present economic doldrums in which they find themselves, and augur well for future economic prosperity and growth.

Third, both the lenders and the borrower (the General Government) would find the transaction advantageous. The General Government, of course, would benefit, because its debt would be more or less eliminated, and because the elimination of the debt would relieve a great deal of the pressure now being exerted on the Federal Reserve System and the Treasury which, if not somehow vented, is likely to cause an hyperinflationary explosion of the System's paper currency, with Heaven knows what terrible consequences. The lenders would approve, too, because they would receive real value in land for their bonds right now, instead of grossly depreciated paper "dollars" that almost certainly would be worth next to nothing when finally paid.

To be sure, the initial practical problem in effectuating this proposal will be that the unit of land designated as the "dollar" exclusively for the purpose of paying off the public debt will be, not only quite small in size, but also not localized in any particular place. Rather, each unit will comprise a very small fraction of—as the lawyers say, "an undivided interest in"—the total public lands available for distribution. So a mechanism will need to be created to establish and regulate a market for trading these new "land-unit dollars", in order to pass particular areas of the available territory into private control. Also, careful regulation will be necessary so that, although many of the "land-unit dollars" may initially have to be paid out to foreign interests, none of the territory shall come or remain under foreign control when final allocation, division, and disposition of the land takes place.

3. If, for legitimate strategic reasons, distribution of the entirety of the public lands is deemed undesirable for sufficient constitutional reasons,[4441] then what remains of the public debt should be paid off with specially targeted taxes, including:

[4440] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17. See generally Bill Howard and Bill Redd, Statehood: The Territorial Imperative (Helper, Utah: Bookcliff Publishing, 2005).

[4441] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17.

a. A confiscatory "Excise[ ]" on all nonproductive "financial transactions", such as "credit default swaps" and other speculative gambling contracts, both when they are entered into and when they are paid off.[4442] "[T]he power to tax involves the power to destroy".[4443] And in this case rightly so.

b. A non-apportioned tax on the possession of certain types of non-productive assets held for personal consumption and use.[4444]

c. A complex of "Taxes, Duties, [and] Imposts" aimed at curbing all manifestations of "globalism" and "the new world order" that are detrimental to the National independence, sovereignty, and security of the United States.[4445] At the minimum, every job transferred from an American to some foreign worker, every unit of capital exported for overseas investment, and every product of strategic value imported into this country, when it could (and should) be produced in this country, should result in a significant tax being imposed on the enterprise and persons responsible.

d. A "Dut[y]" on all goods imported from Mexico (and, to be fair, from Canada, too), calculated on the basis of the costs of apprehending and deporting illegal aliens who have crossed into the United States across the Mexican (or the Canadian) border.

C. After the public debt is thus radically reduced, the General Government should be required to finance itself largely on a "pay as you go" basis, through taxation. After all, if the money is there to be borrowed, it is there to be taxed. (If it is not already there—and subject to taxation—then what is its source?) Of course, foreign money that might be available to be borrowed may not be taxable. But because "the borrower is servant to the lender", the government should not be to any significant degree dependent upon foreign money in the first place. Foreign loans inevitably create political entanglements, subjecting the government to financial pressures applied for alien political ends always detrimental to America's rational self-interest.

"Pay as you go" will return control of the government to the people. For taxpayers will simply refuse to "pay the freight" for governmental programs that are either unnecessary or wasteful—and will so instruct their representatives. Or, if their representatives prove recalcitrant, the people will remove them from office.

[4442] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

[4443] McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. (4 Wheaton) 316, 431 (1819).

[4444] See Hylton v. United States, 3 U.S. (3 Dallas) 171 (1796). See also Billings v. United States, 232 U.S. 261 (1914).

[4445] See U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.

D. The practical question then becomes, "Who will come forward to bell this cat?"

Self-evidently, the necessary reforms will not come from anyone in or aspiring to Congress, at least not without pulling a mouthful of political teeth. So WE THE PEOPLE must turn to the States. The first step must be the formation of a "blue-ribbon" investigatory commission, formed initially by one or a few far-sighted State legislatures, to determine and widely publicize the percentage of the General Governments's expenditures (and therefore its debt) that is arguably illegitimate, and to explain how the legitimate portion can be paid off in whole or in large measure through "coining" the public lands. With these data and recommendations in hand, the States would then admonish the General Government that, if suitable reforms were not implemented immediately in Washington, the States would take direct action themselves. Precisely what that action would be, I must leave for another day.

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES CITED IN FOOTNOTES

1951

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

ORGANIZATION OF AUTHORITIES

FOUNDATIONAL AUTHORITY

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Page

Page

Page

Page

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

RESOLUTIONS OF CONGRESS

UNITED STATES CODE

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

LEGISLATIVE PETITION

PROPOSED AND MODEL LEGISLATION

EXECUTIVE MATERIALS

EXECUTIVE ORDERS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

PROCLAMATIONS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

MESSAGES AND ADDRESSES OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Page

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS

Page

STATE GOVERNMENT MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS

JUDICIAL MATERIALS

DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

Page

RECORDS OF THE NUREMBERG TRIBUNAL

RESOLUTION OF THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN LEGAL DOCUMENTS

DOCUMENTS OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA

Page

LEGAL REFERENCE WORKS

LEGAL-HISTORICAL COMPENDIA

LEGAL TREATISES

Page

LEGAL ARTICLES, ESSAYS, AND LECTURES

Page

Robert Dowlet & Janet A. Knoop, "State Constitutions and the Right to Keep and Bear Arms", 7 Oklahoma City University Law Review 177 (1982) 1347
William S. Fields and David T. Hardy, "The Third Amendment and the Issue of the Maintenance of Standing Armies: A Legal History", 35 American Journal of Legal History (Temple) 393 (1991) 1515
Stephen P. Halbrook, "The Jurisprudence of the Second and Fourteenth Amendments", 4 George Mason Law Review 1 (1981) 1347
Stephen P. Halbrook, "To Keep and Bear Their Private Arms: The Adoption of the Second Amendment, 1787-1791", 10 Northern Kentucky Law Review 13 (1982) 1347
Stephen P. Halbrook, "What the Framers Intended: A Linguistic Analysis of the Right to 'Bear Arms'", 49 Law and Contemporary Problems 151 (1986) 1347
David Hardy, "The Militia Is Not the National Guard", in Safeguarding Liberty: The Constitution and Citizen Militias, Larry Pratt, Editor (Franklin, Tennessee: Legacy Communications, 1995) 809, 1348
David T. Hardy & John Stompoly, "Of Arms and the Law", 51 Chicago-Kent Law Review 62 (1974) 1347
Stewart R. Hays, "The Right to Bear Arms, A Study in Judicial Misinterpretation", 2 William & Mary Law Review 381 (1960) 1347
Don B. Kates, Jr., "Handgun Prohibition and the Original Meaning of the Second Amendment", 82 Michigan Law Review 204 (1983) 763, 1347
Don B. Kates, Jr., "The Second Amendment: A Dialogue", 49 Law and Contemporary Problems 143 (1986) 1347
Gary Kleck, "Crime Control Through the Private Use of Armed Force", in Safeguarding Liberty: The Constitution and Citizen Militias, Larry Pratt, Editor (Franklin, Tennessee: Legacy Communications, 1995) 1345
David B. Kopel, "Pretend 'Gun-Free' School Zones: A Deadly Legal Fiction", 42 Connecticut Law Review 515 (2009) 1004
David B. Kopel, Paul Gallant, & Joanne D. Eisen, "The Human Right of Self-Defense", 22 Brigham Young University Journal of Public Law 43 (2008) 761
Ronald B. Levine & David B. Saxe, "The Second Amendment: The Right to Bear Arms", 7 Houston Law Review 1 (1969) 1347
Sanford Levinson, "The Embarrassing Second Amendment", 99 Yale Law Journal 637 (1989) 1347
Nelson Lund, "D.C.'s Handgun Ban and the Constitutional Right to Arms: One Hard Question?", 18 George Mason University Civil Rights Law Journal 229 (2008) 1348
Nelson Lund, "The Second Amendment, Political Liberty, and the Right to Self-Preservation", 39 Alabama Law Review 103 (1987) 1347
Joyce Lee Malcolm, "The Right of the People to Keep and Bear Arms: The Common Law Tradition", 10 Hastings Constitutional Law Quarterly 285 (1983) 1347
Symposium—"Overcriminalization: The Politics of Crime", 54 American University Law Review (2005) 1006
Sylvester Petro, "Sovereignty and Compulsory Public-Sector Collective Bargaining", 10 Wake Forest Law Review 25 (1974) 1778
Glenn Harlan Reynolds, "A Critical Guide to the Second Amendment", 62 Tennessee Law Review 461(1995) 1347

Page

E. Stewart Rhodes, Solving the Puzzle of "Enemy Combatant" Status, Supervised Analytic Writing Paper (Professor Owen Fiss, Advisor),
Yale Law School (24 May 2004) 1583
Carl Schmitt, "Der Führer schützt das Recht: Zur Reichstagsrede Adolf Hitlers vom 13. Juli 1934", Deutsche Juristen-Zeitung, Heft 15, 39 Jahrgang, 1 August 1934, reproduced at <www.flechsig.biz/DJZ34_CS.pdf> 1618
Robert E. Shalhope, "The Armed Citizen in the Early Republic", 49 Law and Contemporary Problems 125 (1986) 1347
Robert E. Shalhope, "The Ideological Origins of the Second Amendment", 69 Journal of American History 599 (1982) 1347
Karen R. Singh, "Treading the Thin Blue Line: Military Special-Operations Trained Police SWAT Teams and the Constitution",
9 William & Mary Bill of Rights Journal 673 (2001) 1558
David A. Sklansky, "The Private Police", 46 U.C.L.A. Law Review 1165 (1999) 556, 1198
Kathleen M. Sullivan, "Unconstitutional Conditions", 102 Harvard Law Review 1413 (1989) 1705
"The Uniform Firearms Act", 18 Virginia Law Review 904 (1932) 982
United States Department of Justice, Justice News, "Attorney General Eric Holder Speaks at Northwestern University School of Law", Chicago[, Illinois] ~ Monday, March 5, 2012 . . . . . 1618, 1619, 1620 Edwin Vieira, Jr., "Compulsory Public Sector Collective Bargaining:
the Trojan Horse of Corporativism", Government Union Review,
Volume 2, Number 1 (1981) 1349
Edwin Vieira, Jr., "Of Syndicalism, Slavery and the Thirteenth Amendment:
The Unconstitutionality of 'Exclusive Representation' in Public-Sector Employment", 12 Wake Forest Law Review 515 (1976) 1349 Edwin Vieira, Jr. "Poltroons on the Bench: The Fraud of the 'Labor-Peace' Argument for Compulsory Public-Sector Collective Bargaining", Government Union Review, Volume 18, Number 3 (1998) 1349
Edwin Vieira, Jr., "The Purse and the Sword: Imminent Dangers of U.S.
Economic and Homeland Security Policies" (Metamora, Michigan: DVDs produced by the Heritage Research Institute, 2010) 1146, 1211, 1349, 1488
Edwin Vieira, Jr., "Rights and the United States Constitution:
The Declension From Natural Law to Legal Positivism",
13 Georgia Law Review 1447 (1979) 1403
Edwin Vieira, Jr., *"To break and control the violence of faction":
The challenge to representative government from compulsory public-sector collective bargaining* (Arlington, Virginia: Foundation for the Advancement of the Public Trust & Public Service Research Council, 1980) 1349, 1778 Edwin Vieira, Jr., "Travesty, Tragedy and Treason:
Abood v. Detroit Board of Education and the Supreme Court's Betrayal of the Constitution in Public-Sector Labor Relations", Government Union Review, Volume 19, Number 2 (2000) 1349

Page

BOOKS AND MONOGRAPHS

Page

Herbert Aptheker, American Negro Slave Revolts (New York, New York: International Publishers, 50th Anniversary Edition, 1993) 719
Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, Edita Auspiciis et Inspiratione Pontificiae Universitatis Salmanticensis (Biblioteca de Autores Christianes, Tertio Editio, 1963) 30
Aristotle, Politics 4, 31, 746, 1321, 1453, 1632
A TREATISE ON GOVERNMENT OR, THE POLITICS OF ARISTOTLE, William Ellis, Translator (London, England: J.M. Dent & Sons Ltd., 1912 . . . . . 4, 31, 746, 1321, 1453, 1632
Assassination Science: Experts Speak Out on the Death of JFK, James H. Fetzer, Editor (Peru, Illinois: Catfeet Press, 1997) 1563
De Witt Bailey, British Military Flintlock Rifles, 1740-1840 (Lincoln, Rhode Island: Andrew Mowbray Publishers, 2002) 173, 508, 515, 516
De Witt Bailey, Small Arms of the British Forces in America 1664-1815 (Woonsocket, Rhode Island: Andrew Mowbray Incorporated, Publishers, 2009) 141, 173, 213, 436, 451, 455, 508
Radley Balko, Overkill: The Rise of Paramilitary Police Raids in America (Washington, D.C.: Cato Institute, 2006) 1138, 1408
Commandant General Tom Barry, Guerilla Days in Ireland (Dublin, Ireland: Anvil Books, 1989) 1286, 1645, 1708
John Bartlett, Familiar Quotations (Boston, Massachusetts: Little, Brown and Company, Thirteenth Edition, 1955) 933
The Battle of Lexington: A Sermon & Eyewitness Narrative (Ventura, California: Nordskog Publishing, 2007) 1173
Joseph Berton, Lawrence and the Arab Revolt: An Illustrated Guide (Madrid, Spain: Andrea Press, 2011) 825
Louis Birnbaum, Red Dawn at Lexington: "If They Mean to Have a War, Let It Begin Here!" (Boston, Massachusetts: Houghton Mifflin Company, 1986) 234, 311, 312
Blitzkreig to Defeat: Hitler's War Directives, 1939-1945, H.R. Trevor-Roper, Editor (New York, New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., 1964) 1661
Claude G. Bowers, Jefferson and Hamilton: The Struggle for Democracy in America (Cambridge, Massachusetts: The Riverside Press, 1925) 913, 1932
T.H. Breen, American Insurgents, American Patriots: The Revolution of the People (New York, New York: Hill and Wang, 2010) 150, 311, 569, 570, 1235
Anthony C. Brown, Bodyguard of Lies (New York, New York: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1975) 1562
Kingsley Browne, Co-Ed Combat: The New Evidence That Women Shouldn't Fight The Nation's Wars (New York, New York: Sentinel, 2007) 607
Smedley D. Butler, War Is a Racket (Costa Mesa, California: The Noontide Press, 1988) 1548
Gerald M. Carbone, Nathanael Greene: A Biography of the American Revolution (New York, New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2008) 89, 122, 234

Page

Benjamin L. Carp, Defiance of the Patriots: The Boston Tea Party & the Making of America (New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, 2010) 40
Bruce Chadwick, The First American Army: The Untold Story of George Washington and the Men Behind America's First Fight for Freedom (Naperville, Illinois: Sourcebooks, Inc., 2005) 123
Thomas U.P. Charlton, The Life of Major General James Jackson (Augusta, Georgia: George F. Randolph & Co., 1809) 1890
Marquis de Chastellux, Travels in North-America, in the Years 1780, 1781, and 1782 (London, England: G.G.J. & J. Robinson, 1787) 400
Thomas Church, The Entertaining History of King Philip's War, Which Began in the Month of June, 1675, As Also of Expeditions More Lately Made Against the Common Enemy, and Indian Rebels, in the Eastern Parts of New England: With Some Account of the Divine Providence Towards Col. Benjamin Church (Newport, Rhode Island: Solomon Southwick, 1772) 563
Frank W. Coburn, The Battle of April 19, 1775 in Lexington, Concord, Lincoln Arlington, Cambridge Somerville and Charlestown Massachusetts (Lexington, Massachusetts: Lexington Historical Society, Second Edition Revised, 1922) 118, 208, 248
Robert Conquest, The Great Terror: Stalin's Purge of the Thirties (Ontario, Canada: The Macmillan Company, 1968) 1554, 1592, 1616
Robert Conquest, Stalin: Breaker of Nations (New York, New York: Viking, 1991) 1600
Clay S. Conrad, Jury Nullification: The Evolution of a Doctrine (Durham, North Carolina: Carolina Academic press, 1999) 1204
Christopher Cooper and Robert Block, Disaster: Hurricane Katrina and the Failure of Homeland Security (New York, New York: Henry Holt and Company, 2006) 82
Stéphane Courtois, Nicholas Werth, Jean-Louis Panné, Andrzej Paczkowski, Karel Bartošek, and Jean-Louis Margolin, The Black Book of Communism: Crimes, Terror, Repression, Jonathan Murphy and Mark Kramer, Translators (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1999) 68, 1414, 1504, 1532
Clayton E. Cramer, Armed America: The Remarkable Story of How and Why Guns Became as American as Apple Pie (Nashville, Tennessee: Nelson Current, 2006) 87, 146
H. von Dach, Total Resistance: Swiss Army Guide to Warfare and Undergrounds (Boulder, Colorado: Paladin Press, 1965) 1290, 1354
H. von Dach, Der Total Widerstand: Kleinkriegsanleitung für Jedermann (Biel, Switzerland: Schweizerischen Unteroffiziersverband, Dritte Auflage, 1966) 1290, 1354
John E.E. Dalberg-Acton, Essays in Religion, Politics, and Morality [Volume III of Selected Writings of Lord Acton, J. Rufus Fears, Editor] (Indianapolis, Indiana: Liberty Fund, Inc., 1988) 900, 960, 1168
Elisabeth W. Dexter, Colonial Women of Affairs: A Study of Women in Business and the Professions in America Before 1776 (Boston, Massachusetts: Houghton Mifflin Company 1924) 117

Page

John Dickinson, Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania to the Inhabitants of the British Colonies, Historical Introduction by R.T.H. Halsey (New York, New York: The Outlook Company 1903) 1456
A Dictionary of Americanisms on Historical Principles, Mitford M. Mathews, Editor (Chicago, Illinois: University of Chicago Press, 1951) 923
Frank Dikötter, Mao's Great Famine: The History of China's Most Devastating Catastrophe, 1958-1962 (New York, New York: Walker & Company, 2010) 15
Max Domarus, HITLER: Reden und Proklamationen 1932-1945, TEIL I, TRIUMPH 1932-1938, Ester Band 1932-1934 (Leonberg, Germany: Pamminger & Partner Verlagsgesellschaft mbH, 1973) 1617, 1620
Michael D. Doubler & John W. Listman, Jr., The National Guard: An Illustrated History of America's Citizen-Soldiers (Washington, D.C.: Brassey's, Inc., 2003) 773, 809
Joseph D. Douglas, Red Cocaine: The Drugging of America and the West (London, England: Edward Harle Limited, Revised Second Edition, 1999) 1194
James W. Douglass, JFK and the Unspeakable: Why He Died and Why It Matters (New York, New York: Touchstone, 2008) 1563, 1605
H.J. Eckenrode, The Revolution in Virginia (Hamden, Connecticut: Archon Books, 1964 [reprint of the 1916 edition]) 336, 592, 744
Donald W. Emery, John M. Kierzek, & Peter Lindblom, English Fundamentals, Form B (Needham Heights, Massachusetts: Allyn and Bacon, Eleventh Edition, 1999) 1297
Encyclopedia of Firearms, Harold L. Peterson, Editor (New York, New York: E.P. Dutton and Company, Inc., 1964) 140, 141, 192, 1072, 1354
The English Libertarian Heritage: From the Writings of John Trenchard and Thomas Gordon in The Independent Whig and Cato's Letters, David L. Jacobson, Editor (Indianapolis, Indiana: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Inc., 1965) 14
The Federalist 6, 31, 55, 355, 753, 854, 890, 900, 901, 902, 933, 934, 957, 1039, 1066, 1072, 1081, 1206, 1228, 1336, 1395, 1397, 1427, 1429, 1439, 1470, 1485, 1493, 1575, 1625, 1651, 1684, 1792, 1796, 1887, 1889, 1890, 1898, 1899, 1935
Francois Fejtö, History of the People's Democracies: Eastern Europe Since Stalin, Daniel Weissbort, Translator (London, England: Pall Mall Press, 1971) 1486
Robert Filmer, Patriarcha: A Defense of the Natural Power of Kings against the Unnatural Liberty of the People (1680) 26
David H. Fischer, Paul Revere's Ride (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 1994) 1173
Thomas Fleming, The First Stroke: Lexington, Concord, and the beginning of the American Revolution, (Washington, D.C.: National Park Service, United States Department of the Interior, 1978) 118, 312
Andrew Fletcher, A DISCOURSE OF GOVERNMENT With relation to MILITIAS (Edinburgh, Scotland: M. Cooper, 1755 [reprint of the 1698 edition]) 15, 756, 1213, 1364, 1542, 1543

Page

Esther Forbes, Paul Revere & The World He Lived In (Boston, Massachusetts: Houghton Mifflin Company, 1948) 40, 128, 154, 1172, 1173, 1550
William M. Fowler, Jr., American Crisis: George Washington and the Dangerous Two Years After Yorktown, 1781-1783 (New York, New York: Walker Publishing Company, Inc., 2011) 1776, 1779
Allen French, The Day of Concord and Lexington: The Nineteenth of April, 1775 (Boston, Massachusetts: Little, Brown, and Company, 1925) 172, 210, 213, 256, 311
John Fund, Stealing Elections: How Voter Fraud Threatens Our Democracy (New York, New York: Encounter Books, Second Edition, 2008) 1206
Stewart Galanor, Cover-Up (New York, New York: Kestrel Books, 1998) 1563
David Galenson, White Servitude in Colonial America: An Economic Analysis (New York, New York: Cambridge University Press, 1981) 364
John R. Galvin, The Minute Men, The First Fight: Myths and Realities of the American Revolution (Washington, D.C.: Brassey's, 1989) 248, 293
Michael German and Jay Stanley, What's Wrong with Fusion Centers? (New York, New York: American Civil Liberties Union, 2007) 1557
Harold B. Gill, Jr., The Gunsmith in Colonial Virginia (Williamsburg, Virginia: The Colonial Williamsburg Foundation, 1974) 432, 446, 451, 456, 510, 519, 521, 647
Hans Bernd Gisevius, Valkyrie: An Insider's Account of the Plot To Kill Hitler (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Da Capo Press, 2009) 1554
Lorenzo J. Greene, The Negro in Colonial New England (New York, New York: Atheneum, 1968) 118, 120, 121, 122
David Ray Griffin, Cognitive Infiltration: An Obama Appointee's Plan To Undermine The 9/11 Conspiracy Theory (Northhampton, Massachusetts: Olive Branch Press, 2011) 1631, 1647
The Memoirs of General Grivas, Charles Foley, Editor (New York, New York: Frederick A. Praeger, Inc., 1964) 825, 1708
Robert A. Gross, The Minutemen and Their World (New York, New York: Hill and Wang, 1976) 117, 154, 208, 222, 248
Anne Gut & Bruno Vitale, Depleted Uranium: Deadly, Dangerous and Indiscriminate (Nottingham, England: Spokesman, 2003) 1605
Hacked! High Tech Election Theft in America, Abbe W. DeLozier & Vickie Karp, Editors (Austin, Texas: Truth Enterprises Publishing, 2006) 1206
Ulrich von Hassell, The von Hassell Diaries, 1938-1944 (London, England: Hamish Hamilton, 1948) 1554
John Earl Haynes & Harvey Klehr, Venona: Decoding Soviet Espionage in America (New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, 2000) 1014
Friedrich August Freiherr von der Heydte, Modern Irregular Warfare in Defense Policy and as a Military Phenomenon, George Gregory, Translator (New York, New York: New Benjamin Franklin House Publishing, 1986) 1290, 1708
Hans Heymann, Plan for Permanent Peace (New York, New York: Harper & Brothers Publishers, 1941) 1174, 1634, 1936

Page

Don Higginbotham, Daniel Morgan, Revolutionary Rifleman (Chapel Hill, North Carolina: University of North Carolina Press, 1961) 514, 548
J.B.E. Hittle, Michael Collins and the Anglo-Irish War: Britain's Counterinsurgency Failure (Washington, D.C.: Potomac Books, Inc., 2011) 1708
Trygve J.B. Hoff, Economic Calculation in the Socialist Society, M.A. Michael, Translator (London, England: William Hodge and Company Limited, 1949) 935, 1035
David Hoffman, The Oklahoma City Bombing and the Politics of Terror (Port Townsend, Washington: Feral House, 1998) 1565
William Hogeland, Declaration: The Nine Tumultuous Weeks When America Became Independent, May 1-July 4, 1776 (New York, New York: Simon and Schuster, 2010) 22
Wesley N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions As Applied In Judicial Reasoning (New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, 1964) 13
Jed Horne, Breach of Faith: Hurricane Katrina and the Near Death of a Great American City (New York, New York: Random House Trade Paperbacks, 2008) 82
James D. Hornfischer, Neptune's Inferno: The U.S. Navy at Guadalcanal (New York, New York: Bantam Books, 2001) 1129
James O. Horton & Lois E. Horton, Slavery and the Making of America (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 2005) 123
Sally E. Horton, Slave Patrols: Law and Violence in Virginia and the Carolinas (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 2001) 339, 719
Bill Howard and Bill Redd, Statehood: The Territorial Imperative (Helper, Utah: Bookcliff Publishing, 2005) 1947
Ivor Noël Hume, 1775: Another Part of the Field (London, England: Eyre & Spottiswoode (Publishers) Ltd., 1966) 571
Douglas Husak, Overcriminalization: The Limits of the Criminal Law (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, Inc. 2008) 1006
Thomas Jefferson, A Summary View of the Rights of British America (ca. 8 August 1774) 312, 866
The Works of Thomas Jefferson, Paul L. Ford, Editor (New York, New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, Federal Edition, Twelve Volumes, 1904-1905) 1782, 1885, 1933
Richard M. Ketchum, Decisive Day: The Battle for Bunker Hill (New York, New York: Anchor Books, 1991) 89, 118, 192, 248, 288
Harvey Klehr, John Earl Haynes, & Fridrikh Igorevich Firsov, The Secret World of American Communism (New Haven, Connecticut: Yale University Press, 1995) 1014, 1532
John Kolasky, Partners in Tyranny: The Nazi-Soviet Nonaggression Pact, August 23, 1939 (Toronto, Canada: The Mackenzie Institute for the Study of Terrorism, Revolution and Propaganda, 1990) 1581
Michael Korda, Hero: The Life and Legend of Lawrence of Arabia (New York, New York: HarperCollins Publishers, 2010) 825
Michael Kranish, Flight from Monticello: Thomas Jefferson at War (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 2010) 336, 596

Page

Antoine Lavoisier, Elements of Chemistry, Robert Kerr, Translator (Edinburgh, Scotland: William Creech, Fourth Edition, 1799; Dover Facsimile Edition, 1965) 20
T.E. Lawrence, The Seven Pillars of Wisdom (Ware, England: Wordsworth Editions Limited, 1977) 825
Letters on the American Revolution 1774-1776, Margaret W. Wheeler, Editor (Port Washington, New York: Kennikat Press, Inc., 1968) 508
The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, Roy P. Basler, Editor (New Brunswick, New Jersey: Rutgers University Press, 1953) 15, 1824
James Livingston, Origins of the Federal Reserve System: Money, Class, and Corporate Capitalism, 1890-1913 (Ithaca, New York: Cornell University Press, 1986) 1906
Harrison E. Livingstone and Robert J. Groden, High Treason: The Assassination of JFK & the Case for Conspiracy (New York, New York: Carroll & Graf Publishers, Inc., 1998) 1563
Andrew M. Łobaczewski, Political Ponerology: A Science on the Nature of Evil Adjusted for Political Purposes (Grande Prairie, Alberta, Canada: Red Pill Press, Second Edition, 2006) 900, 998, 1415, 1546, 1673
John Locke, Two Treatises of Government (London, England: Awnsham & John Churchill, 1698) 26, 29, 96, 905, 906, 907, 908, 1168, 1169, 1170, 1171, 1411
John R. Lott, Jr., More Guns, Less Crime: Understanding Crime and Gun Control Laws (Chicago, Illinois: University of Chicago Press, 3d Edition, 2010) 191, 1139, 1345
John F. Luzader, Saratoga: A Military History of the Decisive Campaign of the American Revolution (New York, New York: Savas Beatie LLC, 2008) 514
General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, Reminiscenses (New York, New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1964) 1661
Niccolò Machiavelli, Discourses on the First Ten Books of Titus Livy (1531) 1233, 1791
The Historical, Political, and Diplomatic Writings of Niccolo Machiavelli, Christian E. Detmold, Translator (Boston, Massachusetts: James R. Osgood and Company, 1882) 1233, 1791
John K. Mahon, The History of the Militia and the National Guard (New York, New York: Macmillan Publishing Company, 1983) 949, 1266, 1827
Jackson T. Main, The Anti-Federalists: Critics of the Constitution, 1781-1788 (New York, New York: W.W. Norton & Company, Inc., 1974) 1438
Joyce Lee Malcolm, To Keep and Bear Arms: The Origins of an Anglo-American Right (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, 1994) 1347
William Manchester, American Caesar: Douglas MacArthur, 1880-1964 (New York, New York: Dell Publishing, 1978) 1661
Quotations From Chairman Mao Tse-tung (Peking, China: Foreign Languages Press, First Edition, 1966) 15, 25, 317, 319, 362, 531, 596, 608, 764, 794, 798, 820, 842, 855, 859, 866, 877, 881, 902, 906, 913, 926, 929, 930, 955, 966, 980, 1009, 1034, 1039, 1059, 1092, 1119, 1154, 1165, 1175, 1177, 1198, 1202, 1208, 1244, 1305,

Page

Page

Ciarán Ó Murchadha, The Great Famine: Ireland's Agony 1845-1852 (London, England: Continuum International Publishing Group, 2011) 15
Norman M. Naimark, Stalin's Genocides (Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 2010) 1549, 1600
William E. Nelson, The Common Law in Colonial America, Volume I, The Chesapeake and New England, 1607-1660 (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 2008) 110, 112
Mancur Olson, The Logic of Collective Action: Public Goods and the Theory of Groups (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Harvard University Press, Revised Edition, 1971) 355, 933, 1181
Joseph A. Page, Perón: A Biography (New York, New York: Random House, Inc., 1983) 1654
Victor H. Paltsits, Washington's Farewell Address: In Facsimile, with Transliterations of all the Drafts of Washington, Madison, & Hamilton, Together with their Correspondence and Other Supporting Documents; Edited, with a History of its Origin, Reception by the Nation, Rise of the Controversy Respecting its Authorship, and a Bibliography (New York, New York: The New York Public Library, 1935) 1545
The Partisan's Companion: The Guerrilla Fighter's Handbook (3rd Edition, 1942), translated as The Red Army's Do-It-Yourself Nazi-Bashing Guerrilla Warfare Manual, Lester Grau and Michael Gress, Editors (Havertown, Pennsylvania: Casemate Publishers, 2011) 1708
Robert Payne, The Life and Death of Trotsky (New York, New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1977) 1616
Stanley G. Payne, A History of Fascism, 1914-1945 (Madison, Wisconsin: The University of Wisconsin Press, 1995) 1834
Joseph E. Persico, Nuremberg: Infamy on Trial (New York, New York: Penguin Books, 1994) 1575
Heinrich Pesch, Ethics and the National Economy, Rupert Ederer, Translator (Norfolk, Virginia: IHS Press, 2004) 1178, 1210
Harold L. Peterson, Arms and Armor in Colonial America, 1526-1783 (Harrisburg, Pennsylvania: Stackpole Company, 1956) 172, 514, 515, 516, 521
Merrill D. Peterson, Thomas Jefferson and the New Nation, A Biography (New York, New York: Oxford University Press, 1970) 626
Richard Hayes Phillips, Witness to a Crime: A Citizens' Audit of an American Election (Rome, New York: Canterbury Press, 2008) 1206
Timothy Pickering, Jr., An Easy Plan of Discipline for a Militia (Salem, Massachusetts: Samuel and Ebenezer Hall, 1775) 77, 210, 1129
Thomas Powers, The Killing of Crazy Horse (New York, New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 2010) 962, 1559
Jennifer Quasha, Robert Rogers: Rogers' Rangers and the French and Indian War (New York, New York: The Rosen Publishing Group, Inc., 2002) 563
John C. Rager, The Political Philosophy of St. Robert Bellarmine: An Examination of Saint Cardinal Bellarmine's Defense of Popular Government and the Influence of His Political Theory upon the Declaration of Independence (Spokane, Washington: Apostolate of Our Lady of Siluva, 1995) 26

Page

Page

Victor Sebestyen, Revolution 1989: The Fall of the Soviet Empire (New York, New York: Pantheon Books, 2009) 1654
Anonymous [John Trenchard with Walter Moyle], THE SECOND PART OF AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with a Free Government, and absolutely destructive to the Constitution of the English Monarchy (London, England: [no publisher identified] 1697) 889, 1543, 1550
Gene Sharp, Civilian-Based Defense: A Post-Military Weapons System (Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1990) 825, 1083, 1153
Gene Sharp, The Politics of Nonviolent Action, Part One, Power and Struggle (Boston, Massachusetts: Porter Sargent Publishers, 1973) 825, 1083, 1153
Gene Sharp, The Politics of Nonviolent Action, Part Two, The Methods of Nonviolent Action (Boston, Massachusetts: Porter Sargent Publishers, 1973) 825, 1083, 1153
Gene Sharp, The Politics of Nonviolent Action, Part Three, The Dynamics of Nonviolent Action (Boston, Massachusetts: Porter Sargent Publishers, 1973) 825, 1083, 1153
John Shy, Toward Lexington: The Role of the British Army in the Coming of the American Revolution (Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press, 1965) 793
Algernon Sidney, Discourses Concerning Government [written in 1681-1683, published posthumously in 1698], Thomas G. West, Editor (Indianapolis, Indiana: Liberty Fund, Revised Edition, 1996) 26, 29, 30, 884, 899, 924, 1373, 1374, 1681, 1897, 1899
Slono: Documenting and Interpreting a Southern Slave Revolt, Mark M. Smith, Editor (Columbia, South Carolina: University of South Carolina Press, 2005) 719
Andrew F. Smith, Starving the South: How the North Won the Civil War (New York, New York: St. Martin's Press, 2011) 1288
Maurice H. Smith, The Writs of Assistance Case (Berkeley, California: University of California Press, 1978) 1559
Theresa Smith and Thomas Oleszczuk, No Asylum: State Psychiatric Repression in the Former USSR (New York, New York: New York University Press, 1996) 1414
Kenneth M. Stamp, The Peculiar Institution: Slavery in the Ante-Bellum South (New York, New York: Vintage Books, 1989) 121, 719
Barry M. Stentiford, The American Home Guard: The State Militia in the Twentieth Century (College Station, Texas: Texas A&M University Press, 2002) 773-774, 949, 1247, 1867
Michael Stephenson, Patriot Battles: How the War of Independence Was Fought (New York, New York: HarperCollins Publishers, 2007) 169, 288, 514
Robert B. Stinnett, Day of Deceit: The Truth About FDR and Pearl Harbor (New York, New York: Touchstone, 2000) 1562
Sun Tzu on the Art of War, Lionel Giles, Translator (London, England: Luzac & Company, 1910. Reprinted in Taipei, Taiwan, China: Literature House, Ltd., 1964) 1036
Robert Taber, War of the Flea: The Classic Study of Guerrilla Warfare (Washington, D.C.: Potomac Books, Inc., 2002) 1708

Page

Jacobus tenBroek, Edward N. Barnhart, and Floyd Matson, Prejudice, War and the Constitution (Berkeley, California: University of California Press, 1954) 1585
Emory M. Thomas, The Confederacy as a Revolutionary Experience (Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, Inc., 1971) 1833
John Toland, Adolf Hitler (Garden City, New York: Doubleday & Company, Inc., 1976) 1617, 1621
Nikolai Tolstoy, Stalin's Secret War (New York, New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1982) 1206
Anonymous [John Trenchard with Walter Moyle], AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with A Free Government, and absolutely destructive to the Constitution of the English Monarchy (London, England: [no publisher identified] 1697) 14, 531, 765, 777, 906,1056, 1339, 1395, 1402, 1453, 1476, 1497, 1543, 1684
Anonymous [John Trenchard with Walter Moyle], THE SECOND PART OF AN ARGUMENT, Shewing, that a Standing Army Is inconsistent with a Free Government, and absolutely destructive to the Constitution of the English Monarchy (London, England: [no publisher identified] 1697) 889, 1543, 1550
Noel Twyman, Bloody Treason. On Solving History's Greatest Murder Mystery: The Assassination of John F. Kennedy (Rancho Santa Fe, California: Laurel Publishing, 1997) 1563
Dominic Vieira, "The World Turned Upside Down: The Militia of the Several States, the National Guard and the Constitution", A Thesis Submitted to Dr. Adam Schwartz in Candidacy for the Degree of Bachelor or Arts, Department of History, Christendom College (Front Royal, Virginia: 30 April 2012) 949
Edwin Vieira, Jr., Constitutional "Homeland Security", Volume One, The Nation in Arms (Ashland, Ohio: BookMasters, Inc., 2007) 8, 88, 809, 861, 1126, 1238, 1573
Michi Weglyn, Years of Infamy: The Untold Story of America's Concentration Camps (New York, New York: William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1976) 1563, 1592, 1597
John W. Wheeler-Bennett, The Nemesis of Power: The German Army in Politics 1918-1945 (London, England: Macmillan and Company Limited, 1964) 1554, 1617, 1618
James B. Whisker, The American Colonial Militia, Volume II, The New England Militia, 1606-1785 (Lewiston, New York: The Edwin Mellen Press, 1977) 87
James B. Whisker, The American Colonial Militia, Volume V, The Colonial Militia of the Southern States, 1606-1785 (Lewiston, New York: The Edwin Mellen Press, 1997) 87, 315
James B. Whisker, The Rise and Decline of the American Militia System (Cranbury, New Jersey: Associated University Presses, 1999) 87
Mark E. Willey, Pearl Harbor: Mother of All Conspiracies (Bloomington, Indiana: Xlibris Corporation, 2000) 1562

Page

Robert K. Wright, Jr., for the Army Lineage Series, Center of Military History, United States Army, The Continental Army (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1983) 123, 773, 775, 809, 1286, 1774, 1775, 1788

David E. Young, The Founders' View of the Right to Bear Arms: A Definitive History of the Second Amendment (Ontonagon, Michigan: Golden Oak Books, 2007) 88

Gary Zaboly, American Colonial Ranger: The Northern Colonies 1724-64 (Oxford, England: Osprey Publishing Ltd., 2004) 293

Philip Zimbardo, The Lucifer Effect: Understanding How Good People Turn Evil (New York, New York: Random House Trade Paperbacks, 2008) 1547

ARTICLES AND ESSAYS

De Witt Bailey, "British Military Small Arms in North America, 1755-1783", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 516

Bruce N. Canfield, "Desperate Times: The 'Liberator' Pistol", American Rifleman, Volume 160, No. 8 (August 2012) 1072

Robert S. Chamberlain, "The Northern States Militia", 4 Civil War History 107 (1958) 1824

Jonas Clark, The Fate of Blood-thirsty Oppressors, and GOD's tender Care of his distressed People. A SERMON PREACHED AT LEXINGTON, April 19, 1776, TO WHICH IS ADDED, A Brief NARRATIVE of the principal Transactions of that Day (Boston, Massachusetts: Powers and Willis, 1776) 1173

Lt. Colonel Daniel L. Davis, Dereliction of Duty II: Senior Military Leaders' Loss of Integrity Wounds Afghan War Effort (27 January 2012) 1566

John Fiske, "The Eve of Independence", The Atlantic Monthly (November 1888) 12, 312

Edward R. Flanagan, "Virginia Militia Small Arms", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 456

William Gavett, "Account of the Affair at North Bridge", Essex Institute Proceedings, Volume I (1859) 312

Edwin N. Gewirz, "Long Rifles in the Valley of Virginia", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 514

Louise B. Hill, "State Socialism in the Confederate States of America", in J.D. Eggleston, Editor, Southern Sketches, No. 9 (Charlottesville, Virginia: Historical Publishing Company, 1936) 1833

Benjamin F. Hubbell, "The New England Combination Gun, 1730 to 1775", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 . . . . . 174, 193

Laurence J. Kotlikoff, "Is the United States Bankrupt?", Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis Review (July/August 2006) 1158

Page

Vladimir I. Lenin, "A Contribution to the History of the Question of the Dictatorship, A Note" [1920], in Collected Works (Moscow, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: Progress Publishers, 4th English Edition, 1966), Volume 31 . . . . . 1621, 1668, 1685
Harmon C. Leonard, "The Kentucky Rifle", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 514
Crosby Milliman, "Evolution of the Pennsylvania Rifle", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 514
George S. Patton & Lewis W. Walt, "The Swiss Report", in Safeguarding Liberty: The Constitution and Citizen Militias, Larry Pratt, Editor (Franklin, Tennessee: Legacy Communications, 1995) 1250
"Walter Reddy: Patriot's Guns Seized", New American, Volume 27, Number 10 (23 May 2011) 999
Earl Rickard, "Marshall Builds the Defense Army", WWII History, Volume 11, Number 6 (September 2012) 1835
Kirk Ross, "What Really Happened at WANAT", U.S. Naval Institute, Proceedings (July 2010) 1127
F. Allen Thompson, "Worcester County Gunsmiths 1760-1830", in The American Society of Arms Collectors, Longarms in America, George E. Weatherly, Compiler (Easton, Pennsylvania: The Mack Printing Group, 1997), Volume 1 . . . . . 172, 193

MISCELLANEOUS MATERIALS

Ralph Waldo Emerson, "Self-Reliance", in Essays (Boston, Massachusetts: James Munroe and Company, 1841) 1369
Antal E. Fekete at <www.professorfekete.com/moneycredit.asp> 1915
Address of Adolf Hitler of 13 July 1934, original audio available at <www.archive.org/Hitler_Speeches>, No. 22, 1934-07-13, Adolf Hitler, Reichstagsrede 1617
The Holy Bible 1566
<http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/news/20010430/doc1.pdf> 1563
<http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/NSAEBB/NSAEBB27/01.01.htm> 1600
<http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/NSAEBB/NSAEBB27/02.01.htm> 1600
<http://www.gmu.edu/~nsarchiv/torturing democracy/documents/theme.html/#olc> . . . 1600
"K-12 Facts" at <http://www.data360.org/dsg.aspx?Data_Set_Group_Id=1389> 1004
Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Edward Carrington, 27 May 1788 1885
Letter from Thomas Jefferson to John Taylor, 28 May 1816 . . . . . 1782, 1933
John Milton, Sonnet XIX, "When I consider how my light is spent", Poems (London, England: Thomas Dring, 1673) 135, 375, 1175
Northwest Passage (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1940) 563
Leni Riefenstahl, Triumph des Willens 1892
William Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet 826
William Shakespeare, The Tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark 875, 1200
William Shakespeare, The Tragedy of Julius Caesar 829

Page

ENDNOTES

2015

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

The materials to which references are made in the endnotes include the following:

GEORGIA—

The Colonial Records of the State of Georgia, Compiled and published by Allen D. Candler (hereinafter cited as "Georgia Colonial Records"). The volumes referenced here include Volume XVIII, Statutes Enacted by the Royal Legislature of Georgia From its First Session in 1754 to 1768 (Atlanta, Georgia: C.P. Byrd, 1910 [New York, New York: Ames, 1970 reprint]); and Volume XIX, Part I, Statutes, Colonial and Revolutionary, 1768 to 1773 (Atlanta, Georgia: C.P. Byrd, 1910 [New York, New York: Ames, 1970 reprint]).

NEW JERSEY—

New Jersey Archives, Third Series, Volume III, Laws of the Royal Colony of New Jersey, 1746-1760, Bernard Bush, Compiler (Trenton, New Jersey: Bureau of Archives and History, New Jersey State Library, 1980) (hereinafter cited as "New Jersey Archives, 1746-1760"), available from the Division of Archives and Records Management, New Jersey Department of State.

PENNSYLVANIA—

• The Statutes at Large of Pennsylvania from 1682 to 1809 (18 volumes) (hereinafter cited as "Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 1, 2, 3, ... et cetera"), available at <www.palrb.us>. The volumes referenced here include Volume I, 1682 to 1700 (Harrisburg, Pennsylvania: Legislative Reference Bureau, 2001); Volume V, 1744 to 1759 (William Stanley Ray, 1898); Volume IX, 1776 to 1779 (William Stanley Ray, 1903); and Volume X, 1779-1781 (William Stanley Ray, 1904).

• Part 11 (Pennsylvania) of The Selective Service System, Backgrounds of Selective Service, Military Obligation: The American Tradition, A Compilation of the Enactments of Compulsion From the Earliest Settlements of the Original Thirteen Colonies in 1607 Through the Articles of Confederation in 1789, Special Monograph No. 1, Volume II (14 parts) (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1947) (hereinafter cited as "Military Obligation, Pennsylvania"), available on microfiche from the Law Library Microfilm Consortium, University of Hawaii-Windward Campus.

RHODE ISLAND—

• A good overview of the most relevant legal-historical material that is readily available can be found in J. Harry Bongartz, CHECK LIST OF Rhode Island Laws, CONTAINING A COMPLETE LIST OF THE PUBLIC LAWS AND ACTS AND RESOLVES OF THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND TO DATE. WITH NOTES AND PAGINGS (Providence, Rhode Island, J.A. & R.A. Reid, 1893), at 3-6. A good historical review is to be found in Sidney S. Rider, A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORIC AL INTRODUCTION TO THE DIGEST OF RHODE ISLAND COLONIAL LAWS OF 1719 AND INCIDENTALLY TO ALL OTHER FOLIO DIGESTS OF RHODE ISLAND LAWS, bound with THE CHARTER AND THE ACTS AND LAWS OF HIS MAJESTIES COLONY OF RHODE-ISLAND AND Providence=Plantations In AMERICA, 1719 (Providence, Rhode Island: Sidney S. Rider and Burnett Rider, 1895).

• John Russell Bartlett, Secretary of State, Editor, Records of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations in New England, 1636 to 1792 (10 volumes, 1856-1865, 1968 reprint) (hereinafter cited as "Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, 2, 3, ... et cetera"), available in the Rhode Island State Law Library, Providence, Rhode Island. This set includes Volume I, 1636 to 1663 (Providence, Rhode Island: J. Crawford Greene and Brother, 1856); Volume II, 1664 to 1667 (Providence, Rhode Island: J. Crawford Greene and Brother, 1857); Volume III, 1678 to 1706 (Providence, Rhode Island: Knowles, Anthony & Co., 1857); Volume IV, 1707 to 1740 (Providence, Rhode Island: Knowles, Anthony & Co., 1858); Volume V, 1741 to 1756 (Providence, Rhode Island: Knowles, Anthony & Co., 1859); Volume VI, 1757 to 1769 (Providence, Rhode Island: Knowles, Anthony & Co., 1860); Volume VII, 1770 to 1776 (Providence, Rhode Island: A. Crawford Greene, 1862); Volume VIII, 1776 to 1779 (Providence, Rhode Island: Cooke, Jackson & Co., 1863); Volume IX, 1780 to 1783 (Providence, Rhode Island: Alfred Anthony, 1864); and Volume X, 1784 to 1792 (Providence, Rhode Island: Providence Press Co., 1865).

• The Rhode Island Acts and Resolves (20 volumes, 1747-1780) (hereinafter cited as "Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 1, 2, 3, ... et cetera"), available in the Rhode Island State Law Library, Providence, Rhode Island. This set includes Volume 1, October 1747 to October 1753; Volume 2, February 1754 to October 1757; Volume 3, February 1758 to October 1761; Volume 4, February 1762 to November 1764; Volume 5, February 1765 to October 1768; Volume 6, February 1769 to December 1772; Volume 7, January 1773 to December 1774; Volume 8, April 1775 to October 1775; Volume 9, January 1776 to December 1776; Volume 10, February 1777 to December 1777; Volume 11, February 1778 to December 1778; Volume 12, January 1779 to December 1779; Volume 13, February 1780 to November 1780; Volume 14, January 1781 to December 1781; Volume 15, January 1782 to December 1783; Volume 16, February 1784 to October 1785; Volume 17, February 1786 to December 1788; Volume 18, March 1789 to October 1791; Volume 19, February 1792 to October 1795; and Volume 20, February 1796 to October 1800. The Acts and Resolves are also available in eighteen volumes on compact disks in PDF format from General Books LLC at <www.general-books.net>. This set includes Volume 1, October 1747 to October 1752; Volume 2, February 1753 to October 1757; Volume 3, February 1758 to March 1762; Volume 4, May 1762 to February 1765; Volume 5, May 1765 to February 1769; Volume 6, May 1769 to December 1772; Volume 7, January 1773 to October 1775; Volume 8, January 1776 to May 1777; Volume 9, May 1777 to December 1778; Volume 10, January 1779 to November 1780; Volume 11, January 1781 to December 1781; Volume 12, January 1782 to December 1783; Volume 13, February 1784 to October 1785; Volume 14, February 1786 to December 1788; Volume 15, March 1789 to October 1791; Volume 16, February 1792 to October 1794; Volume 17, January 1795 to December 1791; and Volume 18, January 1798 to October 1800.

For the reader's convenience (on the presumption that the Internet version will remain available), all quotations from, citations to, and page references in these materials have been conformed to the PDF files. Peculiar to these materials is that the pages in some instances are numbered sequentially for particular sessions of the General Assembly, and in other instances are numbered sequentially for all of the sessions throughout a particular volume. So a particular volume may contain more than one page with the same page number. For that reason, to indicate specific pages in any volume, the special style "{ -- }" will be used, in conjunction with identification of the relevant session. In addition, where the number of the PDF volume differs from the number of the bound volume, both numbers will be given, the number of the PDF volume first, followed by the number of the bound volume in brackets. Thus, for example: "...Volume 2 [1], at {32}" indicates that the quoted material is to be found in PDF Volume 2, at page 32, where page "32" may refer to the pagination of the volume as a whole or of the particular session identified in the citation, as the case may be. If only one number is given for a particular volume, then the number of the volume in both the PDF and the bound versions is the same.

In addition, extraneous material in the titles of the various sessions has been deleted.

• PUBLIC LAWS OF RHODE ISLAND, 1719, which contains the ACTS AND LAWS, of His Majesties COLONY OF Rhode-Island AND Providence=Plantations IN AMERICA (Boston, Massachusetts: John Allen, [1719]) (hereinafter cited as "Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719"), available in the Rhode Island State Archives, Providence, Rhode Island. This compilation can also be found in THE CHARTER AND THE ACTS AND LAWS OF HIS MAJESTIES COLONY OF Rhode-Island AND Providence=Plantations In America, 1719 (Providence, Rhode Island: Sidney S. Rider and Burnett Rider, 1895), now available in a digitized version by Google™ Books.

• PUBLIC LAWS OF RHODE ISLAND, 1730, 1730-36, which contains the ACTS and LAWS of His Majesty's COLONY of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, In AMERICA (Newport, Rhode Island: James Franklin, 1730), bound together with various statutes from the period 1730 through 1736 (all hereinafter cited as "Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730"), available in the Rhode Island State Archives, Providence, Rhode Island.

• PUBLIC LAWS OF RHODE ISLAND, 1744, 1745-52, which contains the ACTS and LAWS Of His MAJESTY'S COLONY OF Rhode-Island, AND Providence-Plantations, In NEW-ENGLAND, In AMERICA (Newport, Rhode Island: The Widow Franklin, 1745) (hereinafter cited as "Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744"), bound together with the ACTS AND LAWS Of His MAJESTY'S COLONY OF Rhode-Island, AND Providence-Plantations, In NEW-ENGLAND, In AMERICA. From Anno 1745, to Anno 1752 (Newport, Rhode Island: J. Franklin, 1752) (hereinafter cited as "Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752"), available in the Rhode Island State Archives, Providence, Rhode Island. The compilation originally published in 1745 can also be found in Acts and laws, of His Majesty's colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America, ECCO Eighteenth Century Collections Online, Print Editions. The compilation published in 1752 can be found in Acts and laws of His Majesty's colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations in America: from anno 1745 to anno 1752, Sabin Americana, Print Editions 1500-1926.

• PUBLIC LAWS OF RHODE ISLAND, 1767, which contains the ACTS AND LAWS OF The English COLONY OF RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE-PLANTATIONS IN NEW-ENGLAND, IN AMERICA (Newport, Rhode Island: Samuel Hall, 1767) (hereinafter cited as "Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767"), available in the Rhode Island State Archives, Providence, Rhode Island.

• PUBLIC LAWS OF RHODE ISLAND, 1772, which contains the ACTS AND LAWS OF The English Colony of RHODE-ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE-PLANTATIONS IN NEW-ENGLAND IN AMERICA, Made and passed since the Revision in June, 1767 (Newport, Rhode Island: Solomon Southwick, 1772), available in the Rhode Island State Archives, Providence, Rhode Island. This compilation can also be obtained in the Fac-Simile Reprint, Rhode Island Digest Laws 1772, Issued by Harry Gregory, Providence, R.I., 1893; now available in a digitized version by Google™ Books.

•Part 12 (Rhode Island) of The Selective Service System, Backgrounds of Selective Service, Military Obligation: The American Tradition, A Compilation of the Enactments of Compulsion From the Earliest Settlements of the Original Thirteen Colonies in 1607 Through the Articles of Confederation in 1789, Special Monograph No. 1, Volume II (14 parts) (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1947) (hereinafter cited as "Military Obligation, Rhode Island"), available on microfiche from the Law Library Microfilm Consortium, University of Hawaii-Windward Campus.

SOUTH CAROLINA—

Part 13 (South Carolina) of The Selective Service System, Backgrounds of Selective Service, Military Obligation: The American Tradition, A Compilation of the Enactments of Compulsion From the Earliest Settlements of the Original Thirteen Colonies in 1607 Through the Articles of Confederation in 1789, Special Monograph No. 1, Volume II (14 parts) (Washington, D.C.: Government Printing Office, 1947) (hereinafter cited as "Military Obligation, South Carolina"), available on microfiche from the Law Library Microfilm Consortium, University of Hawaii-Windward Campus.

VIRGINIA—

•William Waller Hening, The Statutes at Large; Being a Collection of all the Laws of Virginia from the First Session of the Legislature, in the Year 1619 (13 volumes) (hereinafter cited as "Laws of Virginia, Volume 1, 2, 3, ... et cetera"). This set includes Volume I, 1619-1660 (New York: R. & W. & G. Barton, 1823); Volume II, 1660-1662 (New York, New York: R. & W. & G. Barton, 1823); Volume III, 1684-1710 (Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: T. Desilver, 1823); Volume IV, 1711-1736 (Richmond, Virginia: W.W. Gray, 1820); Volume V, 1738-1748 (Richmond, Virginia: W.W. Gray, 1819); Volume VI, 1748-1756 (Richmond, Virginia: W.W. Gray, 1819); Volume VII, 1756-1763 (Richmond, Virginia: Franklin Press, 1820); Volume VIII, 1764-1773 (Richmond, Virginia: J. & G. Cochran, 1821); Volume IX, 1775-1778 (Richmond, Virginia: J. & G. Cochran, 1821); Volume X, 1779-1781 (Richmond, Virginia: G. Cochran, 1822); Volume XI, 1782-1784 (Richmond, Virginia: G. Cochran, 1823); Volume XII, 1785-1788 (Richmond, Virginia: G. Cochran, 1823); and Volume XIII, 1789-1792 (Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: T. Desilver, 1823)—available in many libraries and in a CD version from <www.heritagebooks.com>. Nota bene: The date given for a statute drawn from these materials is the year in which the session of the General Assembly which enacted that statute closed. Also, extraneous material in the titles of the various sessions has been deleted.

•EXECUTIVE JOURNALS OF THE Council of Colonial Virginia (hereinafter cited as "Executive Journals of Virginia, Volume 1, 2, 3, ... et cetera"). These materials include Volume I (June 11, 1688–June 22, 1699), H.R. McIlwaine, Editor (Richmond, Virginia: The Virginia State Library, 1925); Volume II (August 3, 1699–April 27, 1705), H.R. McIlwaine, Editor (Richmond, Virginia: The Virginia State Library, 1927); Volume III (May 1, 1705–October 23, 1721), H.R. McIlwaine, Editor (Richmond, Virginia: The Virginia State Library, 1928); Volume IV (October 25, 1721–October 28, 1739), H.R. McIlwane, Editor (Richmond, Virginia: The Virginia State Library (1930); Volume V (November 1, 1739–May 7, 1754), William L. Hall, Editor (Richmond Virginia: Virginia State Library, Second Edition, 1967); and Volume VI (June 20, 1754–May 3, 1775), Benjamin J. Hillman, Editor (Richmond, Virginia: Virginia State Library, 1966).

Overall, for ease of reading, Arabic numerals have generally been substituted for Roman numerals in identifying all of the various volumes among the references.

ENDNOTES PROPER

EN-1 — CHAP. I, A DECLARATION of RIGHTS made by the representatives of the good people of Virginia, assembled in full and free Convention; which rights do pertain to them, and their posterity, as the basis and foundation of government [Unanimously adopted June 12, 1776], Article 13, At a General Convention of Delegates and Representatives, from the several counties and corporations of Virginia, held at the Capitol in the City of Williamsburg, on Monday the 6th of May, 1776, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 9, at 111.

EN-2— This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, Reprinted in J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Dated "1701", it appears At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-3 — LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 85; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 90; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65.

EN-4 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 14th day of June, 1726, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 377, identified by title when repealed by An Act for repealing an Act made and pass'd the Fourteenth Day of June, 1726, being, An Act for regulating the Militia, and the Election of the Officers of each respective Company in this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held at Newport, on the first Wednesday of May, 1730, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 212.

EN-5 — An Act for the Relief of Tender Consciences, and for preventing their being burthened with Military Duty, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held at Newport, by Adjournment, on the third Monday of June, 1730, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 217.

EN-6 — An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in America; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honour the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63}.

EN-7 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {71}.

EN-8 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingston, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {73}.

EN-9 — Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179. This Act was part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 3-5.

EN-10 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150}. Also in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 269.

EN-11 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {29}.

EN-12 — CHAP. II, § I, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SUMMONED TO BE HELD AT Williamsburg, the fifth day of December, 1722, and by writ of prorogation, begun and holden on the ninth day of May, 1723, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 4, at 118.

EN-13 — CHAP. II, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, SUMMONED TO BE HELD AT The Capitol, in the City of Williamsburg, on the first day of August, [1735]. And from thence continued, by several prorogations, to the first day of November, 1738, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 5, at 16.

EN-14 — CHAP. II, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the College in the City of Williamsburg, on Thursday the twenty seventh day of February, 1752. And from thence continued by several prorogations, to Thursday the 14th day of February, 1754, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 6, at 421.

EN-15 — CHAP. II, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the College in the City of Williamsburg, on Thursday the twenty seventh day of February, one thousand seven hundred and fifty two. And from thence continued by several prorogations, to Tuesday the fifth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and fifty five, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 6, at 530.

EN-16 — CHAP. III, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol, in Williamsburg, on Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of March, 1756, and from thence continued by several prorogations to Thursday the fourteenth of April, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 7, at 93.

EN-17 — CHAP. IV, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol, in Williamsburg, on Thursday the fourteenth day of September, 1758; and from thence continued by several prorogations to Thursday the twenty-second of February, 1759, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 7, at 274.

EN-18 — CHAP. III, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol, in the City of Williamsburg, on Tuesday the 26th of May, 1761, and from thence continued by several prorogations to Tuesday the 2d of November[,] 1762, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 7, at 534.

EN-19 — CHAP. XXXI, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol in Williamsburg, on Thursday the sixth day of November, 1766, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 8, at 241.

EN-20 — CHAP. II, At a General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol, in the City of Williamsburg, the seventh day of November, one thousand seven hundred and sixty nine, and from thence continued by several prorogations, and convened by proclamation the eleventh day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 8, at 503.

EN-21 — CHAP. I, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, BEGUN AND HELD At the Capitol, in the City of Williamsburg, on Monday the fifth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy seven, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 9, at 267.

EN-22 — CHAP. XX, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, BEGUN AND HELD At the Capitol, in the City of Williamsburg, on Monday, the third of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 10, at 83.

EN-23 — CHAP. VIII, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, BEGUN AND HELD At the Public Buildings in the Town of Richmond, on Monday the seventh day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-one, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 10, at 416.

EN-24 — CHAP. XLIV, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY, BEGUN AND HELD At the Public Buildings in the Town of Richmond, on Monday, the sixth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-two, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 11, at 173.

EN-25 — CHAP. XXVIII, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY Begun and held at the Public Buildings in the City of Richmond, on Monday the eighteenth day of October, one thousand seven hundred eighty-four, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 11, at 476.

EN-26 — CHAP. I, AT A GENERAL ASSEMBLY BEGUN AND HELD At the Public Buildings in the City of Richmond, on Monday the seventeenth day of October[,] one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 12, at 9.

EN-27 — See CHAPTER DCCL, AN ACT TO REGULATE THE MILITIA OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA (17 March 1777), Laws enacted in the first sitting of the first general assembly of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which began at Philadelphia, November 28, 1776, and was continued by adjournment to March 21, 1777, in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 9, at 75-94; CHAPTER DCCLX, A SUPPLEMENT TO THE ACT, ENTITLED "AN ACT TO REGULATE THE MILITIA OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA" (19 June 1777), in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 9, at 131-136; CHAPTER DCCLXXIII, AN ACT FOR MAKING MORE EQUAL THE BURDEN OF THE PUBLIC DEFENSE AND FOR FILLING THE QUOTA OF TROOPS TO BE RAISED IN THIS STATE (26 December 1777), in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 9, at 167-169; CHAPTER

DCCLXXXI, A FURTHER SUPPLEMENT TO THE ACT, ENTITLED "AN ACT TO REGULATE THE MILITIA OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA" (30 December 1777), in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 9, at 185-189.

This long absence of Militia laws contravened the charter originally granted to William Penn. See THE CHARTER OF CHARLES the Second, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, KING, Defender of the Faith, &c., Unto WILLIAM PENN, Proprietary and Governor of the Province of Pensilvania, 4 March 1681, § XVI, in Military Obligation, Pennsylvania, at 4. The same appears, dated 27 June 1682, in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 1, Appendix I, ¶ [16], at 312. See also Commission of Benjamin Fletcher as Governor of Pennsylvania and the Three Lower Counties, from King William & Queen Mary, 21 October 1692, from Colonial Records of Pennsylvania, 1683-1790 (Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: 1852-1853), reproduced in W. Keith Kavenagh, Editor, Foundations of Colonial America: A Documentary History, Volume II, Middle Atlantic Colonies, Part 1 (New York, New York: Chelsea House, 1983), at 920.

In 1755, Pennsylvania did enact a Militia law mandating only voluntary enlistments; but this was repealed in 1756 by order of the King in Council. CHAPTER CCCCV, AN ACT FOR THE BETTER ORDERING AND REGULATING SUCH AS ARE WILLING AND DESIROUS TO BE UNITED FOR MILITARY PURPOSES WITHIN THIS PROVINCE (25 November 1755), At a General Assembly begun and holden at Philadelphia, the fourteenth day of October 1755, and continued by adjournment until the twenty-fourth day of September, 1756, in Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 5, at 197-201, disallowed and declared void and of no effect (7 July 1756), in id., Appendix XXI, at 532. In 1757, another Militia law was proposed, but not enacted. See AN ACT FOR FORMING AND REGULATING THE MILITIA OF THE PROVINCE OF PENNSYLVANIA; WHICH PASSED THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY AT THEIR SESSION IN MARCH, 1757, TOGETHER WITH THE AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY THE GOVERNOR, Pennsylvania Statutes, Volume 5, Appendix XXI, at 609-635.

EN-28 — THE CHARTER Granted by His MAJESTY King CHARLES The SECOND TO THE COLONY OF Rhode-Island, AND Providence-Plantations, In AMERICA, 8 July 1663, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 5. Also in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 10-13 (separately paginated).

EN-29 — AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {36}. Accord, e.g., Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in February, 1792, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 10, at 468 (The Governor's Independent Company of Light Infantry), 469 (Scituate Light Infantry), and 470 (Federal Protectors).

EN-30 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England in America; begun and holden by Adjournment at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {103}. Accord, Rules and Orders of the Army of Observation, of the Colony of Rhode Island, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the second Monday in June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 340.

EN-31 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {29}.

EN-32 — An Act to incorporate the Bristol Grenadiers, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ninety-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 18 [20], at {23}.

EN-33 — An Act in addition to an act, entituled "An act for the relief of persons of tender consciences; and for preventing their being burthened with military duty", Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 204.

EN-34 — An ACT for the confiscating the Estates of certain Persons therein described, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {24-25}.

EN-35 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 116-117.

EN-36 — Attorney General's Opinion upon the Address from Rhode Island, of August 2, 1692, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 293. Accord, Order of Council upon the Address from Rhode Island, concerning the Militia, 2 August 1694, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 296-297.

EN-37 — An ACT for settling the Militia of the Towns of Bristol, Tiverton, Little-Compton, Warren, and Cumberland, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, begun and held (by Virtue of a Warrant from his Honour the Governor) at Providence, on the seventeenth Day of February, 1746, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 30-31.

EN-38 — An Act for the Establishing of Watches throughout this Colony, both in Time of War and Peace, A LAW, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, held at Newport, by Adjournment to the Eighth Day of September, 1719, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 80.

EN-39 — An ACT for the more effectual Establishing a Military Watch in Time of War, throughout this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, on the Twenty Seventh Day of October, 1742, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 248.

EN-40 — [Number] 18, The General Court of Election began and held at Portsmouth, from the 16th of March to the 19th of the same mo., 1641, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 115.

EN-41 — At the Generall Court of Election held on the 16th & 17th of March, att Newport, 1642, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 120-121.

EN-42 — [General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] The 10th of Aprill, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 80.

EN-43 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 4th of September, 1666, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 171-172.

EN-44 — [Number] 15, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, Warwicke, November the 2d, 1658, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 403.

EN-45 — [A Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October 1643], in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77; [Number] 13, June the 30th, 1655[,] The Court of Commissioners at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 320-321; [Number] 15, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, Warwicke, November the 2d, 1658, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 403; Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 117; [Number] 2, By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13th and 14th of May, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 196; Att a meeting of the Generall Councill, at Newport, on Thursday, August 26, 1669, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 282; Proceedings of the Generall Assembly of the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, the 13th of March, 1675-6, [Session of] Aprill the 4th[, 1676], in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 536.

EN-46 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222; [Number] 2, By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13th and 14th of May, 1667, in Rhode island Records, Volume 2, at 196.

EN-47 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7th day of July, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 278; AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {8}; An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}; An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52}.

EN-48 — [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154; [Number] 7, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, at Portsmouth, March the 10th, 1657-8, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 371-373; An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An Act, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 183; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 422-423; An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor), at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {304-305}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {16}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {14}; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7th day of July, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 278; An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {37-38}.

EN-49 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35}.

EN-50 — Acts, Orders and Proceedings of the Governor and Councill of His Majestys Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, May, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 192-193.

EN-51 — An Act in addition to an act, entituled "An act for the relief of persons of tender consciences; and for preventing their being burthened with military duty", Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 204-205; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 27th day of October, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 318; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Monday, the 1st day of December, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 334.

EN-52 — An Act for the Establishing of Watches throughout this Colony, both in Time of War and Peace, A LAW, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, held at Newport, by Adjournment to the Eighth Day of September, 1719, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 80.

EN-53 — [Number] 29, At the General Courte held on the 14th day of the 7th mo. [September], 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 109; Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 223-224.

EN-54 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the third Monday in July, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 192-193.

EN-55 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the last Wednesday of October, 1738, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 548-549; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held at Newport by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {24}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in America; begun and held at South-Kingstown in said Colony, on the last Wednesday of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {44}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {76}; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 568-569; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in May, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 412; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in January, 1782, Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 508.

EN-56 — By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 93.

EN-57— At the Generall Court of Election held on the 16th & 17th of March, att Newport, 1642, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 120-121.

EN-58 — Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 153.

EN-59 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 116.

EN-60 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 568.

EN-61 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 433-434. This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted in J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-62 — [Number] 18, The Generall Court of Election began and held at Portsmouth, from the 16th of March to the 19th of the same mo., 1641, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 115.

EN-63— Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 19*th day of June*, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 534.

EN-64 — An Act for Declaring the Rights and Priviledges of His Majesties Subjects within this Colony, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations in New-England. Begun and Held at Newport, the first day of March[,] 1663, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 3.

EN-65 — An Act directing the admitting of Freemen in the several Towns in this Colony, LAWS Made and past by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, Held at Newport, the last Tuesday of February, 1729, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 207.

EN-66 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 16*th day of June,* 1713, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 155.

EN-67 — Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 15*th day of June*, 1714, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 173.

EN-68 — See Order of Council upon the Address from Rhode Island, concerning the Militia (2 April 1694), in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 297.

EN-69 — An Act for the Repealing of several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same. LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86-87; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91-92; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 66.

EN-70 — Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 14*th day of June*, 1726, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 377-378.

EN-71 — An Act for the more effectual putting the Colony into a proper Posture of Defence, A LAW Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held by Adjournment, at Warwick, the Twenty-Seventh Day of January, 1740, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 232-233.

EN-72 — E.g., Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the first Wednesday of May, 1773, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 206; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the first Wednesday of May, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 241-242; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the first Wednesday of May, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 314-315; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 574-575 (towns of Newport and Exeter); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 23d day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 73-74, 84-85 (officers for particular Militia units); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Monday, the 19th day of May, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 10, at 244 (officers for particular Militia units); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the second Monday in February, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 354-356 (officers for particular Militia units); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Wednesday in May, 1779, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 12, at 544-545 (officers for particular Militia units); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the second Monday in June, 1779, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 12, at 563-566 (officers for various Alarm Companies and other Militia units); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in May, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 403-410 (officers for particular Militia units).

See generally, Joseph J. Smith, Civil and Military List of Rhode Island, 1647-1800. A List of All Officers Elected by the General Assembly from the Organization of the Legislative Government of the Colony to 1800 (Providence, Rhode Island: Preston and Rounds Co., 1900).

EN-73 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {51-52}.

EN-74 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the last Monday of October, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 8; Proceedings of the General Assembly, for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the third Monday in July, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 192-193. See also At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {13-14}.

EN-75 — AN ACT, for putting in Force the Laws of England, in all Cases where no particular Law of this Colony hath Provided a Remedy, LAWS Made and Pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, Held at Newport, the Thirtieth Day of April, 1700, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 28; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 45.

EN-76 — LAWS, Made and passed at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, on the last Tuesday of February, 1749, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 70-72 (bold-face emphasis supplied). Also in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 288-289.

EN-77 — AT A GRAND ASSEMBLY HELD AT JAMES CITY MARCH THE 23D 1661-2, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 2, at 43 (bold-face emphasis supplied).

EN-78 — CHAP. V, An ordinance to enable the present magistrates and officers to continue the administration of justice, and for settling the general mode of proceedings in criminal and other cases till the same can be more amply provided for, § VI, At a General Convention of Delegates and Representatives, from the several counties and corporations of Virginia, held at the Capitol in the City of Williamsburg, on Monday the 6th of May, 1776, in Laws of Virginia, Volume 9, at 127.

EN-79 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 566-567.

EN-80 — An Act for the settling a Constable's watch in every respective town in this Collony, and for punishing those that shall neglect the same, Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 29th day of August, 1700, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 424.

EN-81 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, May the 6th, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 431.

EN-82 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 118-119.

EN-83 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Court of Eelection held at Warwick this 18*th of May,* 1652, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 243.

EN-84 — An Act for preventing clandestine importations and exportations of passengers, or negroes, or Indian slaves into or out of this colony; and for the more effectual putting in execution an act, entitled an act for supporting the Governor in the performance of his engagement to the act of navigation, made at Newport, April 30, 1700, Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 27th of February, 1711-12, in Rhode Islands Records, Volume 4, at 133-135.

EN-85 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the first Wednesday in May, 1732, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 471.

EN-86 — E.g., AN ACT to Prevent Slaves from Running away from their Masters, &c., LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, &c. Held at Providence, the Twenty Seventh Day of October, 1714, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 70; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 49.

EN-87 — An Act relating to freeing mulatto and negro slaves, Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the third Tuesday of February, 1728-9, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 415-416.

EN-88 — An Act to prevent the commanders of privateers, or masters of any other vessels, from carrying slaves out of this colony, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on Monday, the 13th day of June, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 64-65.

EN-89 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, the last Wednesday of October, 1743, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 72-73.

EN-90 — An Act to restrict negroes and Indians for walking in unseasonable times in the night, and at other times not allowable, Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 4th of January, 1703-4, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 492-493; An Act to prevent all persons keeping house within this colony, from entertaining Indian, negro or mulatto servants or slaves, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the third Monday of March, 1750-51, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 320-321 & note †.

EN-91 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the 27th of October, 1714, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 179-180.

EN-92 — E.g., AN ACT Prohibiting Negroes and Indians from being abroad at unseasonable times of the Night, and for Punishing those that shall Entertain them contrary hereto, LAWS Made and Past by the General assembly of Her Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, &c. Held at Newport, the Fourth Day of January, 1704, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 52, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 35; An ACT to prevent all Persons keeping House within this Colony, from entertaining Indian, Negro, or Mulatto Servants or Slaves, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the third Monday of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty [1751], in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 1, at {86}.

EN-93 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held at Newport, the 2d of May, 1705, in Rhode Island Records. Volume 3, at 526.

EN-94 — See, e.g., Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, the last Wednesday of October, 1743, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 72-73.

EN-95 — Letter of Governor Samuel Cranston to the British Board of Trade, 5 December 1708, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 59.

EN-96 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the second Monday in June, 1749, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 270.

EN-97 — Report of the Committee, appointed by the General Assembly, to take the number of the Inhabitants of the Colony, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 253.

EN-98 — A Summary of the Inhabitants in the several Towns in the State of Rhode Island, taken A.D. 1782, by order of the General Assembly of said State, Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in February, 1783, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 652-653.

EN-99 — An Act relating to freeing mulatto and negro slaves, Proceedings of the General Assembly held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the third Tuesday of February, 1728-9, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, and 415-416; An Act authorizing the manumission of negroes, mulattoes, and others, and for the gradual abolition of slavery, Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in February, 1784, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 10, at 7-8; An Act repealing part of an Act entitled "An Act authorizing the manumission of negroes, mulattoes, and others, and for the gradual abolition of slavery", Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the last Monday in October, 1785, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 10, at 132-133.

EN-100 — An Act prohibiting the importation of Negroes into this Colony, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 251.

EN-101 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the second Monday in February, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 358-360.

EN-102 — See Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Wednesday in May, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 399.

EN-103 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the first Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {7}; An ACT for raising Six Hundred and Thirty able-bodied effective Men, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {29}; An ACT for raising Two Hundred and Fifty-nine Men, to make up the full Quota of this State's Forces in the Army of the United States, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-fifth Day of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-two, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 12 [15], at {11}.

EN-104 — By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 94 (emphasis supplied). Accord, At a Generall Towne Meetinge at Portsmouth, 1st of March, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 79 ("that every man do come armed unto the [general town] meeting upon every sixth day") (emphasis supplied).

EN-105 — At a Generall Towne Meetinge at Portsmouth, 1st of March, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 79, and [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphases supplied).

EN-106 — [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] The 10th of Aprill, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 80, and [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphases supplied).

EN-107 — June y^e^ 28th, 1655. The Court of Commissioners at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 320 (emphasis supplied).

EN-108 — Att a meeting of the Generall Councill, at Newport, on Thursday, August 26, 1669, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 282 (emphasis supplied).

EN-109 — Acts, Orders and Proceedings of the Governor and Councill of His Majestys Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, May, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 192, 193 (emphasis supplied).

EN-110 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 356 (emphasis supplied).

EN-111 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358 (emphasis supplied).

EN-112 — An ACT for raising Six Hundred and Thirty able-bodied effective Men, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {29} (emphasis supplied). Accord, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the first Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {7}.

EN-113 — See An Act for the electing of commissioned officers of the severall train bands in this Colony, Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 19th day of June, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 534; An Act for numbering all persons able to bear arms within this state, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in March, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 189.

EN-114 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115; and Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 570. See also An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further regulating the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86 ("all male Persons Residing for the space of Three Months within this Colony, from the Age of Sixteen, to the Age of Sixty Years, shall bear Arms in their Respective Train-Bands or Companies", with certain exceptions). In later compilations, however, this appears as "from the Age of Sixteen, to the Age of Fifty Years". Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91; Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65.

EN-115 — E.g., Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154; An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87-89, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93-95, and in Public laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67-69; An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {71-72}; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182, 184-185; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10*th day of December*, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67; An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35}.

EN-116 — At a Generall Meeting upon Publicke notice, the 5th of the 9th month, 1638, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 61; An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179; An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {29}.

EN-117 — E.g., LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 89; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 94-95; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 69.

EN-118 — An Act for numbering all persons able to bear arms within this state, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in March, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 189.

EN-119 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35}.

EN-120 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {32-33}.

EN-121 — E.g., Proceedings of a Meetinge of the Generall Assembly, May the fowerth, 1664, at Newport, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 52; Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115; Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 27*th day of October*, 1680, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 93; An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7*th of May*, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430-431, 433-434; Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 19*th day of June*, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 534; An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87-88, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67-68; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 14*th day of June*, 1726, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 379; An Act for raising the Fines of enlisted Soldiers of the Train'd Bands in this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held at Newport, by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, 1731, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 237; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the last Wednesday of October, 1738, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 548; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held at Newport by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {24}; An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {71}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {66}; An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10*th day of August*, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 76; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An Act, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {38}; An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150}; An ACT for inlisting One Fourth Part of the Militia of the Colony, as Minute-Men, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Wednesday, the Twenty-eighth Day of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {78}.

EN-122 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly of the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, the 13th of March, 1675-6, [Session of] Aprill the 4th[, 1676], in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 536.

EN-123 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1st of May, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 568-569.

EN-124 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 422-423.

EN-125 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor), at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {303-305}.

EN-126 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67.

EN-127 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35}.

EN-128 — An Act for enlisting one-fourth part of the militia of this colony, as minute men, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358, 360, 360-361.

EN-129 — An Act appointing and ordering one foot company or training band, to attend on the general election, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Wednesday of October, 1734, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 500.

EN-130 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 66.

EN-131 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 23d day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 105.

EN-132 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-Six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15-16}.

EN-133 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday in February, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 120-121.

EN-134 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 197-198.

EN-135 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Seventh Day of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {5-6}.

EN-136 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {8}.

EN-137 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 27th day of October, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 317.

EN-138 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Friday, the 19*th day of December,* 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 350.

EN-139 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in June, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 429.

EN-140 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in June, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 432-433.

EN-141 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-One, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {5, 7, 8}.

An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for one Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {11, 14, 15}.

An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {39, 41, 42}.

EN-142 — By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 93; At the Generall Courte Held at Portsmouth on the 6th of August, 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 104.

EN-143 — By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 94 (emphasis supplied). Accord, At a Generall Towne Meetinge at Portsmouth, 1st of March, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 79.

EN-144 — At a Generall Towne Meetinge at Portsmouth, 1st of March, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 79, and [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphasis supplied).

EN-145 — E.g., [Number] 29, At the General Courte held on the 14th day of the 7th mo. [September], 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 109.

EN-146 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 117.

EN-147 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 223-224.

EN-148 — An Act for Declaring the Rights and Priviledges of His Majesties Subjects within this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, Begun and Held at Newport, the first Day of March, 1663, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 3.

EN-149 — THE CHARTER Granted by His MAJESTY King CHARLES The Second TO THE COLONY OF Rhode-Island, AND Providence-Plantations, In AMERICA, July 8, 1663, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 2.

EN-150 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-fourth Day of February, 1783, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 12 [15], at {79}.

EN-151 — [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154.

EN-152 — The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, Warwicke, November the 2*d*, 1658, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 403.

EN-153 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115.

EN-154 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 570.

EN-155 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7*th of May*, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430-431, 433. This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted in J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-156 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86, 87, 90; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91, 93, 96; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65, 67, 71.

EN-157 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}.

EN-158 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179, 182, 187.

EN-159 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150}.

EN-160 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28*th day of June*, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358.

EN-161 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423.

EN-162 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {8}.

EN-163 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}.

EN-164 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41}.

EN-165 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52}.

EN-166 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 69.

EN-167 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of *Februar*y, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {71-72}.

EN-168 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 184.

EN-169 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150-151}. Also in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 269-270.

EN-170 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358.

EN-171 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67.

EN-172 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {8}.

EN-173 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35, 32}.

EN-174 — See, e.g., An Act for Punishing Criminal Offenses, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations in New-England. Begun and Held at Newport, the first day of March 1663, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 4-5.

EN-175 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222 (emphasis supplied).

EN-176 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115 (emphasis supplied).

EN-177 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 433 (emphasis supplied).

EN-178 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of *Februar*y, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72} (emphasis supplied).

EN-179 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358 (emphasis supplied).

EN-180 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423 (emphasis supplied).

EN-181 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday of September, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 608 (emphasis supplied).

EN-182 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67 (emphasis supplied).

EN-183 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}.

EN-184 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {56, 55} (emphasis supplied in part).

EN-185 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8} (emphasis supplied). Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; and also An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41}.

EN-186 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52} (emphasis supplied).

EN-187 — Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, Anno. 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154 (emphasis supplied).

EN-188 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87, 88 (emphasis supplied); in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93, 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67, 69.

EN-189 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182, 184, 187 (emphasis supplied).

EN-190 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150, 151} (emphasis supplied). Also in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 269, 270.

EN-191 — [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphasis supplied).

EN-192 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 117 (emphasis supplied).

EN-193 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 570 (emphasis supplied).

EN-194 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87, 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93, 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67, 69.

EN-195 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182, 184-185.

EN-196 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32} (emphasis supplied).

EN-197 — At the Generall Courte Held at Portsmouth on the 6th of August, 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 104 (emphasis supplied).

EN-198 — At a Generall Towne Meetinge at Portsmouth, 1st of March, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 79 (emphasis supplied).

EN-199 — Proceedings of a Meetinge of the Generall Assembly, May the fowerth, 1664, at Newport, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 52 (emphasis supplied).

EN-200 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held in his Majesty's name, May the 2*d*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 569 (emphasis supplied). Accord, Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 576 (emphasis supplied).

EN-201 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7*th of May*, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430-431 (emphasis supplied). This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted in J.D. in Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-202 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87-88 (emphasis supplied); in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67-68.

EN-203 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182-183 (emphasis supplied).

EN-204 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in March, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 181 (emphasis supplied). Accord, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Seventh Day of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {6} ("either by himself or a good able-bodied and suitable Person in his Stead"); and Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7th day of July, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 277 (same).

EN-205 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {36-37} (emphasis supplied).

EN-206 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52} (emphasis supplied).

EN-207 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday in December, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 266-267.

EN-208 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Monday, the 9th day of March, 1778, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 384.

EN-209 —Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, Anno. 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154.

EN-210 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115.

EN-211 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115.

EN-212 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held in his Majesty's name, May the 2d, 1677, at Newport, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 570-571.

EN-213 — LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of his Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 68.

EN-214 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of the several Acts regulating the Militia, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {73}.

EN-215 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 183.

EN-216 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {52}.

EN-217 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 114-116.

EN-218 — An ACT for raising Four Companies in this Colony, of One Hundred Men each, Officers included, to be imployed on a secret Expedition, in case other Governments shall join and carry on the proposed Enterprize, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, and held at Providence on Thursday the sixth of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {85-86}.

EN-219 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in February, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 463.

EN-220 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Thursday, the 21st day of November, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 42-44. Accord, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 431, 432, and also Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 62.

EN-221 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {56}.

EN-222 — Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 153, 154.

EN-223 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222.

EN-224 — [Number] 7, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, at Portsmouth, March the 10th, 1657-8, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 373.

EN-225 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly of the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, the 25th of October, 1676, [Session of] October 27th, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 555.

EN-226 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 27th day of October, 1680, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 93-94.

EN-227 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 434-435. This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted from J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-228 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 68.

EN-229 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}.

EN-230 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 183.

EN-231 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {37-38}.

EN-232 — [Number] 7, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, at Portsmouth, March the 10th, 1657-8, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 373.

EN-233 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held at Newport, the 2d of May, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 526.

EN-234 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423.

EN-235 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {303-305}.

EN-236 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {16}.

EN-237 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in March, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [10], at {6}.

EN-238 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {14}.

EN-239 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {32}.

EN-240 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7th day of July, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 278.

EN-241 — An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}. Accord, An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41-42}.

EN-242 — AN ACT to prevent the Soldiery, within this State, selling and squandering away the Camp Utensils, &c., AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the First Day of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {16}.

EN-243 — An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the Forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10th day of August, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 77, 78.

EN-244 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Thursday, the 21st day of November, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 43.

EN-245 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {54-55}.

EN-246 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {56}.

EN-247 — An Act to prevent the soldiers in the pay of this colony from embezzling and destroying the arms which they have been furnished with, at the expense of the government, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on Monday, the 13th day of June, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 67-68.

EN-248 — An Act for raising a regiment, to serve for three months, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Thursday, the 21st day of November, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 42-44 (emphasis supplied).

EN-249 — An ACT for raising Four Companies in this Colony, of One Hundred Men each, Officers included, to be imployed on a secret Expedition, in case other Governments shall join and carry on the proposed Enterprize, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, and held at Providence on Thursday the sixth of March. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {85-86}.

EN-250 — An Act for embodying, supplying and paying, the army of observation ordered to be raised for the defence of the colony, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the first Wednesday of May, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 318.

EN-251 — An Act for embodying, supplying and paying a regiment, consisting of five hundred men, for the defence of the United Colonies in general, and of this colony, in particular, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Tuesday, the 31st day of October, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 385.

EN-252 — An Act for raising an additional regiment, for the defence of the United Colonies in general, and this colony in particular, and for embodying the same; and the regiment ordered to be raised at the last session of Assembly, into one brigade, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 432.

EN-253 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Thursday, the 21st day of November, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 43-44.

EN-254 — An Act for raising, embodying, supplying and paying two regiments of infantry, each consisting of seven hundred and fifty men; and a regiment or train of artillery, consisting of three hundred men, for the defence of the United States, in general, and of this state, in particular, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 62.

EN-255 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {56}.

EN-256 — Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the last Monday in October, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 481.

EN-257 — An Act for raising and equipping fifteen hundred men, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Friday, the 19th day of December, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 345, 346 (emphasis supplied).

EN-258 — E.g., An Act for raising four companies in this colony, of one hundred men each, officers included, to be employed on a secret expedition, in case other governments shall join and carry on the proposed enterprise, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the 6th day of March, 1755, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 5, at 420; An Act for embodying, supplying and paying, the army of observation ordered to be raised for the defence of the colony, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the first Wednesday of May, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 318; An Act for embodying, supplying and paying a regiment, consisting of five hundred men, for the defence of the United Colonies in general, and of this colony, in particular, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Tuesday, the 31st day of October, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 384-385; An Act for raising an additional regiment, for the defence of the United Colonies in general, and this colony in particular, and for embodying the same; and the regiment ordered to be raised at the last session of Assembly, into one brigade, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 432; An Act for raising, embodying, supplying and paying, two regiments of infantry, each consisting of seven hundred and fifty men; and a regiment or train of artillery, consisting of three hundred men, for the defence of the United States, in general, and of this state, in particular, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 62.

EN-259 — An ACT for raising and equipping Fifteen Hundred Men, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at East-Greenwich, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-Nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {14-15} (bold-faced emphasis supplied).

EN-260 — An Act to prevent the soldiery, within this state, selling and squandering away the camp utensils, &c., Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Monday, the 1st day of December, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 326.

EN-261 — [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154.

EN-262 — [Number] 15, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, Warwicke, November the 2d, 1658, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 403.

EN-263 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1st of May, 1677, in Rhode island Records, Volume 2, at 570.

EN-264 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430-431. This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted in J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-265 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86, 87, 90; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91, 93, 96; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65, 67, 71.

EN-266 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179, 182.

EN-267 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {150}.

EN-268 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423.

EN-269 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in February, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 463.

EN-270 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor), at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {305}.

EN-271 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {8}.

EN-272 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}.

EN-273 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41}.

EN-274 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52}.

EN-275 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87-88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67-68.

EN-276 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182.

EN-277 — By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 93.

EN-278 — [General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] The 10th of Aprill, 1643, Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 80 (emphasis supplied).

EN-279 — [A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphasis supplied).

EN-280 — [Number] 13, June y^{e} 28th, 1655. The Court of Commissioners at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 320 (emphasis supplied).

EN-281 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 117 (emphasis supplied).

EN-282 — [Number] 2, By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13*th and* 14*th of May*, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 196 (emphasis supplied).

EN-283 — Att a meeting of the Generall Councill, at Newport, on Thursday, August 26, 1669, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 282.

EN-284 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly of the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, the 13*th of March*, 1675-6, [Session of] Aprill the 4*th*[, 1676], in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 536 (emphasis supplied).

EN-285 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 69.

EN-286 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of *Februar*y, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}.

EN-287 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 184-185.

EN-288 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {151}.

EN-289 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28*th day of June*, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 356 (emphasis supplied).

EN-290 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Thursday, the 21*st day of November,* 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 44-45.

EN-291 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the second Monday in September, 1779, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 595.

EN-292 —[A General Town Meeting in Portsmouth,] 5th of October, 1643, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 77 (emphasis supplied).

EN-293 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222.

EN-294 — [Number] 2, By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13*th and* 14*th of May*, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 196.

EN-295 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115 (emphasis supplied).

EN-296 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7*th of May*, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 433 (emphasis supplied).This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted in J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-297 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87, 88; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93, 94; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 67, 69.

EN-298 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of *Februar*y, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72} (emphasis supplied).

EN-299 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182, 184-185.

EN-300 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358 (emphasis supplied).

EN-301 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423 (emphasis supplied).

EN-302 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}.

EN-303 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8} (emphasis supplied). Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41}.

EN-304 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52} (emphasis supplied).

EN-305 — An ACT in Addition to an Act of the General Assembly of this Colony, made and pass'd at Providence the sixth Day of March last, for raising Four Hundred Men, to be employed in Conjunction with the Troops of other Governments, upon an Expedition, for erecting a strong Fort upon the rocky Eminence near Crown-Point, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held at Newport, on the first Wednesday of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {17}.

EN-306 — An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10th day of August, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 77.

EN-307 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday in December, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 266.

EN-308 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {198}.

EN-309 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 423.

EN-310 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {303}.

EN-311 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 210.

EN-312 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {14}.

EN-313 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {32}.

EN-314 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Friday the Nineteenth Day of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {10}. See also AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {6, 7}.

EN-315 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41-42}.

EN-316 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday in December, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 266.

EN-317 — AN ACT, for Levying of a Duty on Tonnage of Shipping, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of Her Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, &c. Held at Newport, the Fourth Day of January, 1704, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 51, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 34.

EN-318 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {141}.

EN-319 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 410.

EN-320 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday of September, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 606.

EN-321 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday of September, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 606-607.

EN-322 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {40}.

EN-323 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 210.

EN-324 — By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13th and 14th of May, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 196 (emphasis supplied).

EN-325 — An ACT in Addition to an Act of the General Assembly of this Colony, made and pass'd at Providence the sixth Day of March last, for raising Four Hundred Men, to be employed in Conjunction with the Troops of other Governments, upon an Expedition, for erecting a strong Fort upon the rocky Eminence near Crown-Point, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held at Newport, on the first Wednesday of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {17}.

EN-326 — An ACT for raising Four Companies in this Colony, of One Hundred Men each, Officers included, to be imployed on a secret Expedition, in case other Governments shall join and carry on the proposed Enterprize, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, and held at Providence on Thursday the sixth of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {87}.

EN-327 — An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10th day of August, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 77.

EN-328 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {9}.

EN-329 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {54-55}.

EN-330 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {42}.

EN-331 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in March, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [10], at {5}.

EN-332 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {9}.

EN-333 — An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10th day of August, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 77.

EN-334 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {9}.

EN-335 — An ACT for furnishing the Soldiers who shall inlist into this State's Service for Three Months with Guns, and necessary Accoutrements, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {55}.

EN-336 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {4}.

EN-337 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-two, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 12 [15], at {25}.

EN-338 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 13 [16], at {20}.

EN-339 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-two, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 12 [15], at {4}.

EN-340 — Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the fourth Monday in June, 1786, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 10, at 202. Also in At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 14 [17], at {3}.

EN-341 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222 (emphasis supplied).

EN-342 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in June, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {33}. See to like effect, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {8}; AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {6}; and

At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at East-Greenwich, within and for the said State, on the Second Monday in September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {4}.

EN-343 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the First Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [10], at {10}.

EN-344 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday in December, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 271.

EN-345 — AN ACT for the Inspection of GUNPOWDER, manufactured within this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday of October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {25}.

EN-346 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden by Adjournment at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {106}.

EN-347 — An Act for encouraging the manufactures of saltpeter and gunpowder, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in January, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 428-430.

EN-348 — LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65-66.

EN-349 — An ACT for settling the Militia of the Towns of Bristol, Tiverton, Little-Compton, Warren, and Cumberland, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, begun and held (by Virtue of a Warrant from his Honour the Governor) at Providence, on the seventeenth Day of February, 1746, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 30-31.

EN-350 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31}.

EN-351 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {5}.

EN-352 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {5-6}.

EN-353 — An ACT for dividing the First Company of Trained Bands in Scituate, in the County of Providence, into Two, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {28}.

EN-354 — An ACT dividing the Company of Militia, in the Town of Johnston, into Two Companies, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {31-32}.

EN-355 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held at Newport by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {24}. See At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode- Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in America; begun and held at South-Kingstown in said Colony, on the last Wednesday of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {44} (accepting the division of the Company).

EN-356 — An ACT dividing the Second Trained Band, or Company of Militia, in the Town of Coventry, into Two Companies, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {67-68}. To like purpose and effect, An ACT dividing the First Trained Band, or Company of Militia, in the Town of Coventry, into Two Companies, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {66-67}.

EN-357 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the third Monday in July, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 192-193.

EN-358 — Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in May, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 412.

EN-359 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Providence, the last Wednesday of October, 1738, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 548-549 (Providence); At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {76} (Providence); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 568-569 (Exeter); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in January, 1782, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 508 (Foster).

EN-360 — An Act for enlisting one-fourth part of the militia of the colony, as minute men, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358-360.

EN-361 — [Number] 18, The General Court of Election began and held at Portsmouth, from the 16th of March to the 19th of the same mo., 1641, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 115.

EN-362 — At the Generall Court of Election held on the 16th & 17th of March, att Newport, 1642, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 120-121.

EN-363 — [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 153.

EN-364 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 19th day of June, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 534, repealed by An Act for the more effectual putting the Colony into a proper Posture of Defence, A LAW, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held by Adjournment, at Warwick, the Twenty Seventh Day of January, 1740, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 232.

EN-365 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the third Monday in July, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 192-193.

EN-366 — An Act for the Establishing of Watches throughout this Colony, both in Time of War and Peace, A LAW, Made and Pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, held at Newport, by Adjournment to the Eighth Day of September, 1719, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 80.

EN-367 — At the General Courte held on the 14th day of the 7th mo. [September], 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 109.

EN-368 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 223-224.

EN-369 — Acts and Orders made at the Generall Courte of Election held at Newport, May the 23d, (1650), for the Colonie of Providence Plantations, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 221-222.

EN-370 — [Number] 13, June y^e^ 28th, 1655. The Court of Commissioners at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 320.

EN-371 — [Number] 15,The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, Warwicke, November the 2d, 1658, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 403.

EN-372 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 117.

EN-373 — [Number] 2, By the Governor and Councill att Newport, the 13*th and* 14*th of May*, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 196.

EN-374 — Att a meeting of the Generall Councill, at Newport, on Thursday, August 26, 1669, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 282.

EN-375 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28*th day of June*, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 356.

EN-376 — [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 154.

EN-377 — [Number] 7, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, at Portsmouth, March the 10*th*, 1657-8, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 373.

EN-378 — An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of *Februa*ry, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}.

EN-379 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 183.

EN-380 — *Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the second Monday in Januar*y, 1776, *in Rhode Island Record*s, Volume 7, at 422-423.

EN-381 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on *Monda*y the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {303-305}.

EN-382 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {16}.

EN-383 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7*th day of July*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 278.

EN-384 — An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {15}. Accord, An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in *Februar*y, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {8}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41-42}.

EN-385 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 4th of September, 1666, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 171-172.

EN-386 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Thursday the Twenty-eighth Day of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-eight, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [11], at {8}.

EN-387 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {31-32}.

EN-388 — An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the Military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51-52}.

EN-389 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 27th day of October, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 317-318. Accord, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Monday, the 1st day of December, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 333-334.

EN-390 — An ACT for filling up and completing this State's Quota of the Continental Army, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {37}.

EN-391 — E.g., By the Body Politicke in the Ile of Aqethnec, Inhabiting this present, 25 of 9: month. 1639, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 93 ("the Traine Band"); [Number] 20, At the Generall Courte Held at Portsmouth on the 6th of August, 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 104 ("the Bands of each Plantation"); [Number] 18, The General Court of Election began and held at Portsmouth, from the 16th of March, to the 19th of the same mo., 1641, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 115 ("the Traine Bands"); At the Generall Court of Election held on the 16th & 17th of March, att Newport, 1642, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 121 ("the Traine Bands"); [Number] 29, Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 153 ("the Bands of each plantation or Towne", "Train Bands"); Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 4th of September, 1666, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 171 ("trayne band"); At the Generall Assembly and Election held in his Majesty's name, May the 2d, 1677, at Newport, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 568 ("Traine Bands"); Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 27th day of October, 1680, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 93-94 ("Traine Bands"); At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 433 ("Train Band"); Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 19th day of June, 1705, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 534 ("Train Band"); An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86, 87, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91, 93, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65, 68 ("Train bands", "Train'd band"); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 14th day of June, 1726, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 377 ("trained bands"); An Act for raising the Fines of enlisted Soldiers of the Train'd Bands in this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held at Newport, by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, 1731, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 237; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the last Wednesday of October, 1738, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 548 ("train band"); An ACT ordering and appointing the Militia, or train'd Bands, in this Colony, to muster twice a Year, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, held by Adjournment at Newport, on the Twenty-First Day of September, 1745, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 2; An ACT for settling the Militia of the Towns of Bristol, Tiverton, Little-Compton, Warren, and Cumberland, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, begun and held (by Virtue of a Warrant from his Honour the Governor) at Providence, on the seventeenth Day of February, 1746, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 30-31 ("train'd Band"); At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held at Newport by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {24} ("train'd Band"); An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {64} ("train'd Bands"); At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {66} ("trained Band"); An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179 ("trained Bands"); AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {38} ("trained Bands"); Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 575 ("trained bands"); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in February, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 7 ("Trained Bands"); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the second Monday in June, 1780, in Rhode Islands Records, Volume 9, at 94 ("Trained Bands"); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in May, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 412 ("trained band"); Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in January, 1782, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 508 ("trained band").

EN-392 — E.g., At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7th of May, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 433-434; An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 90-91, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 96-97, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 71-72; An ACT for settling the Militia of the Towns of Bristol, Tiverton, Little-Compton, Warren, and Cumberland, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, begun and held (by Virtue of a Warrant from his Honour the Governor) at Providence, on the seventeenth Day of February, 1746, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 31; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 187.

EN-393 — E.g., Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 27th day of October, 1680, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 94; An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86, 87, 88, 89, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91, 93, 94, 97, and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65, 68, 69, 70; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 14th day of June, 1726, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 377; An Act for raising the Fines of enlisted Soldiers of the Train'd Bands in this Colony, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held at Newport, by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, 1731, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 237; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the last Wednesday of October, 1738, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 548-549; An Act for the more effectual putting the Colony into a proper Posture of Defence, A LAW, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England; held by Adjournment, at Warwick, the Twenty-Seventh Day of January, 1740, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 233; An ACT ordering and appointing the Militia, or train'd Bands, in this Colony, to muster twice a Year, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, held by Adjournment at Newport, on the Twenty-First Day of September, 1745, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 2; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and held at Newport by Adjournment, on the second Monday of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-three, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2 [1], at {24}; An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {64}; An ACT in Addition to the several Acts regulating the Militia in this Colony, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at Providence, on the first Monday of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {72}; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {66}; An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10*th day of August*, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 75; An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 183, 185, 187; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {38}; An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {151}; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 567; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the second Monday in June, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 568-569, 575; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Monday of September, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 608; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10*th day of December*, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67; At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15}; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17*th day of April*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 197; An Act in addition to an act, entitled "An act for the relief of persons of tender consciences; and for preventing their being burthened with military duty", Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17*th day of April*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 207; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Wednesday in May, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 226; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 7*th day of July*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 278; At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Seventh Day of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {5-6}; AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {8}; Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 27*th day of October*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 317; An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {32-35}; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the last Monday in February, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 7; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on the second Monday in June, 1780, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 94; An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {5- 6}; An ACT in Addition to, and Amendment of, an Act, passed in October, A.D. 1779, entituled, "An Act for the better forming, regulating and conducting, the military Force of this State", At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {51}; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the fourth Monday in May, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 404-410, 412; An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {12-13}; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Tuesday, July 3d, 1781, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 438; An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {40}; Proceedings of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Monday in January, 1782, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 9, at 508.

EN-394 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 115.

EN-395 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 570.

EN-396 — [Number] 30, At a Generall Meeting upon Publicke notice, the 5th of the 9th month, 1638, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 61 (Town of Portsmouth).

EN-397 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 86; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 91; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 65.

EN-398 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 179.

EN-399 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {29}.

EN-400 — [Number] 30, At a Generall Meeting upon Publicke notice, the 5th of the 9th month, 1638, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 61 (Town of Portsmouth).

EN-401 — [Number] 20, At the Generall Courte Held at Portsmouth on the 6th of August, 1640, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 104.

EN-402 — At the Generall Court of Election held on the 16th & 17th of March, att Newport, 1642, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 121.

EN-403 — Acts and Orders Made and agreed upon at the Generall Court of Election, held at Portsmouth, in Rhode Island, the 19, 20, 21 of May, 1647, for the Colonie and Province of Providence, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 153. Continued by [Number] 7, The General Court of Commissioners held for the Collony, at Portsmouth, March the 10*th*, 1657-8, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 1, at 370-372.

EN-404 — Proceedings of a Meetinge of the Generall Assembly, May the fowerth, 1664, at Newport, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 52.

EN-405 —Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 114-115.

EN-406 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly of the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, the 25th of October, 1676, [Session of] October 27th, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 555.

EN-407 — Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 568-569.

EN-408 — An Act for the better regulating the militia, and for punishing offenders as shall not conform to the law thereunto relating, At the Generall Assembly and Election held for the Collony at Newport, the 7*th of May*, 1701, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 430-431. This statute is dated "1699" in LAWS AND ACTS OF RHODE ISLAND, AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS Made from the First Settlement in 1636 to 1705, at 92, reprinted from J.D. Cushing, Editor, The Earliest Acts and Laws of the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations (Wilmington, Delaware: M. Glazier, 1977), at 107. Reprinted from a compilation dated "1705", it appears in Military Obligation, Rhode Island, at 37.

EN-409 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held at Newport, the 6*th of May*, 1702, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 453.

EN-410 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 87-88, 90; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 93, 96; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 68, 71.

EN-411 — An Act for the more effectual putting the Colony into a proper Posture of Defence, A LAW, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, held by Adjournment, at Warwick, the Twenty Seventh Day of January, 1740, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 233.

EN-412 — An ACT ordering and appointing the Militia, or train'd Bands, in this Colony, to muster twice a Year, LAWS, Made and pass'd at a General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence-Plantations in New-England, held by Adjournment at Newport, on the fourth Tuesday of September, 1745, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1752, at 2.

EN-413 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 182, 187, 188.

EN-414 — An ACT in addition to, and amendment of, an Act entitled "An Act regulating the Militia of this Colony["], At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {151}.

EN-415 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {34}.

EN-416 — Acts and Orders of the Generall Assembly, sitting at Newport, May the 3, 1665, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 114-115.

EN-417 — At the Generall Assembly and Election held at Newport, the 6*th of May*, 1702, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 3, at 453. For the Act of 1677, which continued the Act of 1655 in this regard, see Proceedings of the Generall Assembly held for the Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations at Newport, the 1*st of May*, 1677, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 568-569.

EN-418 — An Act for enlisting one-fourth part of the militia of the colony, as minute men, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Wednesday, the 28th day of June, 1775, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 358-361.

EN-419 — An ACT for inlisting One Fourth Part of the Militia of the Colony, as Minute-Men, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Wednesday, the Twenty-eighth Day of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {78-79, 80}.

EN-420 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, the 14th day of March, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 34-35.

EN-421 — An Act for raising one-sixth part of the militia in this colony, to proceed immediately to Albany, to join the forces which have marched, to oppose the French, near Lake George, Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, on the 10th day of August, 1757, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 6, at 75-76.

EN-422 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15}.

EN-423 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 197-198.

EN-424 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Seventh Day of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {5}.

EN-425 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {8}.

EN-426 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on Monday, the 27th day of October, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 317.

EN-427 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {5-7}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {11-13}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {39-41}.

EN-428 — An ACT for inlisting One Fourth Part of the Militia of the Colony, as Minute-Men, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Wednesday, the Twenty-eighth Day of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {80}.

EN-429 — Acts, Orders and Proceedings of the Governor and Councill of His Majestys Collony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, held at Newport, May, 1667, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 2, at 192-193.

EN-430 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the first Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {6-7, 9}. Accord, An ACT for raising Six Hundred and Thirty able-bodied effective Men, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at Newport, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Third Monday in July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {28-31}.

EN-431 — An ACT for filling up and completing this State's Quota of the Continental Army, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at East-Greenwich, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [13], at {35, 37-38}.

EN-432 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17*th day of April*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 197-198.

EN-433 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Monday, the 1*st day of December,* 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 333-334.

EN-434 — An ACT for embodying and bringing into the Field Twelve Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden (by Adjournment) at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {7}. Accord, An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and no longer, and not to be marched out of the same, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {14}; and An ACT for incorporating and bringing into the Field Five Hundred able-bodied effective Men, of the Militia, to serve within this State for One Month, from the Time of their Rendezvous, and for no longer Term, and not to be marched out of the same, At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment at Newport, within and for the said State, on the Third Monday in August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {41}.

EN-435 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the Fourth Monday in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eighty-one, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 11 [14], at {32}.

EN-436 — An Act in addition to an act, entituled "An act for the relief of persons of tender consciences; and for preventing their being burthened with military duty", Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17*th day of April*, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 206-207.

EN-437 — An Act for the Repealing several Laws relating to the Militia within this Colony, and for further Regulation of the same, LAWS Made and Past by the General Assembly of His Majesties Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, begun and Held at Newport, the Seventh Day of May, 1718, and Continued by Adjournments to the Ninth Day of September following, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1719, at 89; in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1730, at 94-95; and in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 69.

EN-438 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 185.

EN-439 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {35}.

EN-440 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on the First Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [10], at {10}.

EN-441 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at South Kingstown, on Thursday, the 17th day of April, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 197-198 (emphasis supplied).

EN-442 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Newport, the 6th day of May, 1713, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 4, at 149 (emphasis supplied).

EN-443 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the first Wednesday in May, 1777, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 226.

EN-444 — An ACT for putting this Colony in a Posture of Defence, and for rend'ring the Militia in the several Towns thereof, more Useful in Time of an Actual Invasion, LAWS, Made and pass'd by the General Assembly of His Majesty's Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England; held by Adjournment, at Newport, the Twenty Second Day of May, 1744, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1744, at 289. Accord, An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 186 (monetary fine of "Twelve Pounds").

EN-445 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on Tuesday, the 10th day of December, 1776, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 67.

EN-446 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at East Greenwich, on the second Monday in September, 1779, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 8, at 595.

EN-447 — An Act for purchasing Two Thousand Arms for the Colony, &c., At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) at East-Greenwich, within and for the said Colony, on Monday the Eighteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {303, 304-305}.

EN-448 — At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Providence, within and for the said State, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15, 16}.

EN-449 — AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the STATE of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Twenty-second Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {8, 9}.

EN-450 — At the General Assembly of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Excellency the Governor) at Providence, within and for the State aforesaid, on Monday the Seventh Day of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-seven, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 9 [10], at {5, 6}.

EN-451 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {32-33}.

EN-452 — An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {32-33}.

EN-453 — E.g., An ACT establishing an Independent Company, in the County of Newport, by the Name of the Newport LIGHT-INFANTRY, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America; begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {93-97}.

EN-454 — E.g., An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144-147}.

EN-455 — E.g., An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63-65}.

EN-456 — An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honour the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63}.

EN-457 — AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-Four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {36-37}. Accord, An ACT establishing an Independent Company, in the County of Newport, by the Name of the Newport LIGHT-INFANTRY, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {94}; An ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Pawtuxet Rangers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {105}; An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {128}; An ACT for establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Train of Artillery, in the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {134}; AN ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Providence Fusiliers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {138}; An ACT establishing an Independent Company in the County of King's County, by the Name of the Kingston Reds, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {141}; An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144}; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company by the Name of the Smithfield and Cumberland RANGERS, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {16-17}.

EN-458 — An ACT establishing a Company, in the Town of Providence, to be called, and known by, the Name of the Providence Grenadier Company, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {97-98}.

EN-459 — Proceedings of the General Assembly, held for the Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at Providence, on the last Wednesday in October, 1774, in Rhode Island Records, Volume 7, at 257-258.

EN-460 — An ACT, regulating the Militia in this Colony, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 189-190. This Act was part of An ACT, establishing the Revisement of the Laws of this Colony, and for the putting the same in Force, in A LAW, Made and passed at the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, held at Providence on the First Monday in December, 1766, in Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1767, at 3-5.

EN-461 —An ACT for the better forming, regulating and conducting the military Force of this State, AT the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the State of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, begun and holden at South-Kingstown, within and for the State aforesaid, on the last Monday in October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-nine, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 10 [12], at {38}.

EN-462 — An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {130}.

EN-463 — An ACT for establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Train of Artillery, in the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {136}. Accord, AN ACT incorporating a Military Company, by the Name of the North-Providence Rangers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {147}.

EN-464 — AN ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Providence Fusiliers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {141}.

EN-465 — AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-Four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {36}. Accord, An ACT establishing an Independent Company, in the County of Newport, by the Name of the Newport LIGHT-INFANTRY, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {93-94}; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Kentish Guards, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {101}; An ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Pawtuxet Rangers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {104}; An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {127-128}; AN ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Providence Fusiliers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {138}; An ACT for establishing an Independent Company in the County of King's County, by the Name of the Kingston Reds, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {141}; An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144}; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company by the Name of the Smithfield and Cumberland RANGERS, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15}.

EN-466 — An ACT for establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Train of Artillery, in the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {133}.

EN-467 — AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Company of Light-Infantry, of the Town of Gloucester, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {121-122}.

EN-468 — An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honour the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63}. Accord, An ACT for establishing an Independent Company in the County of King's County, by the Name of the Kingston Reds, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {141}.

EN-469 — AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-Four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {36}. Accord, An ACT establishing an Independent Company, in the County of Newport, by the Name of the Newport LIGHT-INFANTRY, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {94}; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Kentish Guards, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {102}; An ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Pawtuxet Rangers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {105}; An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {128}; An ACT for establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Train of Artillery, in the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {134}; AN ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Providence Fusiliers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {138}; An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144}; AN ACT establishing an Independent Company by the Name of the Smithfield and Cumberland RANGERS, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {16}.

EN-470 — An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honour the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63} (25 named men); At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England, in AMERICA; begun and held by Adjournment at South-Kingstown, upon the last Monday in February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-Six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {66} (30 named men); AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of The Light-Infantry for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, by Adjournment, at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the Second Monday in June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-Four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {36} (16 named men); An ACT establishing an Independent Company, in the County of Newport, by the Name of the Newport LIGHT-INFANTRY, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {94} (40 named men); An ACT establishing a Company, in the Town of Providence, to be called, and known by, the Name of the Providence Grenadier Company, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {97} (2 named men and other unnamed "Freemen, and Inhabitants, of the Town of Providence"); AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Kentish Guards, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {101} (38 named men); An ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Pawtuxet Rangers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {104-105} (50 named men); AN ACT establishing an Independent Company, by the Name of the Company of Light-Infantry, of the Town of Gloucester, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the last Wednesday in October, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {122} (14 named men); An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {128} (28 named men); An ACT for establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Train of Artillery, in the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {133} (7 named men); AN ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Providence Fusiliers, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {138} (17 named men); An ACT for establishing an Independent Company in the County of King's County, by the Name of the Kingston Reds, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {141} (31 named men); An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144} (18 named men); AN ACT establishing an Independent Company by the Name of the Smithfield and Cumberland RANGERS, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden at Newport, within and for the said Colony, on the First Wednesday in May, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-six, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 8 [9], at {15-16} (93 named individuals).

EN-471 — An ACT establishing a Military Company, by the Name of the Scituate Hunters, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden, in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Governor, at Providence, within and for the said Colony, on the First Monday in December, One Thousand, Seven Hundred and Seventy-four, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7, at {128}. Accord, An ACT establishing an Independent Troop of Horse in the County of Providence, by the Name of the Captain-General's Cavaliers for the County of Providence, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the GOVERNOR and COMPANY of the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New-England, in America, begun and holden (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honor the Deputy-Governor) at Providence, within and for the Colony aforesaid, on Tuesday, the Thirty-first Day of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 7 [8], at {144}.

EN-472 — An ACT for erecting an ARTILLERY COMPANY in the Towns of Westerly and Charlestown, At the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode-Island, and Providence-Plantations, in New-England in AMERICA; begun (in Consequence of Warrants issued by his Honour the Governor) and held at Providence, on Wednesday the first of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifty-five, in Rhode Island Acts and Resolves, Volume 2, at {63}.

